Moderate catches

MODERATE catches have been reported by the Fisheries Department in the first week of the Loligo squid season which began on February 24.

Director of Fisheries John Barton also told Penguin News that the Illex season, "has yet to get going although there are some low catches being reported."

The total for jigger licences is 99, plus one trawler on an Illex licence making it 100. Two jiggers have yet to collect their licences.

This week Fisheries Observer Graham Parker gave a public talk on the work he has been undertaking for the last two years on seabird and fishery interactions. This reviewed FIG and the Falklands fishing industry's work in developing methods to reduce seabird mortalities in the trawl fishery. The Falklands has been at the forefront of conducting work on reducing seabird mortalities.

Team Rat near base camp

PROJECT Director Tony Martin reports that on Monday the rat eradication team on South Georgia were just two days away from establishing their first base camp as Husvik.

'Team Rat' had arrived in South Georgia in fine weather ten days earlier on the RRS Ernest Shackleton, which allowed the unloading of the team's three helicopters. However desperately poor weather during the first week of depot-laying resulted in the ship and the helicopters becoming separated for five days by fog, low cloud, snow and rain as well as a substantial glaciated mountain range. In the absence of the helicopters, the ship's tender was pressed into service to carry drummed fuel and bait pods ashore to what was to become the forward operating base at Peggotty Bluff.

Voting statistics

A TOTAL of 1,672 individuals are eligible to vote in the referendum due to their inclusion on the electoral roll. The majority of those reside in Stanley (1,390), 141 on East Falklands, 87 on West Falklands and 54 on small islands.

Falklands prepares for press invasion

THE Falklands March 11/12 referendum on the political future of the Islands has attracted a surprising amount of interest from the world press with sixty television, newspaper and radio journalists arriving primarily on next Saturday's LAN flight.

Groups from Chile, the USA, Colombia, Spain, Czechoslovakia, Argentina, the UK, Panama, Brazil and Japan will fill up hotel and bed & breakfast accommodation, with a small number staying in privately owned houses.

Public Relations and Media Manager FIG Darren Christie told Penguin News: "Visiting press are being managed by myself and Sharon Jaffray in the PR and Media Office. We are doing our best to minimise any disruption over the referendum period. This is a very important time for the Islands, and with so many visiting media I ask for everyone's patience and assistance in making sure the press leave with the best possible impression of the Islands."

Press groups include El Mercurio, The New York Times, Sky, Aljazeera, ITN, BBC, The Telegraph and The Sun, along with Argentine newspapers Clarin and La Nacion.

Writing for the latter and also arriving next week is Argentine highly-laurelled academic Beatriz Sarlo, one of 17 intellectuals who contributed to the controversial 'Alternative View' document on the Falkland Islands in February 2012 in support of the Falkland Islanders right to self-determination. The group also criticised the constant harassment to which Islanders are exposed from the Argentine administration under Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner.

Ms Sarlo and her colleagues faced a barrage of disapproval and even death threats for their opinions. Along with TV journalist Jorge Lanata and two other contributors, MS Sarlo appeared on a cover of the tabloid La Crónica headlined "In favour of the pirates," however, two months later the group criticised the Argentine Government for having chosen April 2 as the Day of the Veterans and the Fallen from the 1982 war, suggesting that such a commemoration was ambiguous and appeared to support the war.

FITB and Sullivan Shipping Miami bound

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board along with Sullivan Shipping will represent the Falkland Islands next week at the Miami Cruise Shipping, SeaTrade event. Managing Director of the Falkland Islands Tourist Board Tony Mason, will attend this year's event along with Sullivan Shipping Tourism Co-ordinator Sammy Marsh.

Mr Mason said, "We are excited about attending this year's event; especially on the back of a turbulent season."

Cruise Shipping Miami offers us the opportunity to be part of the industry's most authoritative professional showcase and make valuable contacts and develop relationships within the industry's most influential community.

"This event will attract a broad range of industry players and deliver the audience we are looking for: cruise and expedition companies, cruise industry buyers and decision makers."

We are also looking forward to meeting with potential investors interested in unlocking business potential across all sectors in the Falkland Islands."

Tony commented that the next few years, "are crucial to our development and plans and participation in events like this are essential to our growth and recognition as a tourism destination."

He added that the Tourist Board along with Sullivan Shipping will attend VIP events with the industries leaders in the tourism sector.

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

NEXT week, when the LAN flight arrives at Mount Pleasant, it will bring with it an invasion force of a kind which we have become used to in recent years. Fortunately, it will not be necessary to disturb the weekend of the military garrison to fight them off, because these expected invaders are journalists and will be armed with cameras and questions rather than guns.

We are used to this. Last year, the commemoration of the 30th anniversary of the war here, together with the deployment to the Falklands of air-sea rescue helicopter pilot, Flight Lieutenant Wales (aka Prince William) brought a flurry of visiting journalists to these shores from all over the world.

The Prince's presence, coupled with the much later arrival in these waters on routine duties of the Royal Navy's most modern warship, prompted hysterical statements from the Casa Rosada in Buenos Aires about the British militarisation of the South Atlantic. These woefully ill-informed accusations from the President of a country which subjected us to its own military might in 1982, brought forth more journalists, together with endless calls from radio stations in Argentina.

The focus of the current journalistic interest is, of course, the referendum on March 10 and 11. The purpose of this piece is not to harangue our readers about how important their vote is, (though it is - and a high turn-out is almost as important as a 'yes' vote) but the amount of international interest shown in the referendum should be enough to persuade even the most sceptical of its significance for our future.

This new media invasion is yet another marvellous public relations opportunity, in which all of us should be prepared to 'bite the bullet' and lend a hand by answering journalists' questions, if asked. You don't need to be a political pundit. I sometimes feel that the most difficult thing to get across is that we are ordinary people with ordinary concerns who would just like to be able to get on with our lives in peace. Except for those of us who are professionally obliged to concentrate on such things, I suspect that most people in the Falklands are more concerned about their health, the weather, the outrageous price of vegetables and a host of other things, than they are about the outbursts of Argentina's unpredictable President and her lackeys.

The whole Falklands political situation sometimes seems to lack perspective, particularly the human perspective. You can help supply it.

CHILDREN from Goose Green, North Arm and Mount Pleasant visited Mount Pleasant International Airport on February 20 to learn how an airport works.

They were able to put their items through the security X-Ray machine, have their classroom-made passports stamped and reclaim their own baggage off the arrivals hall carousel as well as being given a guided tour of various aircraft.

Flight Lieutenant Karl Wright, OC Air Movements Flight said, "It is great that we have had the opportunity to show local school children how an airport works and to give them a better understanding of the way we help move people and supplies to and from the Islands."

"The children all seemed to enjoy themselves and I look forward to seeing them fly through the terminal some time in the future."

Plans for 2013 tourism awards

This year's event will celebrate the success of local businesses, as well as including categories for companies outside of the Falkland Islands, which have supported FITB during the season.

FITB will publish a voting form in Penguin News which should be filled out and either mailed to the Tourist Board or dropped off during normal business hours.

More information on the event, as well as information on booking tickets, will be published in next week's Penguin News.

Encouraging start in south untested zone

IN his report on offshore oil exploration activities, to the Mineral resources Committee on Wednesday, Director of Mineral Resources, Stephen Luxton, described the recent four-well drilling campaign in the South Falkland Basin as an "encouraging start."

The Darwin condensate discovery and the Loligo gas discovery represented, he said, "an outstanding success in a previously almost untested basin." The data from the campaign would greatly inform future work to the south of the Falklands.

It was noted that the licensees had already stated their intention of arranging a further drilling campaign to the south and east of the Islands with a target date of late 2014.

Mr Luxton noted also that what he described as, "two state of the art seismic survey vessels," the Ramform Sterling and the Ramform Challenger were currently performing large seismic surveys.

The meeting was informed that the base assumption for the socio-economic study being carried out by consultants Regeneris was that there would be three oil rigs in operation by 2015.

A principal focus of the meeting, which was chaired by MLA Ian Cheek, was the report by the Director of Mineral Resources on the fact-finding visits to Norway and Shetland made by members of the Falkland Islands Government (FIG) Corporate Management Team, and MLAs Elsie and Sawle, in December 2012.

The FIG group had meetings in Norway with a wide range of national and local government departments as well as representatives of private sector companies involved in the oil industry. They visited the capital Oslo and also Stavanger, which is described as Norway's Aberdeen. Hammerfest, a remote town of about 10,000 people, provided valuable insights into the effect of oil development on a small community.

The Shetland component of the trip included meetings with the Shetland Islands Council, and a number of other agencies and authorities. Visits were also made to the Sullom Voe Oil Terminal and the Scatsta heliport which is one of the primary crew change facilities serving the North Sea offshore rigs.

Commenting on the openness of the Norwegian authorities and their willingness to share the benefits of their considerable experience, the Director of Mineral Resources said that this had been, "considerably more than a useful visit." Chief Executive, Keith Padgett, said that it was hoped that a reciprocal visit could be arranged for some time in the future to build on the relationships developed in Norway.

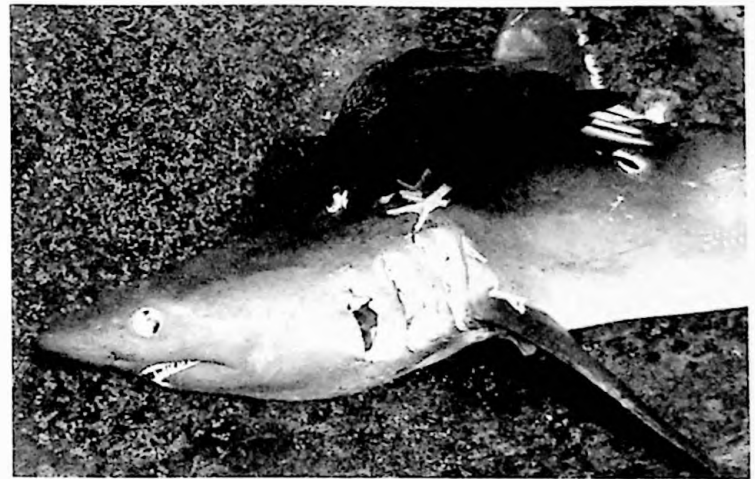

Rare shark find on New Island

AN unusual creature was found washed up on the eastern shore of New Island on the weekend, island resident and photographer Georgina Strange told Penguin News.

A Porbeagle shark (Lamna nasus), rarely seen in the Falklands and globally threatened due to commercial fishing, was found dead on the rocks near the settlement.

Porbeagle sharks are found in both the Southern and Northern hemispheres, travelling large distances. Extremely vulnerable to overfishing due to their slow growth and reproduction, Porbeagles are among the most prized sharks on the market for their meat, as well as for their fins and for some medicinal purposes.

Georgina said: "This individual measured 2.1m in length; a relatively large shark. There were no obvious signs of death and the shark didn't appear to have been injured. The last record of a Porbeagle shark found on the shores of the Falklands was on West Point Island in 1984."

ROSS house students at the Falkland Islands Community School have created a collection of native species gardens thanks to the Small Grant Scheme offered by Falklands Conservation.

Each box contains plants native to the Falklands and are grouped together as they would be found in the wild. "There's marsh, shrubland and coastal sections," said Science Teacher Jon Carlin.

"The garden is as an educational aid. Teachers are encouraged to make their lessons as focussed on the Falklands as they can and Falklands Conservation were kind enough to back the project," he explained.

All of the plants were purchased from Stanley Growers who stock their shelves with native grasses, berries, bushes and flowers propagated from Falklands Conservation's seed project. Proving the persistence of invasive species a sample of sheep sorrel, a tiny red plant widespread in the Falklands, made it on to the list of native plants accidentally.

CEO of Falklands Conservation James Fenton spoke to the students on the importance of promoting native species and the interesting differences that make the Falkland environment unique.

The Falklands Conservation grant scheme has a limited amount of funding but can offer suitable projects up to £1000 said Mr Fenton.

Invasive investigation with Camp Ed and FICS

TWELVE children from Camp Education years three to six and four members of staff had a very special opportunity last week, February 18 - 22, to visit the third largest island in the Falklands, Weddell.

The scheme was funded by Falklands Island Government (Environmental Studies Budget - ESB - related to bio-diversity strategy priorities) as an environmental education project investigating invasive species on the Island, specifically orange hawkweed.

The aim of the study is to promote environmental awareness by highlighting the issues surrounding invasive species impact on the Falklands natural habitats, and to educate future generations about the importance of protecting the environment.

The group were random sampling paddocks around the settlement at Weddell to monitor the quantity and distribution of orange hawkweed. Using the gathered data the group mapped their results and produced scientific reports with botanical drawings.

Hosts Martin and Jane Beaton ensured the trip was a great success by providing catering, expert knowledge, "and a sense of fun," said teacher Linda Flinders.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

IT IS important to clarify the position taken by most members of this Assembly regarding our representation on the Minerals Committee. The Committee receives highly confidential and sensitive information on technical and commercial matters relating to oil companies. To give total transparency and protect FIG and individual MLAs from any hint of impropriety we agreed that members of the Committee, both MLAs and officers, should not hold shares in the oil companies. MLA Elsbey was told this when offered the opportunity to take the Chair and informed other MLAs when asked some weeks later that he had disposed of his holding. It was therefore a surprise when a year or so on, after publication of the January FIG Gazette which included the list of members' interests it was brought to our notice that he still held shares.

The register of members' interests is held in Gilbert House and may, I believe, be inspected at any time. The contents are updated and published annually. Members are expected to update the register when their interests change. There are a number of specific categories for things like directorships, shareholdings and gifts and hospitality received. In addition, Section 10 covers any interests not explicit in the other categories but which might be thought to possibly influence decision making. Members also declare specific interests in meetings if appropriate, and if their interest is clearly a direct commercial one they may often leave the room for the discussion of that item. My advice to future members would be if in doubt declare your interest; better to declare too often than omit a declaration you should have made. I try to follow the spirit, not just the letter of the relevant code of conduct.

Family interests are very complex. Many of us would declare an interest if there was any detailed discussion of the funding or management of the department or section in FIG in which adult offspring are employed. Recently a member withdrew from the discussion of the mode of disposal of Sapper Hill plots because a close family member may be looking to purchase one.

Museum building grows like a mushroom

AS this photograph through our window shows, there has been no shortage of welcome distractions in the Penguin News office during the last few weeks. Construction of the Diamond Jubilee Building, which with the historic Central Store will eventually provide a brand new home for the museum, is steaming ahead.

Squashing in seven continents

HARD on the departure from the Falklands of New Zealand runner Mike Allsop, who had just run the first of a planned seven marathons in seven days, came the news that, former squash internationals Peter Nicol MBE and Tim Garner will contest seven matches in seven days on seven continents to help raise the profile of squash's campaign to join the programme of the 2020 Olympic Games.

After playing in the Falklands on April 13, the pair will play in Santiago, Sydney, Kuala Lumpur, Cairo and London before ending up in New York on April 20. Due to the international date line, they will lose April 15 altogether, as they fly between Chile and Australia.

Peter Nicol MBE is one of the highest profile players in recent history having won over 50 PSA World Tour titles, including every major title World & British Opens and four Commonwealth gold medals. He was ranked Number One in the World for an incredible 60 months.

Tim Garner is a former World Number 26 squash player and played on the PSA World Tour for over 10 years after graduating from Loughborough University.

SEASONAL WORKERS ACCOMMODATION

Falkland Islands Meat Co is seeking expressions of interest from interested parties for the provision of self-catering type accommodation for its seasonal workforce in Stanley.

There are a number of ways this may be achieved, and FIMCo is keen to consider the options in the near future, with a view to having the accommodation available from end December 2013.

The requirement is for approx 35-40 spaces at present, from January through to end April/early May each year, and is expected to increase slightly in coming years. FIMCo would be willing to enter a 5yr agreement or so, to provide some security and commitment with the right partner.

Bank moves to bin paper

STANDARD Chartered Bank customers in the Falkland Islands will soon be given the option of receiving their statements electronically. Manager Binoy Karia, announced this week.

This service, free to both personal and business account holders, is part of a number of technological solutions mentioned by the bank in last year's circular on the tariff review and represents what Mr Karia described as, "the start of a journey," for bank customers, which also, in accord with Standard Chartered's global environmental agenda, is aimed at reducing the bank's current high consumption of paper.

By the end of this month, all of the bank's customers in the Islands should have received a registration form in the post, which will need to be completed if customers wish to take up the 'no paper' option.

The E-statements will be password protected and sent only to nominated email addresses. They can be ordered at whatever frequency the customer requires, even daily if necessary, as well as being sent separately to individuals sharing joint accounts.

Borders & Southern go 3D seismic

AIM-listed oil and gas exploration company Borders & Southern Petroleum has reported that the PGS vessel Ramform Challenger has commenced the company's 3D seismic programme in the South Falkland Basin.

Located approximately 140km south of the Falkland Islands and covering an area in excess of 1,000 square kilometres, the survey is situated in an area known as 'Quad 61', which is adjacent to the company's 2007/2008 3D survey.

Borders & Southern Petroleum anticipates that acquisition will take approximately six weeks to complete.

The company reported that the 3D programme has been designed to, "evaluate a number of fault/dip closed structures similar to the Darwin discovery, tracking the high quality shallow marine sands that comprise the Darwin reservoir."

Additional objectives are to further investigate the Early Cretaceous slope fan system and to identify new prospects in areas where current data coverage is low, the company added.

The company operates and has a 100% interest in three production licences in the South Falkland Basin covering an area of nearly 10,000 square kilometres.

Professional integrity?

WHILE looking at the FITV News DVD for January 25 which I bought for personal reasons, I also came across an interview with the Director of Health and Social Services, and the Headteacher of FICS.

The issues under discussion were the departure of the Director of Health & Education from Education, and the appointment of the FICS Head Teacher to that of the dual role as Deputy Director of Education. In the light of developments since the making of this programme, if you did not laugh, you would weep. I offer the following quotations from those interviews.

FICS Headteacher:

"In the first instance, I am looking to continue to improve the provision, the educational provision within the islands. I am looking forward to ensuring that strategy planning is really focused on the medium and long term as well as the short term and, of course, ensuring a smooth transition..... With regard to my role, in the interim, it will be to provide professional leadership and strategic development for the Department... until a full-time Director can be recruited."

Director of Health & Social Services: "I've got rid of education, and am now just concentrating on Health and Social Services. Obviously, with Health there are lots of strategic issues that I need to take forward..... I'm really looking forward to the challenges." Really up for it!

Unbelievably, within TWO weeks of this interview, the Director of Health and Social Services had resigned, at a time when the Manager of the hospital is also on the point of departure. At the same time, the word on the street was that the Head teacher of FICS was also leaving en route to a new appointment in Dubai. While the Dubai element may be hearsay, that the FICS Headteacher has resigned is not. If the Headteacher of FICS is indeed moving on to a new appointment, two weeks is a miraculous time frame in which to apply for and be appointed to a new post, so it must have been with a

Dead in the water

THE Labour Party's candidate for the Eastleigh by-election applauded the 1984 Brighton bombing and hoped that Argentina would win the Falklands War. Ed Miliband has endorsed candidate John O'Farrell.

An Argentine victory in 1982 would have meant the defeat of British forces. It follows that Eastleigh's Labour candidate was unconcerned that an Argentine victory would have meant many more British servicemen dead and the loss of still more ships and aircraft, let alone the loss of the Falkland Islands to a criminal regime. Happily, I survived war in the South Atlantic but I will be pleased to hear that O'Farrell's political career is dead in the water.

Voting for our grandchildren

WE are not voting for ourselves March 10/11th - we are voting for our grandchildren and the citizens and generations yet to come - so they have the right and freedom we do - the right of free choice to determine their future. Not so much just to be British or Islanders - but for our rights as a people.

We know what most of us want - but this is our chance to show the world what we want and are entitled to - freedom to determine our own future. That is why everyone on the electoral roll must vote.

A few may wish to vote option 2 - that is their democratic free right - but remember - the country you would be voting for, openly states it would never allow you that right.

But all must get out and vote A poor turnout - even with a thumping majority - will be laughed at by the entire world - that is a simple fact.

Anything less than 85 per cent turnout of electors, would result in less than half the total Islands population - and that would be the percentage figure our enemy would seize on.

So all on the electoral roll must vote if you can. If you don't then you are showing a level of indifference in your and your country's future to the extent that one assumes you must probably be intending to emigrate anyway.

Why Bittersweet resistance?

I VISITED 'Bittersweet' on John Street for the first time last week, and was fortunate enough that it was on the private invitation evening that Marc Block was performing live with acoustic (non-amplified) instruments. I have to say that I thoroughly enjoyed an evening of fine entertainment and the ability to see it live, comfortably and with a bottle of wine and the chocolate was a massive bonus too. I was surprised to learn since that there seems to be some resistance to this fantastic initiative, from the planning authorities, in that they don't feel we need such an establishment. Can I just say that had they done a bit of field research it's clear how popular this was and will be if allowed to continue. We need to be building up our social amenities, and to be honest this section of John Street is well placed and well served and perhaps it can become our restaurant and pub sector. Perhaps with more encouragement of private enterprise and maybe some better street lighting it's infinitely more achievable than the rather grandiose ideas for the seafront, and if that happens it will still be in a good position to add to the whole attraction.

Yes to self determination

IN a few weeks the world will be watching as we hold our historic referendum. The freedom to determine our own future is a right which was restored by those brave men in 1982 who liberated us. We owe it not only to ourselves but them too, to make sure every Islander who is eligible will cast a vote. I hope that any students who are studying in the UK have organised their proxy votes if they are not in the Islands over the referendum days.

With reference to Bill Chater's letter last week, I agree with him on all points apart from one. A YES vote will ensure we stay as a self-governing British Overseas Territory which also guarantees our right to self determination. This means that for those who are considering independence, a YES vote can still meet your needs as by staying as we are we can discuss any further status changes at a later date. It does concern me when I hear Islanders such as your deputy editor, John Fowler, speak of independence to British and foreign news agencies. In some cases this minority view makes it sound like we are only British because we need them for defence which is absolutely not true. We enjoy our close ties with Britain for many reasons and I personally hope we remain British forever.

The most important thing right now is that we send a real clear message to the world that we want to remain as we are. This can only be done by an overwhelming YES vote and a high turnout.

If a country believes in freedom, democracy and self determination, they will listen to our voices.

FALKLANDS FISH FARMING LIMITED

JOB VACANCY

An exciting opportunity to become involved in the aquaculture of Toothfish here in the Falkland Islands.

Falklands Fish Farming Ltd is seeking to employ a person as an Aquaculture Hatchery Assistant commencing work as soon as possible. The employment will be full time with some weekend work.

The job will provide an entry point into a globally expanding employment sector.

Ideally the successful applicant will have an interest in fish farming and some previous experience in working in a fish farm. However, the position is also suitable for someone new to fish farming.

The work will involve a wide range of tasks in connection with the husbandry of the company's brood stock and facilities as well as hatchery techniques for fish eggs, larval and fry stages. The job also requires a range of skills in general 'handyman work' such as carpentry, plumbing and construction. The applicant will also have to be in good health and physically fit.

Training will be provided (some overseas training has been provided in the past) and the successful applicant will be in a good position to move with the company as it expands to a commercial operation in the future.

For further information please contact Paul Howes on 52346, or email fff@cwimail.fk

Applications should be received by close of business Monday 11th March 2013.

Referendum details

The referendum about whether or not Falkland Islanders wish the Falkland Islands to maintain their current status as an overseas territory of the United Kingdom is now just over a week away.

The world will be watching the referendum and there will be international observers here to ensure that the referendum is free and fair.

We are making some small but important changes to the way we carry out the referendum to make sure that the process is, and is seen by the world to be, demonstrably fair and open.

To achieve that, the ballot paper will not have any serial number or any individually identifying marks on it; the only mark on it will be the official seal. This ensures there can be no suggestion that voting may be influenced by the possibility, however remote, that a vote could be linked back to the person casting the vote.

Also, to minimise the risk of a person being able to vote more than once, voters will be allocated a polling station (either static or mobile) at which they will be expected to vote (this will be based on the address which they are currently registered at). In practice this will not affect most people, who will simply vote at the place they have always done. However, if the allocated polling station is not a convenient place to vote, the voter can let us know, and arrangements will be made for them to vote at another polling station.

Each voter will have been sent a letter which told them which polling station they have been allocated to vote at. Don't worry if you will not be staying at that address during the referendum and want to vote somewhere else - simply contact the Registry and let the Registrar General know where you will be during the referendum and you will be allocated the most convenient polling station instead.

If, on the day, you cannot get to your allocated polling station - don't worry - you will still be able to vote at any polling station - but there may be a short delay while the polling staff ensure that the allocated polling station knows you have voted.

If you have any questions about the referendum procedures and voting please contact the Registrar General on email at registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk or telephone 27269.

Do you wish the Falkland Islands to retain their current political status as an Overseas Territory of the United Kingdom

Penguin News examines in simple terms the consequences of a yes or no vote in the March 10/11 referendum on the political future of the Falkland Islands

What happens

YES

- The Falkland Islands Government will tell the British Government we wish for the Falkland Islands to remain a British Overseas Territory

- At any point in the future the Falklands can review its status. The yes vote still allows full independence or any other status that we choose to be an option for the future

- If the yes vote wins but is not overwhelming it will be noted that a proportion of us are unhappy with the status quo; this will lend support to Argentine arguments to the United Nations

What happens

NO

- Islanders will have made it clear they do not wish to remain a British Overseas Territory

- The Falkland Islands Government will be obliged to consult us about what other options we might favour

- After a short time these other options will be the subject of another referendum

- A substantial no vote would encourage the Argentine Government's sovereignty claim

- This means a large no vote would weaken our chances of attaining more independence some day

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE UK AND THE FALKLAND ISLANDS, AS WITH ALL ITS OVERSEAS TERRITORIES, IS BASED ON THE PRINCIPLES OF SELF DETERMINATION AND AUTONOMY WHILE RECOGNISING MUTUAL RESPONSIBILITY AND A PLEDGE OF UK SUPPORT WHEN NEEDED. Super Stanley gardens despite summer

THE Horticultural Society Stanley Gardens Competition was held on Saturday February 23 and as a result of a radio appeal by Horticultural Society President Tim Miller, twenty-one entries were achieved.

The society was delighted with the amount of entries and send thanks to all entrants and judges for participating in the competition, "despite the dreadful weather this summer, as the competition was almost cancelled due to lack of entries," Nikki Buxton told Penguin News.

She said the gardens were judged on visual impact, layout, neatness, lack of weeds, condition of plants, and variety of plants.

The design of the flower gardens impressed the judges; from Alison Howe's use of driftwood, stone and containers to highlight her flowers, Susan Whitney's sheltered flower beds, to Shirley Richard's use of space and light.

The Falkland Islands Community School students' impressive start to their 'Falkland's flora' flower garden should be an inspiration for other novice gardeners.

The students will be receiving a special certificate of commendation from the Society for their efforts.

The vegetable gardens were of a high quality, with Mike and Sue Morrison's taking the top prize. The judges felt that their method of blending flower beds, vegetables and fruit throughout the garden was very effective.

Neil Ford's traditional garden in an original Pioneer house was a close second, with a variety of plants, all in outstanding condition.

Joint third Derek Howatt and Billy Morrison also impressed the judges with their traditional Falkland-style gardens, protected from the wind and weather by fencing and strategic placement. The gardens in the Highly Commended category all showed considerable effort by the participants, especially Clara McKay's marvellous cherries, Joost Pompert's use of the old stone-lined, sunken beds in the Sullivan House gardens, and Maria Biggs' tidy hilltop garden.

The polytunnel category is growing each year, as an increasing number of households are gardening under net and plastic to combat the wind.

Second prize winner Kenneth 'Carrot' Morrison's entire vegetable garden is under cover, in a series of net tunnels and polytunnels, allowing him to grow everything from delicate blackberries to hardy cabbages out of the weather.

The judges remarked at how the new net tunnels appear to be especially effective for growing potatoes and brassicas, and are a relatively inexpensive option for aspiring gardeners.

Nikki told Penguin News: "The Flower, Vegetable, Home Produce and Garden Show will be taking place on Sunday March 3 in the Cathedral Parish Hall."

To enter your flowers, houseplants, vegetables, fruit, home produce or baking, bring your exhibits to the Cathedral Parish Hall from 5pm to 8pm on Saturday March 2. You are not limited to one entry per class - enter as many classes and items as you like. The Show will be open to the public from 3pm on the Sunday. Prize-giving will be held at 5pm, the Cathedral Harvest Festival Service at 6pm, with the raffle draw and auction of produce at approximately 7pm, after the service.

Please contact Tim (21498

Top days for Tim at Goose Green

East Sports horse racing 2013

THE Darwin Harbour Sports Association can give itself a pat on the back for an excellent two days horse racing last weekend at the beginning of the East Sports Week, with the added blessing that the sun shone both days.

A high turn-out of horses and jockeys provided an excellent spectacle for an enthusiastic crowd of punters, and the bigger range of horses meant not everyone could immediately guess every outcome, although it came as no surprise that hard-working jockey Tim Bonner claimed the ultimate accolade of Champion Jockey.

With a good sixteen prizes under his belt Tim's first places were picked up on the back of the always impressive Zafonic in the Standard Chartered Chase, Owners Up and Cantera Open Challenge, and an equal number on the young Rock of Gibraltar; a maiden plater at the 2011 Stanley Sports Meeting. The lively Venus also rewarded him with a triumph in The Silver Cup.

Chasing Tim's tally and claiming the Governor's Cup on Maurice Davis' constant champion Dashing Dancer in an impressively smooth style, Arthur Turner also took the FIC Cup, the Lafonia Plate and the Ronnie Morrison Champion Cup on the same mount. Arthur will have been particularly delighted with his maiden plater (owner Sophia Davis) the tall, dark and attractive Shakita, who while only claiming third in her first race came back to take a first in the Bowles Trophy.

Always popular with the crowd and a gentleman on the course, veteran jockey Ron Binnie on the photogenic Southern Dancer claimed the Java Battery, the Port San Carlos Prize and the FIB 400 Yards.

Following in his footsteps Ron's grandsons Duane and Kyran Evans were also more than noticeably present, picking up an armful of prizes. Duane's Destiny caused great excitement taking the Cable & Wireless FIB, the Stanley Services Stakes and the Fitzroy Cup while Kyran took first place in a young jockey's race on Venus.

Possibly one of the most popular races due to none of the animals having been raced ever before on a Falklands race course, the Maiden Plate was as exciting as ever.

Returning to the course after a break of many years Tyrone Whitney was this year's winner on Golden Dancer. Tyrone was described to the author by one former jockey as, "a laid back guy with an electric backside when it comes to getting the best out of his horses."

Skilled ladies Elaine Turner and Denise McPhee, refused to stay in the shadows with Denise taking the Triangle Y Chase on Red Dawn and Elaine the Ladies Gallop on her 'bestie mate' Serendipity.

Happily for the future of Falklands racing, Goose Green attracted quite a group of up and coming young jockeys. Petra Gilding triumphed in the Teenagers Chase on Tryone's Celtic Swing while her twin sister Amy claimed the Maiden Trot on Tracey Macaskill's Mood Shadow, the Armed Forces Trot (changed to a local race due to the lack of armed forces entries) the Ladies Trot and the Open Trot on Bob Short's incredibly fast paced trotter Apache.

Little Holly Kirkham and Talia Jones caused more than a few smiles with their cheerful and confident approach to riding. Holly won the children's trotting races and the Potato Race on Sage with never far behind, tiny Talia, winning the red rosette for the Bending Race on So Bold.

Recreating Shackleton's epic and putting the awe back in awesome

SIX men, who arrived back in the Falklands from South Georgia last week can truly be said to have given back their original meaning to two of the English language's most over-used words: their journey, was 'epic' and their achievement truly 'awesome.'

Other groups in the past have recreated elements of the famous 1916 escape from the Antarctic made by the explorer Ernest Shackleton and his crew, but this was the first time that both the small boat journey and the crossing of South Georgia had been accomplished by a group which tried, as far as possible, to replicate the conditions of the original events.

To this end, the Anglo-Australian Shackleton Epic Group, led by veteran adventurer Tim Jarvis, not only wore exactly the same clothes as Shackleton and his men in 1916, but also relied on the authentic but limited equipment of the era.

Possibly the only real departure from an authenticity, which even extended to the use of candles and a miners' lamp as the only light source aboard the Alexandra Shackleton was with regard to the adventurers' diet. So as not to upset modern sensibilities, the crew were not allowed to supplement their diet with seal meat or maybe the occasional penguin, though they did confine themselves to roughly the same amount of calories per day from very basic 'compo' rations cooked on a cantankerous primus.

During the twelve-days that the team spent in the cramped and wet conditions of the Alexandra Shackleton, an exact replica of the 6.9m long James Caird - one of the three small boats in which Shackleton's crew reached South Georgia after their ship, Endurance was crushed by ice - the navigator had to rely only on a compass, a sextant and a chronometer to find his way over 800 nautical miles of treacherous Southern Ocean to South Georgia.

Worsley's finding South Georgia, in the James Caird in 1916 has long been regarded as one of the outstanding feats of navigation, but this time the aim was even more specific. Not only did South Georgia have to be found, but also the exact spot from which Shackleton's overland traverse began.

Fortunately, the expedition's navigator was sailing legend, Paul Larsen, who had just come from setting the world speed-sailing record. Relying on dead-reckoning and experience and despite minimum visibility, which allowed only one noon sighting the day before they arrived, he and equally experienced skipper, Nick Bubb, finally brought the team to Peggotty Bluff in King Haaken

Bay. As one of the team told Penguin News, "We could have been a hundred miles short or a hundred miles further on, if the dead-reckoning wasn't as accurate."

Due to the perpetually damp conditions below deck on the Alexandra Shackleton and the inadequacy of the team's leather boots, by the time South Georgia was reached trench foot had taken its toll of all on board. This painful condition suffered by many British troops in the Falklands in 1982, began to make itself felt as the team waited several days for a break in the weather to enable them to begin the overland traverse. At the end of this period - described by the men as a low point - there were only three men left fit to attempt the mountainous crossing: leader Tim Jarvis, Royal Marine Mountain Leader Barry Gray and navigator Paul Larsen. Like the three members of Shackleton's expedition who did the crossing before them, they were equipped with improvised crampons, a ship-wright's adze, a coil of rope and a compass.

Speaking to this trio shortly after their arrival in Stanley, they admit that the crossing was harder than expected, but it became obvious that during the whole expedition the real challenges for the team were as much mental as physical, probably even more so than for the members of Shackleton's crew in 1916.

Unlike Shackleton and his men, who were dressed in woollen jerseys and canvas smocks because that was what they were used to, the Epic group were aware of how much more comfortable and safer they might have been had they been dressed in modern high-tech gear and using state-of-the-art modern equipment.

By the time that Shackleton made the decision to leave the stricken Endurance, he and his crew had spent two years together and been welded together under Shackleton's inspired leadership into a cohesive unit, willing to work to the ends of their endurance and beyond, not only for themselves, but for each other and, above all, for the man they called simply, "The Boss" in whom they had absolute confidence.

While hand-picked for their experience and skills, Tim Jarvis's group was brought together for this one adventure and might have been expected to lack the same camaraderie and cohesion of purpose. Forcing a bunch of strangers with strong personalities into the intimacy of the below-deck space on the Alexandra Shackleton could have proved a recipe for 'Big Brother' style trauma, particularly given the sea-sickness which affected them all during the first few days of rough weather, but this seems to have been triumphantly avoided.

Stanley Running Club 10 kilometre Sunday

STANLEY Running Club is picking up the pace with its fund raising runs. Thirteen runners laced up their trainers on Sunday for a 10 kilometre road race around Stanley.

First back was Andrew Van Kints of MPC who completed the route in an excellent time of 36 minutes 21 seconds.

Ash Stoby, winner of the Cape Pembroke Half Marathon, was a close second exactly two minutes behind the leader.

Carl Thompson was the first veteran back and claimed third overall.

The first lady, with a hard to beat time of 46 minutes 20 seconds, was Rebecca Frostick the first lady of the half marathon. Second lady back was Sarah Edwards, followed closely by Marie-Julie Roux.

Stanley Running Club would like to thank all those who took part especially for turning out on such a cold day and with the event clashing with a triathlon at MPC.

"Thank you also to those who marshalled, in particular to Ro-

"All the entry fees will go towards the cost of sending athletes to the Small Islands Games in July. Thank you also to Mr and Mrs Westermeyer for their kind donation," said organiser of the event Ros Check.

The next event for Stanley Running Club is likely to be a five kilometre fun run that children can take part in, hopefully towards the end of March.

"We will keep you posted, and please look out for announcements in the Penguin News.

"Good luck to those running the SCB Stanley marathon before then," said Ms Check.

Golf news

A BITTERLY cold Southeast wind encouraged a fairly brisk walking pace for golfers contesting last Sunday's Alex Smith trophy.

Alex Smith was a long serving member and for many years a long distance sponsor of our golf club. Alex was of course instrumental in setting out the golf course some thirty years ago. It is testament to the amount of thought that Alex and others put into the original design that the course layout remains pretty much intact to this day.

It was entirely fitting that the theme for the prizes was an array of fine blends and malt whiskies. It was also appropriate that the longest drive competition was held on the devilishly tough 14th hole, re-named several years ago 'The Whistler' in honour of Alex's contribution to our club. Fitting that another son of Scotland, Ian Stewart, should prevail and power the ball beyond reach of the remainder of the field.

Ian was also the most accurate on the 17th and the very Scottish named Glenn Ross bagged the whisky for the nearest the pin on the 4th. Best front nine went to the only lassie in the field, Sarah Bowles, and best score on the homeward nine holes went to Steve Vincent.

In the main prizes, only two points separated the top three players, with Tony McMullen returning to fine form on 36 points, and Darren Wade was second on 37 points; but the clear winner on the day was the 100 per cent and un-distilled son of Ireland, Eugene Hurley. Eugene returned an excellent score of 38 points, despite not scoring on the short par three 4th hole, and a personal best golfing round on the 60-acre paddock. Our thanks to the Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association for their kind sponsorship of this event.

The race for Bermuda is nearly done but by no means dusted. With only two rounds remaining: Troyd Bowles leads the way on a score of 296, Glenn Ross is second on 300, the next five players, Wayne Clement, Roy Smith, Ian Stewart, Kevin Clapp and Sarah Bowles are separated by the slim margin of only seven shots. Qualifying is completed on our referendum weekend in the Standard Chartered Open. A weekend that will see some players' hopes dashed, and for a few, the dream of representing the Falkland Islands at golf, fulfilled.

This Sunday sees the return of strokeplay and the event is the March Medal sponsored by Decor Services. Players are asked to sign in by 0900 for a 0915 hrs tee-off.

The United Nations, Self-Determination and the Falkland Islands

A Public Meeting on Friday 8 March 2013 at 5.00 pm Chamber of Commerce Meeting Room, West Hillside, Stanley
Speaker: Peter Willetts

Emeritus Professor of Global Politics,

City University, London

Chair: Hon. Dick Sawle, MLA

Professor Willetts will argue that self-determination cannot just be treated as a common sense idea. Since 1960, it has become a technical term in international law that implies a choice between three options. The UN call for the UK and Argentina to negotiate does not mean the right of the Falkland Islanders to self-determination has been denied.

Star Princess faces protest

PASSENGERS on the cruise liner Star Princess who enjoyed a warm, calm and peaceful day in the Falklands last Saturday, received a much different reception when their ship docked in the Argentine port of Ushuaia in the early hours of Monday.

Access from the port to the city was blocked by protesters burning tyres and waving banners. According to information obtained from Ushuaia by Penguin News, the crowd, which since Sunday night had held a vigil with live music, barbecued lamb and wine, was composed of war veterans, students, stevedores, teachers, journalists, members of the Quebracho group and other activists.

The protest, described as a 'malvinazo' was designed to prevent the Bermuda-flagged Star Princess from disembarking passengers and taking on stores. Its focus was the decision of the regional government not to apply the so-called Gaucho Rivero law to the vessel, which was prevented from entering the port last year, but was now making its second visit of the season, due to an apparent change of heart on the part of Provincial Governor, Fabiana Rios.

The Gaucho Rivero law, which has been accepted by a number of Argentine regions, was primarily designed to hinder Falkland Islands oil exploration and prohibits 'all permanence, mooring or provisioning and logistical operations in the province of ships with British flags or flags of convenience, which are involved in work connected with the exploration, drilling or exploitation of natural resources in the Falklands Basin on the Argentine Continental Shelf.'

According to our unconfirmed reports from sources in Ushuaia, with the normal vehicular access to the port blocked by protesters, the port authorities, supported by more than 200 provincial police with dogs, horses, anti-riot units and a hundred or so Prefecture officers, used a side gate leading to a container park to allow access to the ship so that passengers could embark on tour buses.

Free and fair vote observed

AN impartial group of independent international observers, Referendum International Observation Mission (RIOM) will monitor the referendum on the political future of the Falkland Islands on Sunday and Monday.

The team are free from external pressure, they have announced, and will determine whether the vote is free and fair and representative of the Islanders' will.

The RIOM mission is led by Head of Mission Brad Smith and Deputy Head of Mission, Juan Manuel Henao and will include a number of elected officials, civil society leaders, technical experts and eminent persons from the Americas and South Pacific.

A press release from the group said: "International observation standards will be observed, as well as applicable Falkland Islands election laws and regulations. A final Referendum Report is expected two weeks after the vote.

Observers hail from Canada, Mexico, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, the USA and New Zealand.

Right to self-determine but wrong status argues professor

THERE is no doubt that the Falkland Islanders have the right to self-determination, a visiting professor of politics will tell a public meeting at the Chamber of Commerce at 5pm this evening.

Professor Peter Willetts, formally accredited by the Falklands Government as a referendum observer, will argue, however, that 'Free Association' with the UK and not 'Overseas Territory' would be acceptable in the eyes of the United Nations.

Representing the South Atlantic Council, set up in 1983, to promote communications and understanding between Argentina, Britain and the Falklands, Professor Willetts will state: "The government of Argentina is wrong to argue that their sovereignty claim can deprive the Islanders of their international legal rights," however, he also controversially argues that the Falklands will have to change from its current status in order to fit in with the UN 'Options for Self Determination'.

Professor Willetts will explain that the right to self-determination, was asserted in the Decolonisation Declaration adopted by the UN General Assembly in December 1960, and that it applies to the Falkland Islanders because it applies to all colonies.

Argentina's position that the right only exists, "where there is no dispute over sovereignty," was rejected by the UN General Assembly during the debate on the Decolonisation Declaration and again in 2008.

He will add that the UN's repeated calls for negotiations between Britain and Argentina do not imply any support for Argentina's sovereignty claim.

Out of three options for self-determination offered by the UN the Professor views 'Free association with an independent state' as potentially being the most attractive to Islanders. This is offered by the UN for small territories where the people want to be independent, but cannot engage in normal international relations. It means full internal self-government, with another government being responsible for defence and foreign affairs. Two current examples are the Cook Islands and Niue, each being associated with New Zealand.

He will tell the meeting that an Overseas Territory is not a form of Free Association and that the UN said in 1960 an associated territory should have the right to determine its internal constitution without outside interference, but the Falklands ultimately is under the control of London.

Professor Willetts will state that after the current referendum, whether the result is a Yes majority or a No majority, the Falkland Islands will remain a British Overseas Territory. He will emphasise that the most important impact is that holding the referendum is not itself an act of self-determination.

Professor Willetts believes the change in status from being a Colony, to being a Dependent Territory, to being an Overseas Territory, has brought some political change down the road towards self-government for the Falklands, but it is not enough to satisfy the UN.

He is an Emeritus Professor of Global Politics at City University, London, and has studied the United Nations for more than fifty years. His main interests have been in the politics of decolonisation, human rights, development and the environment at the UN.

Penguin News

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

HAVING now almost reached referendum burnout, I was tempted to introduce a little lightness into this week's column by simply including the Sun's picture of our journalist, standing on a windy beach wrapped in a flag: proof in itself that PN staff don't duck responsibility when it comes to promoting our preferred political status. Of course John and I were a little perturbed that we too weren't invited to wrap ourselves in hunting, but instead offered the less breezy, but probably more comfortable task of knocking up the occasional piece for British papers.

One of the newspapers seeking referendum coverage did cause me a quite a degree of discomfort however, with the headline suggestions: 'Why this referendum will tear the Islands apart', 'Why we feel the UK slipping away' and 'Why the discovery of oil would be a disaster - infighting by Islanders'. Having explained I could not possibly pen a piece suggesting any of the above, none being true, I didn't feel inclined to miss a chance to promote our position; thus valiantly attempted to dredge up a relatively sensational theme that concluded sensibly. Helpfully, as a result of such journalistic prostitution, the enforced change of thought process required did allow me to examine some of the less optimistic consequences of the referendum.

One resulting musing was that while it is a warm and cuddly concept we're being fed by the Falklands government that the whole shebang will lend a 'human face' - that is, show us as a people deserving of the basic human right to choose our political path - on the other hand even a small vote for 'no' could well have the Argentines doing the tango round the Casa Rosada, and annoy British citizens infuriated with the ungrateful ingrates down south. Could the whole thing just blow up in our faces I wondered?

And, bearing in mind the bizarre British tabloid reaction to last year's 'revelation' that Islanders dare to think of themselves as 'Falkland Islanders' and not just 'British' are we not setting ourselves up for a damn good media slapping?

Well yes, it's certainly a possibility. But ultimately I was able to convince myself that if the result persuades even just a handful of people that we really do exist as a hard-working, politically and economically forward-thinking people, with the right to make our own decisions, then, yes, it will have been worth it.

Of course this vote might unleash further negative judgments on us from countries and people that already disapprove of our status, but let's face it we're used to worrying about our future; it's part of our everyday life, but sitting back like frightened children and allowing the UK Government the sole care of our foreign politics is unacceptable and immature.

As such, and having reported the above, I concluded with the pretty pretentious, but ultimately sincere thought: 'We have a responsibility to ourselves and to the people who support us, to show that we might be small population but we're a grown-up people.'

OK so the story got bumped - but hopefully they'll still pay me.

Perhaps as a comment on the effectiveness of the protest, it is reported that at some point either during or afterwards, the Star Princess replied by turning its loudspeakers up to full volume and playing, 'God Save the Queen'.

Ushuaia local newspaper El Diario del Fin del Mundo reported the event under the heading, 'Rios put the police and port authorities at the service of the English' and noted that the demonstration happened 'one week before the referendum that David Cameron imposed on the Islands so that the Kelpers could say whether they wanted to stay British or not and 72 hours after the nation's president had hung one of the seven flags from Operation Condor* in the Senate

House.'

(*The Operation Condor referred to here does not refer to the campaign of political repression and terror involving assassination and intelligence operations officially implemented in 1975 by the right-wing dictatorships of the Southern Cone of South America, but to the ill-fated action in 1966 when an armed group of nationalistic Argentine extremists hi-jacked a commercial airliner and forced it to fly to the Falklands. This, the world's first aircraft hi-jacking, could have ended very badly as the Falklands did not at that time have an airfield and the plane, a DC4, was forced to land on the town of Stanley's racecourse. After a brief stand-off with the Islands' authorities, who had the plane surrounded, the hi-jackers were arrested and returned to Argentina where they were jailed.)

Deaf round the world yachting Gerry reaches Stanley safely

YACHTSMAN Gerry Hughes, a Scottish teacher who was born profoundly deaf, docked in Stanley on Wednesday at 6.30pm. He is aiming to be the first deaf person to sail single-handed, non-stop around the world past all five capes and the Falklands is his last planned stop before heading back to Scotland.

Gerry, who teaches deaf pupils at St Roch's Secondary School in Glasgow, was the world's first deaf yachtsman to sail across the Atlantic Ocean in the original single-handed Transatlantic Race in 2005.

Unfortunately Gerry has had difficulty obtaining sponsorship so friends of Gerry who contacted Penguin News have made a plea to Islanders to offer any assistance that he might require.

On arrival Gerry was met by Bob McLeod who hosted him for the evening. Islander Jane Barker has also offered Gerry assistance as have personnel from Mount Pleasant.

Gerry Hughes at the public jetty yesterday

Gerry has had something of a rough trip so far, his yacht Quest III capsized and then self righted in the seas west of Australia. On arrival in the Falklands however he was looking fit and healthy.

Lady Liz centenary

LOCAL historian and accomplished marine artist John Smith reminds us that Wednesday March 13 marks the one hundredth anniversary of the final arrival in the Falklands of the Lady Elizabeth, now a prominent Stanley landmark.

Built in Sunderland in 1879, this three-masted iron-built ship had first arrived in Stanley in 1889, bringing cement and bricks for the building of the cathedral.

In 1913, en route from Vancouver to Delagria Bay in Mozambique with a cargo of timber and already battered after a difficult rounding of Cape Horn, during which she lost four men overboard, she had the misfortune to hit the notorious Uranie Rock. Holed and taking on water, she was towed to safety by the Falkland Islands Company tug Samson and later cannibalised.

The FIC bought the ship and its cargo for £3,350, installed a saw mill aboard and sold the timber directly from the vessel. In 1936, during a storm, the vessel broke its moorings and drifted down the harbour in an easterly direction till she ran aground in Whalebone Cove where she remains today.

To commemorate this important anniversary of a ship which is now the most complete remaining of the many historical vessels which used to grace Stanley Harbour, John Smith is proposing to offer for sale prints of a painting he did some years ago of the Lady Elizabeth in full sail. We hope to have more details next week.

Benefits for camp from onshore oil flow line construction?

PREMIER Oil visited a number of sites in camp last week to investigate the possibility of constructing flow lines for the Sea Lion oilfield development.

If the idea proves to be possible and commercially viable, a spokesperson told Penguin News this week, they will be used to connect the subsea well head manifolds to the FPSO (Floating Production and Storage Offtake) vessel where the produced fluids from the Sea Lion oilfield are processed before being exported.

These flow lines can be up to six kilometres long. Premier Oil has been investigating sites which are flat leading to a gradually sloping beach. The basic concept, based on proven technology, is that the flow lines are constructed onshore as a single continuous assembly and then towed from the beach to the Sea Lion development site before being installed.

After the Sea Lion development is completed, the flow line assembly facilities would be removed and the land restored. This technology for temporary onshore flow line construction and land restoration has successfully been applied for North Sea oilfields from sites on the east coast of Scotland, for oil fields in Angola and for other oil fields from local facilities around the world.

The sites which have been visited in camp have been identified by desktop studies of land topography and beach characteristics. Premier have held early discussions on this concept with FIG through the Department of Mineral Resources and it is seen as offering potential benefits to economic development in Camp. Planning and environmental impact aspects will be addressed fully in forthcoming work if a suitable site is identified.

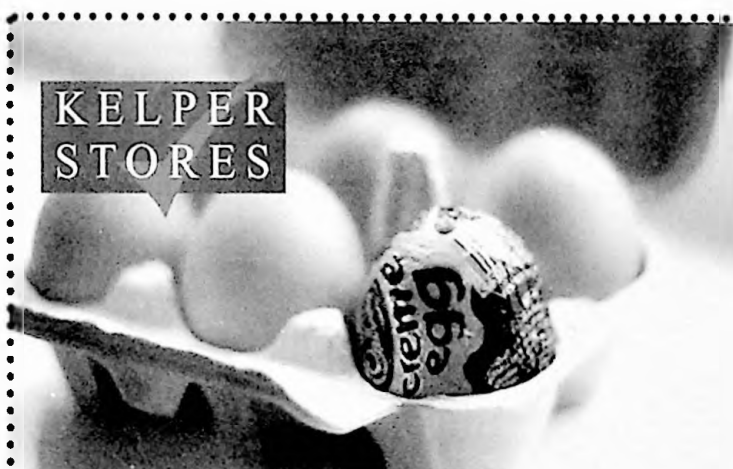

Bail modified

BAIL conditions imposed on Mr James Lang, who was charged on February 15 with the possession of an offensive weapon in a public place, were modified by the Senior Magistrate in court on Tuesday.

The curfew imposed on Mr Lang was amended to run from 10.30 pm to 6 am, each day and a requirement to report to the police station every evening at 7 pm was lifted.

The court was informed that Mr Lang would now also be charged with making threats to kill and common assault.

The case was adjourned until Wednesday March 20.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

WE have a chance to make a little bit of history on the 10th and 11th with a massive turn out and a decisive 'Yes' vote. Opportunities like this to send a clear message out far and wide do not happen too often and we can all play our part. I think I sense real excitement in many normally undemonstrative people and while a good result may not get us dancing in the streets, I'm sure there will be some celebrations. I feel that the result should speak for itself without any gimmicks. We want recognition as a well managed democracy, one with the clear right to determine our own future. Countries around the world that respect self determination and democracy will be hard pressed to ignore this properly conducted referendum, with international observers ensuring that it is done in a free and fair way.

The international press have been here in numbers with more to come. I do not mind talking to them because it is part of the job and every droplet of accurate information that filters out means a few more people know something factual about our country. I'm also proud of what waves of settlers have achieved here against the elements and with limited resources. The problem is finding new ways to say the same thing without sounding jingoistic or sentimental. If I start boring myself when doing half a dozen interviews in rapid succession chances are that I'm boring the interviewer. Of course there is always the risk of being misquoted or quoted out of context but with care you can largely avoid that. Reputable journalists do not make up quotes or write something untruthful in such a way that a casual reader may infer that you said something you did not.

Some MLAs enjoyed a very informative 'awayday' at MPA this week, not only in glorious sunshine but well planned so that we received some great insights into the deterrent operation that allows us to enjoy our freedom. The range of expertise and kit we saw and heard about is truly impressive.

Your chance to create a Falklands icon

ICONIC photographs, are those which capture the essence of a single momentous moment in history in a single image. Sometimes, as in the case of the photograph of US marines raising the stars and stripes over Iwo Jima, they have been carefully stage-managed, but this does not diminish their power.

This was certainly the case in 1968 when John Smith set up the photograph on the right, for the Daily Express.

The gathering was described by the newspaper article it accompanied as "the world's first referendum by camera."

Tacitly encouraged by the then Colonial Secretary Tommy Thompson, who gave government workers the day off to participate, and appeared in the photo himself, the demonstration was in protest against the expected arrival on the next monthly ship from Montevideo of Lord Chalfont.

Unfortunately for this UK Government minister, by the time the RMS Darwin docked in Stanley in November 1968, news had leaked out in the Islands of the British Government's intention to sign a memorandum of understanding which would hand over sovereignty of the Falklands to Argentina.

The photograph was taken by Express photographer, Aubrey Matthews from upstairs in Mrs Sigrid 'Siggy' Barnes' house.

The Daily Express reported, "The window would not open sufficiently wide so Mrs Barnes in a burst of patriotism put a hammer through it, to the delight of the crowd."

Involving nearly all the one thousand people who then lived in Stanley, apart from those engaged in essential services and

"three hundred or so confined with measles," this demonstration of Falkland Islanders' reluctance to be part of any change in their political status which might involve Argentina was probably as potent a force in recruiting British public opinion on our side as any amount of words in the more serious papers.

John Smith, who was the Daily Express correspondent in the Islands at the time, reported "The morning dawned magnificently. From the early hours Union Jacks were seen on childrens' bikes, Land Rovers and lorries. One lorry had its back occupied by a huge placard proclaiming "Keep the Falklands British. It was owned by local carpenter, William Bowles."

After the taking of the photograph, which concluded with the singing of the National Anthem, the Express photographer became a local hero and we are told in John Smith's contemporary report that the same evening Mr Matthews was guest of honour at a Daily Express Dance organised in the Town Hall.

The report concludes, "During the dance he was able to meet many of the people responsible for the arrival scenes on the jetty, especially Laurie Butler, Neil Watson, Mrs. Polly Stewart, Mrs Vi Bonner and Terry Spruce, the expatriate accountant of the Falkland Islands Company, and Miss Shirley Hirtle, who had so efficiently arranged for the turn-out of the Girls' and Boys' Brigades."

Thanks to the efforts of local photographer, Norman Clark and the Falkland Islands own maritime archaeology guru, Mensun Bound, this referendum weekend offers everyone the chance to enjoy being part of three opportunities to create images which could have the same powerful impact.

The programme for the planned events is given on the centre of this page and the organisers hope that as many people as possible will join in with the same good-natured spirit that categorised the vehicle rally last February.

When it comes to Monday and the attempt to replicate the historic image of 1968, this time there will be no need to break windows, because Norman will be elevated on a 'cherry picker' parked in the Capstan Gift Shop car park.

Hopefully, with this photo and the others from the events on Saturday and Sunday, by the end of this historic weekend, sufficient fine images will have been captured not only to appear in the world's press as an affirmation of our existence and will as a people, but also to live on, both in photographic form and in the memory of all participants, for at least another fifty years in the life of the free Falkland Islands.

Referendum 3 day celebration

Three 'grass roots' events have been arranged to celebrate the Referendum:

Day 1: Saturday 9 March Message on the Camber

We need a minimum of fifty 4X4s to spell out the word 'YES!' between Barracouta and Beagle. Vehicles will muster at Moody Brook at 2pm. At 2.30pm we will process along the Camber to the designated area where marshals will position the drivers. Surplus vehicles will be asked to park out of sight behind the crest. We will hold station about 90 minutes until we know that the arriving journalists have had time to take their pictures.

Day 2: Sunday 10 March Vehicle rally through Stanley

At 2.30pm we would like a minimum 400 vehicles to assemble at Moody Brook along the road coming from the Murrell and down the track from the Two Sisters. Marshals will direct drivers where to go. Horses, quads, bicycles and motorbikes welcome. The press-release photo will be taken looking west so as to encompass all the hills from Tumbledown to Wireless Ridge. Once the photo has been taken we will loop through Stanley led by motorbikes and then disband as we come down Reservoir Road. When you pass journalists open your window, smile, wave or give the thumbs-up. Face-painting, especially with children, is encouraged. Please bring your flags.

Day 3: Monday 11 March Arch Green

At 9pm there will be a community party on Arch Green. The Green will be illuminated, there will be food and drinks and there will be music. At the moment when the results are announced an 'historic' photo will be taken from the direction of the Capstan. Bring flags and banners. Parish Hall will be open; Bitter Sweet and Michele will provide a service. The police would prefer that, when possible, vehicles be left at home.

Enjoy the spotlight fellow Islanders

SO here you are again, fellow Islanders, back at the centre of international attention. And this time it is for peaceful reasons.

The global media's fascination will, however, only be fleeting, and by this time next week most of the 70 or so foreign journalists who have come to Stanley to cover the referendum will have moved on. But for now, the spotlight is shining more brightly on the Falklands than it has at any time since 1982. So, enjoy it!

Looking at the Falklands through my London-based telescope (and how I wish I was closer), I can see why this exercise in democracy and pro-active diplomacy has captured the world's imagination. It is not often that a people are asked to vote for or against their sovereign status quo, with the guarantee that their decision will be respected. Indeed, I wonder if such a free poll has ever been conducted anywhere.

I know that the process will be transparently fair and honest, which is important, but I hope also that there will be a dignified atmosphere. Demonstrations are acceptable in any free political system, so rallies, marches and displays of Union Flags will be all to the good. But it would be a massive own goal if Islanders demonstrate their dislike of the Buenos Aires Government, and of Cristina Kirchner and Hector Timerman in particular, by destroying or otherwise insulting effigies, pictures and flags.

Buenos Aires would love it if such distasteful protests occurred. They would feign outrage and make political capital, notwithstanding the fact that the Argentine government has supported the violence of proxy anti-Falklands thugs. Dignity, democracy and maturity are the Falklands ace cards, and if played wisely, as they have been so far, nothing can go wrong.

This plebiscite is the cherry on the top of a cake that has been baking rather nicely for almost a year now. When I was back in Stanley in late 2011, it was very clear to me that the Islands and London had been ambushed by a vitriolic and vicious strategy to cut Stanley off from South America, strangle the economy, and force London into talks.

It took a little while to organise the diplomatic counter-attack, but once the plan was in place it began to work quickly and well. Argentina's neighbouring countries wavered over the BA's insistence that they should gather around in response to a threat to the continent. The oil industry let it be known that it would not be intimidated, and exploration around the Falklands continued. And when British cruise ship operators and their agents suffered threats and actual violence at the hands of violent militants, the operators responded by continuing to call at the Falklands while cancelling visits to Argentina.

Buenos Aires' slip-sliding strategy reached its nadir last month, when the Foreign Minister arrived in London. His intention was to weaken UK solidarity over the Falklands. But petulant, irrational and aggressive rhetoric did not bring the large liberal-thinking and questioning sector of society out on his side. Had Mr Timerman agreed to meet Islanders and talk reasonably about issues of mutual value, his mission might have succeeded. Instead his "Falkland Islanders don't exist" mantra looked small-minded and mean.

The important and worrying question now is this: How will Argentina react to the positive Falklands coverage that the poll will almost certainly generate? Buenos Aires will be almost irresistibly tempted to spoil Stanley's day in the sun with an event of its own. One has to hope that this will not be a violent stunt by proxy militants, such as the Quebracho group. There are, however, vulnerable groups in Argentina, closely linked to the UK and the Falklands, which must be taking precautions at this moment.

The worst-case scenario would be a proxy act verging on terrorism. That idea may appear to be well out in left field, but I am sure that security precautions are being stepped up at Mount Pleasant and in Stanley.

Any such hostile action would, of course, be new nadir for President Kirchner's policy. Any international support she enjoys would evaporate; even if she tried to disown it by claiming she had no control over militants.

Pregnant with threat

But there can be no doubt that the government in BA is becoming aggressive. At the least dangerous level, it is distressing that civilian government hates us far more than did the military in 1982. But last week the President did something that was pregnant with threat. She honoured the Peronist Condor Group guerrillas who hijacked an Aerolineas Argentinas Douglas DC4 airliner to the Falklands in 1966. By presenting Congress with a blue and white flag that the hijackers supposedly carried to Stanley, Mrs Kirchner was embroidering the legend of these gun-waving activists, in preparation for their admission to the pantheon of nationalists heroes which already includes the Gaucho Rivero.

But as I was thinking about these extremists, my mind wandered to more pleasant Argentines. Some of those of us who witnessed the hijacking of 1966 met such people then. As well as the guerrillas, there were passengers and crew who had no desire to fly to some island where there was not even a runway on which to put down. They were deeply grateful to the local people who stopped the hijackers in their path and released

I have a photo taken by the late John Leonard, in which the two DC4 plots are wearing the green berets that had been presented to them by the few Royal Marines who had worked with the Defence Force. The pilots clearly had no love for the men and women of the Condor movement, and they had accepted the Marines' gifts graciously.

I treasure one small memory of that incident. As a gesture of friendship, the crew gave their cargo of baby chicks to the people of Stanley. My father, who, as a senior civil servant, was involved in the crisis, came home with two of the chicks. One was a little black rooster, claimed by my brother, and the other was a charming little hen, which I called, rather strangely, Aerolineas.

So there were friendly Argentines then, and there are friendly Argentines now. I know respected Argentine political analysts and journalists who dare to question the wisdom and the justice of their leaders' obsession. Such people are increasingly making themselves known in the cyberworld of Twitter and Facebook. We may just be seeing the birth of a movement in Argentina that opposes nationalism. I hope so.

For now, though, expect Argentine statements to aggressively rubbish the result of the referendum. That is entirely to be expected. But with perhaps with a the passage of a little time, and evidence that Falklands Islanders enjoy more international support than ever, President Kirchner may be tempted to accept that her policy has failed. And with that realisation, perhaps her attitude to us will soften just a little.

I will not be holding my breath, though. And I certainly do not think we will be the happy recipients of more baby chicks any time soon.

17 offer self determination with strings

THE 17 Argentine intellectuals mentioned in Penguin News last week do not offer 'self-determination' without strings. The British idea of self-determination is an absolute right for Falkland Islanders to choose their own future, sovereignty, etc. This means the right to have nothing to do with Argentina, if Islanders so choose.

But the 'self-determination' enshrined in the Argentine intellectuals' paper 'An Alternative Vision' is more about giving Islanders a voice in future negotiations. The intellectuals see granting this as opening the door to negotiations with Britain, and especially with Falkland Islanders themselves.

The 17 intellectuals do want Argentina to abandon the idea of forcing its unwanted sovereignty and government on Falkland Islanders. But they see this as leading to a process whereby Argentines and Islanders could agree to joint management of Falklands' natural resources, and "the withdrawal of the United Kingdom and its military base," from the Falklands! If they were to achieve that, the Falklands would be completely at Argentina's mercy. Mount Pleasant Airport would be undefended, and just waiting for Argentina to take it over. I saw one of those 17 intellectuals, Fernando Iglesias, on Buenos Aires television, stressing the need to remove the British garrison.

It is a step in the right direction for Argentines to concede any rights to Falkland Islanders. And it is good to see the 17 intellectuals criticise Argentine harassment of the Falklands. But those 17 intellectuals do not offer genuine self-determination. Islanders have that now under British sovereignty. What the 17 intellectuals really offer is just Islander participation in a future built around Argentina.

Congratulations to youngsters

CONGRATULATIONS to the younger generation of Islanders who have contributed such a positive, fascinating snapshot of their lives, careers, hopes and views in the booklet 'Our Islands Our Home'. It is testament to the wonderful lives they enjoy in the Islands and to their hard work and study to amass such remarkable qualifications and skills to contribute to Falklands life and to reject Argentine arguments. Having known these families since the invasion, and even before it, I have watched children grow into young adults. I am very impressed by their quality, their achievements and their contribution to the community. They are a valuable asset and the best argument there can be to reject Argentina's demands to control their future, which is what is at stake. Well done to them all. The future is in safe hands.

Prices rocket but not wages

LOTS of numbers were published in Penguin News last week in an answer provided by the Financial Secretary in response to a question. In summary the numbers show that over the past 10 years FIG pay has increased by 21.5% and retirement pensions by 28% while prices have risen by 49%. Over the same 10 year period the Consolidated Fund has increased by 34% and FIG's balance sheet (All Funds) has increased by 94%.

Satisfied customer

I WOULD like to thank the doctors, nurses, auxiliaries, drivers, cleaners and chefs at KEMH for putting up with me and looking after me so well again. I won't mention names in case I miss someone; you are a marvellous team who do a grand job, sometimes under trying circumstances. It's a shame though that the nurses always seem to be under-staffed and under-paid; it's also a 'crime' that the Medical Services tax that we all have to pay doesn't all go to the hospital, on top of their normal budget. I don't begrudge paying it as everything has to be funded, but I would feel happier about it if it went to the right place. The food is great as well!

Argentine Apology

I AM a 30-something Argentinian male, born and bred in Argentina, and work as a teacher of English in Buenos Aires. I have a wife with two children, and live a reasonably comfortable life. I would like to offer my apologies for the disgraceful actions of my government towards your fair islands. I would also like to say that the sovereignty issue is actually blown up to appear like a huge issue with the Argentine people – the reality is that this is an illusion created by my government. The vast majority of my fellow countrymen actually don't feel as strong and 'militant' about it as you are often led to believe. The feeling between most people, and certainly all of my family and friends, is that you should all be left to decide your own future. I would like nothing more than my country to cast aside its sovereignty ambitions and embrace your islands with every amount of gusto that a good neighbour should. Don't get me wrong, I love my country and the culture here, the tango, the meat, the Latin warmth, the history, and I hope for a day when we can invite you to sample the delights of Argentina and vice versa, with no aspersions or tensions.

I just wish my government would see that strong, unconditional links between our two countries could benefit all parties. I dream of a day when we drop the ridiculous sovereignty claim, and have frequent, direct flights between the Falklands and Buenos Aires, offering international and inter-Argentina flight connections so that you are truly connected to the rest of the world. I dream of a day when we trade with each other, help each other, support each other, and really embrace our two distinct cultures and enjoy each other's countries.

I hope that the Falklands continue to be a thriving British territory and I pray that my government sees sense and gives up their ridiculous and pointless claim.

We are generally a friendly, warm lot over here in Argentina – we don't bite, we're not all fanatical, sinister, militants, so please don't cast us all with the same brush. God bless you all and all the very best of luck for the future of your delightful islands. If I was an Islander – I would vote to remain as you are – as a British Overseas Territory. Why would you want to be any different? I hope it sends a strong message to my government.

Sending warm regards and a hand of friendship from 'across the pond' in Argentina. Take care, don't give up, and be strong!

Praise for Head

FOLLOWING the letter in last week's paper we would like to write to express our deep sadness at the departure of the Head teacher at FICS. We have nothing but the highest praise for Mr Tongue and can safely say that our children have thrived under his dedicated and focussed leadership.

Moving our children to such a remote location could have caused many problems, however, as soon as he was aware of their arrival Mr Tongue went out of his way to make sure that the best transition arrangements were in place. He was very accessible and no question seemed too small or too silly. This helped to put our minds at rest and made the move much easier.

From the moment they arrived at the school our children were made to feel extremely welcome and they have all said how great it is that Mr Tongue takes the time to talk to them each day and knows them as individuals rather than just part of the student body. When any problems have arisen he has been quick to find ways to solve them and his contact with us as parents has been second to none.

There has never been a moment where you could call his professional integrity in to question and these comments must have been extremely hurtful for someone that has dedicated far more than the 37.5hrs per week (wording stated in the advert for his replacement) to ensuring the highest provision for all the children in his care. As an individual he has the needs of his family as well as his work to consider, however we have no doubt that he will do his very best between now and the date of his departure to make sure that everything is in place to allow the high quality provision to continue at the school.

We wish Mr Tongue all the very best in his future career and thank him once again for the positive impact he has had on the education and self-esteem of our children. Let's hope that his successor is just as good!

Career over?

IN this week's PN there is a letter from a Mr Lester May noting John O'Farrell, the Labour candidate in the Eastleigh by-election, had hoped Argentina would win the Falklands War.

Of course, we now know that Labour, and Mr O'Farrell, came nowhere in the vote. Only time will tell, though, if Mr May's wish that Mr O'Farrell's political career is dead in the water comes true.

It did all remind me of another by-election many moons ago in Beaconsfield that took place in May 1982. In that by-election the Labour candidate was quoted as saying of the conflict, "I want a negotiated settlement and I believe that given the starkness of the military options we need to compromise on certain things. I don't think that ultimately the wishes of the Falkland Islanders must determine our position."

Sadly, the political career of that candidate did not die although I am sure there are many millions, especially, although not exclusively in Iraq, who rather wished it had. The person in question was one Tony Blair.

SIX REASONS WHY WE SHOULD BE VOTING YES

1. It gives you the freedom to choose your own future.
2. It is the right message we want to give to the International Community.
3. It helps to ensure we maintain our own identity and way of life.
4. A YES vote is a positive stepping-stone towards establishing even more autonomy for the Falkland Islands, in determining our future political destiny.
5. We owe it to those generations past, present and future.
6. It's a really great idea, turn up and vote YES.

SIX REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD NOT VOTE NO

1. Your basic human rights will undoubtedly be undermined by Argentina.
2. Every NO vote is a bullet given to the Argentine Government to be used against us at future U N Committee of 24 meetings.
3. We will become a Colony of Argentina.
4. We will lose self-governance.
5. Voting NO could be considered an insult to the British Heroes who lost their lives in liberating these Islands.
6. It's a really stupid idea.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

The Wool Market Report - 24 January, 2013

by Agricultural Advisor Helen Thoday

The AWEX ended this week at AU$1109 a drop of 8 cents. After two flat weeks a small decrease has been seen.

Clearance rates of 90% have been seen over the last two weeks with much of the trading having little effect on the prices in any particular range. A large sale volume is on offer next week likely to result in lower prices.

However, the current downturn in prices is not expected to be a prolonged trend, merely a reminder that the health of downstream demand for wool textiles is still not very robust. In addition, larger sale volumes will tail off by the end of March which may help prices.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

WHAT a glorious weekend! Warm and not too breezy it made it very pleasant to work in the garden.

Outside the back door and to the east of it there is a bit of land which forms a natural terrace. It is a very rocky area and, once the overgrown, leggy and no longer flowering brooms had been removed, it just left an untidy looking piece of ground. Bill has been muttering about it for quite some time but really it was of low priority on the 'jobs' list. However, the other day he got some of those half round logs and got going. I now have a brand new border, it's already planted up and will look good next Spring, but it looked rather bare when I had finished and so I cheated, I had taken a lot of pelargonium and fuchsia cuttings in the Spring but had only used a few of them. I've rather optimistically put them in that bed; they look lovely, so all fingers crossed that there are no high winds or frosts before the winter finishes them off.

Over the 25 years that we made penguins and other soft toys many thousands of them made their way all over the world and so it is not unusual for someone to seek us out and mention they still have one bought by a loved one, on their shelf.

We had one such caller off the ship Adonia. We heard someone shouting at our back door and so thinking it was someone looking for plants or whatever, I called out that we were in one of the tunnels.

A moment later a total stranger arrived, who told us his wife was not feeling too well on that day and had not come ashore but she had bought him a penguin when she was here making the film 'An Ungentlemanly Act'.

When he introduced himself as Colin and said his wife was Rosemary Leach I had only the vaguest recollection of the name. We strolled around the garden and discussed his plants and ours, and then he left to rejoin his ship. That evening I googled his wife's name, and realised that she was indeed a well-known face, and what was more he did not mention that he is Colin Starkey, a well known actor in his own right.

Oh dear, a 'Celebrity' in our tunnel and I showed my ignorance once again.

I had to go to the Garden Centre to get some ant powder before the earwig numbers rise too high; they are eating the cauliflowers. That is our food! There appear to be more little black beetles around again and I wonder if that means earwig numbers are falling at last. Whilst there I got some more plants, of course: a pink (bone hardy) clematis Montana, a spotted aucuba, a rose (yep yet another one) a sedum (ice plant) with unusual blue leaves and

All ornamental plants are enjoying our weird weather and it is bringing them into flower in a hurry. Small wonder then that many of the vegetables are doing the same. It's unfortunate that many people are finding their veg 'bolting'. The incredibly sultry weather followed by torrents of rain is to blame and short of planting everything under cover we shall simply have to hope for a better season next year. Even the winter/early spring-flowering hellebores are full of buds, so everything is confused. Worse, I'm saddened to say, the colchicums (autumn crocus) are starting to flower already, some of the hardy Cyclamen are showing their leaves and, some deciduous trees are starting to colour theirs. Pretty, but much too soon!

Do you find that you associate sounds with weather and seasons too? For example I hear gulls making that cry which is almost an echo and I'm certain we are in for rain. The other day the upland geese were calling to each other in a way that, to me, sounds like Autumn is very close. Hope I'm wrong.

Blackcurrants may have exhausted themselves last year but the new plants haven't fruited this year either, so I would guess that the flowers became frosted or there simply wasn't enough light, but too much water at all the wrong times. The gooseberries are not too productive either but then, they did get moved last year. The red and white currants have more than made up for the reluctance of the rest and we have stopped picking them.

Because a marathon is not hard enough

CORPORAL David Bradley, an airman from MPC, will be having a slightly earlier start to the Standard Chartered Bank Stanley Marathon than most.

On the evening of March 16, while marathon runners are carb-loading, stretching, resting and hydrating he will be starting the World's most southerly marathon wearing a 45kg bomb-disposal suit.

He has scheduled in the extra hours but if all goes according to plan, his early start should see him crossing the finish line alongside the runners.

Cpl Bradley is undertaking the gruelling distance to raise money for Red Nose Day 2013.

Ally wins Décor March Medal

LAST Sunday, eighteen golfers signed in for the March Medal sponsored by Décor Services. In excellent scoring conditions, most of the field enjoyed good rounds but saw their hopes of winning scuppered by one or two errant shots.

In full handicap strokeplay, players know they need to shoot one or two shots better than their average round in order to have any chance of winning.

The par for the Stanley course is 67, so players who shoot a nett 70 have played three shots worse than their handicap and a nett 64 is three shots better. A cluster of four players played exactly to their handicaps and two others were only one shot back with nett 68's. Kevin Clapp returned to top form securing second place with a fine round of 74 and a nett score of 66.

The winner and making a rare appearance this season was Ally Bonner who posted an unbeatable nett 65, despite two triple bogeys in an otherwise really neat card, that ought to have seen him break 80 for the first time. Ally became the fourth member of the Bonner clan to win this season, joining Tim, Richard and Deelan.

The future looks fairly rosy for the Bonners too, as in the junior section, Stenning and Smith's excellent putting strokes were keenly watched by our youngest member, nine month old Seth Bonner.

With only a few matches remaining, Tony McMullen leads the League standings just ahead of Deelan Bonner. Ian Stewart is ahead in the Eclectic with Roy Smith close behind.

This weekend's competition is the much coveted Standard Chartered Bank Open. Two rounds of gross strokeplay with much at stake. Not only the Rose Bowl but it is also the final qualifying rounds for the Island Games hosted this year on the amazing island of Bermuda.

Players are asked to sign in on Saturday at 13:45 for a 14:00 hrs tee-off.

Bermuda Shorts: Should male golfers wear shorts? No.

Fantastic result

Prime Minister's message to Islanders

IN a direct message to Falkland Islanders the Prime Minister David Cameron has expressed his delight at the results of the Falkland Islands Referendum on its political future, and the 99.8 per cent vote in favour of remaining a British Overseas Territory.

In a message via Penguin News he said: "Along with the rest of Britain, I woke up on Tuesday morning to fantastic news. You - the Falkland Islanders - had overwhelmingly voted to remain a British territory."

"In the build-up to this referendum, I was clear that it was your choice: the way it should be. But now the votes have been counted, I hope you know how pleased everyone in this country is with the result."

"What struck me was your sense of pride when the results were read out. Families gathered together, draped in both Union Jacks and the flag of these Islands. They showed Argentina where their loyalty lies."

"Over the last week or so, people in Britain have got to see a lot of the Falklands on their television screens. We've all seen pubs, fish and chips and neighbours complaining about the weather. Our strong bond has never been closer as we look to the future."

"Back in Britain we now want to work with you to help your economy grow and compete across the board - from fisheries to tourism."

"Thirty-one years ago, British forces bravely liberated these islands. 255 servicemen gave their lives to do so. We will never forget their ultimate sacrifice. They didn't travel thousands of miles to fight the old battles of empire. They did it so the people living here were free to choose their own future."

"That's still the case now. Argentina must respect this week's decisive mandate. They can make as many threats as they like - it won't change a thing. No matter how much they posture, how aggressive they get, we will always be there to defend you. On that, you have my word."

YES AN ecstatic reaction to news of the 99.8 per cent vote in favour of remaining a British Overseas Territory. Turn to centre pages for more news and pictures.

Reactions

Predictably the Argentine Government dismissed the referendum as illegal with President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner describing it as a 'squatters meeting'. It was equally condemned in both Houses of Argentine Congress.

The US position was unchanged; Washington recognises the de facto UK Administration of the Islands, but takes no position on sovereignty claims.

UK Foreign Secretary William Hague told Parliament: "We believe that the result should be recognised by the whole international community as a definitive act of self determination."

He also stated that: "Attempts to intimidate the Islanders must cease."

In a UK Parliamentary debate on March 12 on the subject of the referendum, The Minister of State for the FCO Hugo Swire said: "No longer will Argentina be able to distort the facts of the matter, misrepresenting and ignoring what the Islanders want."

Fifty-five members of the international press were present in the Islands at the time of the referendum, and coverage of the event was considerable with a particular appetite for news and pictures from the UK.

The Sun declared 'Brit Hooray for Falkland vote' with the Telegraph announcing 'An overwhelming yes from the Falkland Islanders'.

Brazilian newspaper Folha de Sao Paulo described it as 'a compelling defeat for the Argentine government.'

Archbishop Tutu declares referendum is act of will

THE 92 per cent turnout for the Falklands Referendum is admirable, Archbishop Emeritus Desmond Tutu has stated via a letter to the Penguin News.

He wrote this week to say: "I have followed with interest the referendum held to gauge the opinion of the people of the Falkland Islands with respect to their future relationship with the United Kingdom. That 92% of eligible voters cast ballots is admirable, while the fact that 99.8% of people voted for the Islands to remain a UK Overseas Territory is a very conclusive expression of their will."

The Archbishop writes that control of the Islands, "led to war between two powerful nations in the 1980s, and remains unresolved today. The attraction of the area is considerably enhanced by the value of its oil reserves."

He adds: "Whether or not the Falklands remains a UK Overseas Territory, become a fully independent state or fall under the control of Argentina is a matter that should be resolved peacefully at international diplomatic level."

"Whatever decisions are eventually taken, it is important that the views of the people have been canvassed and that their opinion is taken into account."

"God bless the people of the Falkland Islands."

In March last year Archbishop Tutu and five other Nobel Peace Prize Winners called on Britain to enter talks with Argentina on the issue of the Falkland Islands.

Desmond Mpilo Tutu (born 7 October 1931) is a South African social rights activist and retired Anglican bishop who rose to worldwide fame during the 1980s as an opponent of apartheid.

He has campaigned to fight AIDS, tuberculosis, poverty, racism, sexism, homophobia and transphobia. He received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1984 and has been awarded a number of other humanitarian prizes, and also compiled several books of his speeches and sayings.

Penguin News

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

WHILE chatting last week to one of the members of the Referendum International Observation Mission, he commented with some degree of contentment that the Falklands referendum for a variety of reasons, including the small number of voters and very transparent and efficient government system, was 'a piece of cake'. The day after the referendum he passed the Penguin News office with as much Tigger-like bounce as the week before, so I think we can safely assume that nothing too bad happened during the event itself to dent his relaxed state of mind.

The gentleman's happy disposition and general air of positivity, was equally evident in the mood of the entire community, with its high spirited approach to an issue that could just as easily have led to tension, paranoia and infighting. And, while there were some unnecessarily bullying comments on social network sites, on the whole the mood, particularly on the Sunday rally and Monday night, had more in common with a pageant than the disturbing images that usually accompany stories of demonstrations and rallies on TV world news channels.

So how is it we got it right? Well apart from being quite nice people who aren't generally inclined to enjoy running around causing fear and mayhem, perhaps it was because the community decided to emphasise the positive, more than the negative. It appeared to be mostly about what we do want - self determination and a bright future - rather than what we don't want. And it was this optimistic feel, and the understanding that this was an opportunity to show ourselves (very colourfully as it happens), that was picked up by the journalists and in most cases accurately broadcast in all of its glorious jubilation.

So OK this may just be the very beginning of very long journey, but for one moment I think it's fine to be a little bit proud of the work put into this oddly high profile act of self-determination. Not just rightly proud of the efficient organisers, and the many people who informed, assisted and shepherded demanding journalists, but the individuals who took the time to set up the events, those who turned out in wet and cold weather and smiled through frozen lips, and those (the hairy bloke in the yellow jacket mainly) who reflected the fun-filled images back to the UK national newspapers.

Will it really make any difference? Who knows, let's hope so. But if part of the aim was to give the Falklands a human face, then I think we've taken a leap in the right direction.

I have the oddest moments in the employ of Penguin News, not least when I wandered in on Tuesday to see a message on my desk with a phone number, and the words 'call 10 Downing Street'. No less surprising was the conversation that followed when I suggested to the lady at the Press Office, perhaps the PM might give us an exclusive statement for this week's PN, to which she replied, "that shouldn't be a problem." Well heck if you don't ask.

If that weren't enough we received an email on Wednesday that inquired politely if we wished to include a letter from Archbishop Desmond Tutu? I hope this much loved and revered gent will forgive me for my first thought being, "This is a wind-up, right?"

AAC: Stud flock debate

AT the recent meeting of the Agricultural Advisory Committee (AAC), what seemed at first to be a relatively simple matter provoked one and a half hours of at times heated discussion and brought into question the whole purpose of the National Stud Flock (NSF).

The question to be decided was whether what were described as 'flock rams' should be sold alongside the usual sale of shearling rams at the annual National Stud Flock sale.

Flock rams are those rams from the National Stud Flock, which have escaped being either culled or castrated, but are not regarded as being top quality as they fall below a score of 100 in the index used by the Agricultural Department.

Following the release of a paper in February on National Stud Flock Sale Issues and in the face of the expressed opinion by some members that the sale of what could be regarded as sub-standard rams would damage the reputation of the NSF, it had been decided to consult farmers on this matter.

Seventeen farms responded with eleven (65 per cent) stating that the flock rams should be sold. Ten of those farms expressed an interest in purchasing these rams.

on the grounds that although sub-standard they were considerably better than their own flock rams.

Surprisingly, perhaps, it was the farmers present at the meeting: Ben Berntsen and Andres Short, who were most against the sale, with the former insisting that such rams should be culled because their introduction into flocks would bring no lasting benefits. It was important, he believed to maintain the integrity of the NSF.

Chairman, MLA Mike Summers, said that he felt that the Department of Agriculture, through the NSF, had a responsibility to improve the over all quality of animals in the Falklands. On these grounds, the NSF might be justified in selling animals which were not of top standard, but would improve the flocks into which they were put, if in buying them farmers were not put off from buying something better.

A decision was finally made that the flock rams could be sold for flock development, but not at the NSF Ram Sale and only after all the sale rams had been disposed of. The Department of Agriculture were tasked to discuss how and when this might be achieved in consultation with the eleven farms that had expressed an interest in the first instance.

Assault cases adjourned

TWO Stanley men, Christopher Williams and Dylan Stephenson were released on bail in the Magistrates Criminal Court on Wednesday, pending pre-sentencing reports.

The pair had pleaded guilty to offences committed on January 20 this year.

Mr Williams, who it was stated in court had consumed 11 Budweisers and several shorts on the occasion, had been charged with an assault on PC Steve Dent and with using threatening and abusive words and behaviour towards PC Kim Bone.

Counsel for Mr Williams said that while his client had pleaded guilty to both charges, he would wish to dispute some of the alleged facts of the case, in particular whether or not PC Dent was deliberately punched in the chest or whether the blow he claimed to have received was simply reckless. Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley, said that he was obliged to sentence on the basis that there was no punch to the chest.

Mr Stephenson, who was represented by Mr Keith Watson also pleaded guilty to assaulting PC Dent.

Mr Watson said that the fact that at one stage his client had been asked by the police to, "help calm things down," and had not been responsible for the injuries to PC Dent would be submitted in mitigation.

These cases will be heard together again when they return to court on May 15.

Suspended sentences for police assaults

THREE suspended sentences of nine months imprisonment and one of one month, all to run concurrently, were handed out to a member of the British Forces in the Stanley Magistrates Criminal Court on Wednesday.

Sergeant Daniel Peter Rogers of the Royal Mechanical and Electrical Engineers (REME) first came to court on December 12, 2012, to be charged with assaulting a police officer and resisting arrest. He entered no plea at this time, and at a later hearing on February 4, the common assault charge was replaced by three charges of assault causing actual bodily harm.

It was alleged by the prosecution at this time that subsequent to the first hearing, the injuries sustained by three police officers in the course of arresting Sergeant Rogers after an incident at Deano's Bar in Stanley on the night of November 17, had proved to be more serious than at first assessed: PC Tom Clark, whom it was alleged was punched by the accused, had been forced to be off work for five days after the incident. WPC Sarah Fleming had sustained injuries to her shoulder which left her unable to fully raise her left arm or to drive, and part-time WPC Emma Brook had suffered pain and swelling to her left ankle.

After consultation with his client, who the court was told was anxious to plead guilty and, "get it over with," as he was due to leave the Falklands at the end of his tour of duty, counsel for Sgt Peters's defence, Mr Mark Neves asked for and was granted an adjournment. He was, he told the court, unhappy about advising his client to plead guilty in view of the suggestion that another matter relating to police discipline might have, "a significant impact," on the case.

Information from the prosecuting counsel to the effect that the other matter referred to was still unresolved when Sgt Rogers's case came back into court on February 15 led to a complaint from the Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley about what he called the, "drip-feed approach," being shown to evidence provision. He said that the prosecution had a duty to disclose all information relating to a case, though he reluctantly accepted that this duty would normally be triggered by a plea of not guilty.

When the amended charges were put to Sgt Rogers, he pleaded guilty to them all, but his counsel Mr Neves asked for a Newton Hearing before sentencing, because of major factual disputes over the evidence offered by the police and witnesses for Sgt Rogers, who, he said, had little or no recollection of what had happened.

Sgt Rogers appeared in court again on February 19, but after two of the police officers alleged to have been assaulted had given their evidence and while WPC Brook was giving hers, the court had to adjourn as Defence Counsel Neves was too ill to continue.

WPC Brook was able to complete giving evidence on March 13, as were two witnesses for the accused: Sgt Robertson and Corporal McSkimming, colleagues of Sgt Rogers who had been with him at the time of the alleged incident. A statement from a further colleague, Corporal Taylor was also accepted as evidence.

Senior Magistrate Gumsley said that though Sgt Rogers had already pleaded guilty to all the charges against him, the disputes over evidence which had made a Newton Hearing necessary, also led to the need to be sure of the elements of the case brought by the prosecution. It had clearly been a confused and fast-moving incident, which argued a need for caution in the acceptance of evidence, particularly that offered by the defence witnesses, which he considered, "wholly unsatisfactory."

Mr Gumsley concluded that the prosecution had proved that the defendant had been uncooperative when arrested, but he was not wholly satisfied that adequate reasons for the arrest had been given to him.

He had been impressed by the evidence given by WPC Brook and was therefore convinced that the defendant had taken off his shirt as alleged and waved it, though he believed that this might have been provoked by a bystander whose identity was known to the police, but against whom no action had been taken.

The Senior Magistrate was also satisfied that the defendant had punched PC Clark on the back and that he had hit PC Fleming, though he was not convinced that the hit to her had been deliberate. He was also not satisfied that Sgt Rogers had continued to offer resistance to the police officers after he had been handcuffed and was being led to the police car.

In sentencing Sgt Rogers, who was also made to pay £500 in compensation to WPC Fleming and £200 costs, the Senior Magistrate said that he was taking into account his guilty plea and his apology to the officers concerned and was aware that he would also be subject to military discipline.

There had been an element of provocation, he believed and he was surprised that the person involved, had not been dealt with, however the court had to send the message that violence in the streets of Stanley can not be tolerated."

On Tuesday March 12 Member of Legislative Assembly Gavin Short gave a speech to the nation on behalf of the Legislative Assembly.

MLA Short is the Legislative Assembly's spokesperson for this month and also, coincidentally, it was he who last year announced the plan to hold a referendum.

Accompanied on the stage of the Stanley Town Hall by fellow MLAs, Barry Elshy, Roger Edwards, Jan Cheek and Dick Sawle, and in front of a barrage of international media cameras and microphones, MLA Short said:

"This morning, my fellow Falkland Islanders and I woke up to a new future. I am proud, both of our people, and of our community for last night our country made its voice heard."

He added that the Falklands had, "sent out a clear message to the world: a resounding 'yes' to our desire to remain as an Overseas Territory of the United Kingdom. For the first time in our long history, there can be no misinterpretation as to how we feel about our relationship with Britain."

He described it as a relationship that had evolved over centuries, "and one that we are proud to maintain. We have moved far beyond our colonial past. Ours is a modern relationship, based on mutual respect and democratic values."

MLA Short said the results of the referendum had, "dispelled the myths that Argentina tries to cultivate; we do not exist under the yoke of a colonial power, neither are we held here against our wishes, nor are we an implanted population illegally occupying these Islands."

In a comment aimed at the Argentine President he said, "We have sent you a message: we have absolutely no desire to be ruled by the Government in Buenos Aires."

"I hope that now you might respect that. Now is also the time that the rest of the world starts to listen to the voice of the Falkland Islanders, rather than empty lies, endless rhetoric and political posturing.

"We are a proud, flourishing community. We are a people, and we have rights. This is our home - some of us have family ties going back nine generations - a far longer history than some of those who try to deny us have in their own country."

"We will be forever grateful to the British forces who liberated us from Argentine occupation almost thirty-one years ago, and we will continue to remember those who paid the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom. However, we have opened a new chapter in our history, one that looks to the future rather than the past, and focuses on building our home for future generations.

Overseas representation

Members of Legislative Assembly Mike Summers, Sharon Halford and Ian Hansen are currently taking the referendum message to the world.

The elected representatives are accompanied by three Islanders: hospital manager Michael Poole, scientist Emily Hancox and Penguin News journalist Teslyn Barkman.

Penguin News was unable to obtain a comment from the hard working travellers before going to print, however, MLA Summers told press this week: "We're taking the result of the referendum to various countries to ask for support, to encourage them not to sit on the fence, and to show that this is not an argument between Britain and Argentina; it is a human rights issue."

"The vote gives us a strong hand. It is an act of self-determination that nations should be able to support even if they don't support the UK."

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

IT IS difficult to imagine a more decisive vote than that we witnessed at the referendum count on Monday night. The turn out was also excellent. I thought we would get something in the high eighties so at 92% it exceeded my expectations. All credit must be given to all the people who have worked for months to ensure that the process ran smoothly under the eyes of the experienced group of international observers.

The fact that those observers were here is important to give clear evidence that the process was conducted in a free and fair way. The presence of so many international journalists including many from different South American countries was a coincidental bonus. I hope people made them welcome because it is their interest that gives us a platform to ensure that many more people know about the Falklands and the freely expressed wishes of the people. From before polls opened on Sunday people queued cheerfully at the Town Hall. The atmosphere was great because we were united by our passion for our country.

When journalists asked if I thought there would be a 100% 'Yes' vote, I always replied that only dictatorships do that. We came close, but thankfully the three 'no' votes added that last bit of credibility.

I celebrated with a mug of cocoa as I waited to do a couple more telephone interviews, the last one at midnight. I've lost count of how many interviews I've done in the last week, between us MLAs must have covered a fair proportion of the international press from Helsinki to Tokyo and Spain to China and beyond.

We have made history and no amount of grumbling from Argentina or prevaricating by academics will change the overwhelming result from a turn out that will be the envy of governments around the world.

Finally I would like to congratulate Mandy Heathman on her well deserved recognition as the recipient of the SCB award for women in the workplace. I know that she regularly goes far above and beyond the normal requirements of her job in caring for her patients.

Gold medals for all

YEARS 1 and 2 from the Infant Junior School enjoyed their sports races on Monday March 11. Teacher Jackie Cooper told Penguin News: "Lots of first, second and third stickers were won and proudly displayed on the children's t-shirts."

All the children participated in running races, team baton relay, team track races, obstacle races and Year 2 demonstrated their skills at the egg and spoon race, whilst Year 1 opted for a dressing up race.

Lots of fun was had by all and the children were delighted when they all became gold medal winners at the end of the afternoon.

The message from the small competitors is: "Thank you to everyone who came to cheer us on; you definitely helped us run faster!"

Woman of the Year

THE Standard Chartered Bank received twenty-four nominations for their International Women's Day Award, but it was Mandy Heathman of the King Edward VII Memorial Hospital in Stanley who received the award from Manager Binoy Karia at a surprise presentation in the hospital on Friday afternoon, last week.

The bank had asked for nominations of women who set high standards in the work place and their professional life. To have so many nominations in such a small community for women carrying out a range of occupations from accountant to welfare worker does credit to them all, but Mandy with 15 nominations, ten more than her nearest rival, was a clear winner.

In nominating Mandy for the award, her staff wrote, "We all think that Mandy has gone above and beyond in her work at the KEMH, she is a fantastic midwife, nurse and boss. Whenever you or any member of staff have a problem she is very approachable and willing to help in anyway she can. Mandy works incredibly hard and doesn't complain and she doesn't get any recognition for her hard work, she gets called out all hours, covers so many shifts, she is a woman that never says no and is just incredible."

This accolade was echoed by Bonita Goodwin, who organised the award nominations as part of her role as Diversity and Inclusion Champion for the bank. Bonita writes: "On a personal note I am glad Mandy has been nominated due to the hard work and dedication she puts in as a midwife. I think that anyone that has had Mandy as a midwife will agree she does an excellent job."

Biker let off with a warning

A SIXTEEN-year old motorcyclist was found not guilty of riding his 400cc machine at 50 mph along Ross Road and Ross Road West in the Magistrate's Court on Wednesday, but left the court with a severe warning from the Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley, who said that he was surprised that such a young rider was able legally to drive such a powerful motorbike on Stanley roads.

The court found that the circumstances surrounding the case, in particular the short distances involved and the relatively different rates of acceleration of a police car and a motorcycle cast doubts on the ability of a single following police driver to make an accurate assessment of the motorcyclist's speed and therefore was not prepared to accept the assertion that speeds well in excess of 25 mph were attained.

The good the bad and the ugly

The Good

ISN'T it good once in a while to reflect on something that has gone well and has worked? I'd like to begin by drawing your attention to some unsung heroes of yesteryear.

In 2002 an Oral Health Strategy group formed in KEMH and set out their aims for the islands. It is with great pleasure that I can announce that an Oral Health Needs Assessment carried out in the Dental Department ten years on suggests that their hopes have been exceeded. Without boring readers with detail, a measure of disease in teeth is the 'DMF' score, the higher it is the worse the teeth are. The group hoped that 10 years down the line this would have fallen from 5, as it was then, to 1 or less in the under 5s. Research indicates that now the average DMF in the under 5s is in fact 0.9. This is due to the programme they put in place a decade ago which encourages twice daily brushing of gums and teeth with fluoride toothpaste (containing 1450 parts per million of Fluoride – see the ingredients label on the side of the pack); restriction of sugary and acidic snacks and drinks to main meal times only; safe snacks between meals, and regular attendance at the dentist. The DMF score is 1.5 in the 5 – 12 year olds. Bearing in mind that ten years ago these very same 5-12 year olds, were the under 5s back in the day, then this represents an improvement also. I believe we owe a debt of gratitude to the Oral Health Strategy Group of 2002 – you know who you are. Thank you for your efforts.

The Bad

The very same Needs Assessment shows that by the time we get to the 35-44 year age group our teeth are, by World Health Organisation standards, among the worst in the world. Lest ye despair, the worst in the world includes all the highly developed industrial nations of the world. This is because in these countries we lead complex lives, are generally less active and we are the 'fast food generation'. We continue to disregard the basic rules for healthy living, or consider that they no longer apply as we reach adulthood. If we avoid sugary foods and drinks we will not expose our teeth to destructive breakdown caused by acids produced by the bacteria in our mouths directly from the sugar. So it's a slap on the wrists for the oldies. If you are in doubt you could have a chat with your local under 12s who have clearly embraced the message and can recite it by rote. As the good book says "out of the mouths of babes."

The Ugly

Dental disease is largely self-inflicted. We should consider this soberly in the light of growing evidence from the scientific community around the world, which shows that there are closer links, between our dental health and our general health and well being, than might be obvious at first. Evidence exists of links between gum and tooth disease and things such as cardiovascular disease and diabetes. The relationships are complicated but what is clear is that good diet, not smoking, drinking in moderation, taking regular exercise, keeping our weight down and regular attendance for health and dental check-ups is the future. Please don't take your teeth for granted.

Biggest failure

Objective: Argentine sovereignty of the Falkland Islands. Challenge to overcome: UK will only hand over sovereignty with agreement of the people living there. Strategy: Bully and intimidate the population so they realise they are better off under Argentine sovereignty. Result: 99.8% of population do not want anything to do with Argentina.

Could our referendum be the biggest measurable failure of a country's foreign policy in history? I am so glad we have our Government and the UK looking after our foreign policy and not theirs.

Hamish Wylie, Stanley

Norman's thanks

I WOULD like to say a big thank you to my team which took up the reins when I was sent to Santiago medical.

I was disappointed not to be able to vote, even more disappointed not to be able to execute my plan, however I had a good team around me who took up the reins, and carried it through.

I have been overwhelmed with the support for all the events, and humbled by all the well wishers. THANK YOU ALL.

Falklands and South Atlantic Information Management System in the pipeline

THE South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI) has announced a new programme, the South Atlantic Information Management System and Geographic Information System (GIS) Centre, which officially binds the UK South Atlantic Overseas Territories in SAERI's South Atlantic scope that ranges from the equator down to the ice.

The Centre is funded by the FCO via the UK's Joint Nature Conservation Committee. Falkland Islands Governor Nigel Haywood commented: "This is very exciting news. The development of robust information systems is vital in underpinning environmental research in the South Atlantic. This project will enable us to assemble baseline information, manage knowledge and establish linkages to enhance even further the outstanding scientific work already being done in the region."

St Helena Governor Mark Capes added: "St Helena, Ascension Island and Tristan da Cunha warmly welcome this exciting opportunity to work with our friends in the Falkland Islands on this valuable project, which provides a fine template for further co-operation in our South Atlantic Community"

The objective is to establish an information management system, including shared GIS capabilities, accessible to all of the South Atlantic UK OTs (Falkland Islands, South Georgia, Tristan da Cunha, Ascension, St. Helena). Training OT personnel across the region is also a priority to ensure capacity is built up in the region and dependence on outside assistance reduced.

The benefits of this new initiative will include: immediate follow-up to the Falklands Environmental Mainstreaming workshop addressing the need for development of a GIS system that will underpin a wide range of environmental work in the islands; a shared information management and GIS capacity will support existing and future research in the region, provide a synergy between and add value to a range of current projects, and add significantly to the regional capacity to undertake ecosystem assessments and monitoring; and provide training to all OTs that will significantly increase regional capacity.

SAERI Director, Dr Paul Brickley said: "This is an incredible opportunity that will make environmental data storage and management more efficient across the territories. It will offer state of the art geo-spatial analyses in all areas of the environmental sciences being conducted in the South Atlantic."

SAERI has the support of all of the South Atlantic OTs and can implement a cross territory project of this kind which will benefit all OTs in the region. Supporting the institute at this early stage of its life demonstrates the UK Government's commitment to capacity building in the region and will help the institute to secure additional funding on the back of this commitment.

SAERI is also well placed to assist the regional OTs to become more self-reliant in the future in terms of their ability to identify and undertake their own research work and act on the results, in terms of using and sharing regionally available skills, and drawing upon international sources of funding. Early support for SAERI will help to ensure that the institute can fulfil this role.

The funding will directly support acquisition of hardware and software for use by all South Atlantic OTs, training for relevant personnel in the region, employment of a GIS specialist based in the Falklands for a fixed term, development of an environmental data repository in the Falklands for the regional OTs to enable geospatial data to be analysed, integration of the St Helena marine mapping data into a GIS system and terrestrial and marine ecosystem mapping within the Falkland Islands.

SAERI will investigate sources for longer term funding to ensure continuity of the work beyond the two year life of the current project.

Tara Pelembe, Director of the Environmental Management Directorate in St Helena said: "SAERI is an exciting initiative that is providing a long-awaited tangible way to share resources, expertise and develop new areas of research across the South Atlantic Overseas Territories."

Frozen sea was warrah's bridge to Falklands explain scientists

WHILE the recent discovery of a warrah skull by Dale Evans, and its subsequent carbon-dating, cleared up some of the mystery which has surrounded this animal in the past, other mysteries remained which now a group of scientists headed by Alan Cooper of the University of Adelaide claim to have solved.

Not only did this strange bizarrely tame cross between a fox and a wolf exist in the Falklands, when European and North American sailors began landing here, it existed in large numbers and would on occasion swim out to greet boats as they approached the shore.

In 1833, Charles Darwin recorded how the gauchos with whom he travelled through La Patagonia told him that they could kill warrahs by holding a piece of meat in one hand and a knife in the other. It was this susceptibility which was to cause this curious mammal to be extinct by 1880.

Darwin asked himself what such a large predator was doing on this tiny set of islands, some 460 kilometres away from the South American mainland and why, if it had come from South America - a land full of mammals including rodents - had no other animals joined it there?

The skull which the then twelve year old naturalist discovered in a pond on West Falklands was identified as belonging to a warrah and found to be around 2,000 year old. This helped shake a previously held theory that this cross between a wolf and a fox had once been domesticated and might have been brought to the Islands by canoe-dwelling Indians from Tierra del Fuego in much more recent times. However, this revelation did not in itself do anything to solve the puzzle that confronted Charles Darwin when he acquired a specimen for himself in 1843.

The answer, according to Professor Cooper and his colleagues, is that the warrah existed much longer ago than 2,000 years; in fact that it dates back to the last ice age, 16,000 years ago, when huge underwater terraces extended off the coast of Argentina and the Falklands were about four times bigger than they are now, due to a sea-level which was dramatically lower than today.

It is estimated that the gap between the Falklands and the mainland at this time may have been as little as 20 to 30 kilometres wide, and 10 to 30 metres deep. In the event of the sea freezing over, such a crossing would have been easy for the wolf's ancestors, which could have behaved like modern Arctic foxes, taking advantage of the glut of seabirds.

Above and below: artists' impressions of the warrah. Right Islander Dale Evans helped solve some of the mystery when he discovered a warrah skull aided by his younger brother Niall baby animals and washed-up carcasses on the frozen shoreline. "By tracing along and using these food supplies, it would have had a high chance of hitting the Falklands," Professor Cooper says. Such a frozen bridge while convenient for a large predator would have been an insurmountable barrier for a rodent and acted as an ecological filter.

Professor Cooper's speciality is wrestling samples of ancient DNA from fossils, and sequencing these millennia-old molecules to better understand their owners. So far, he and others have filled their genetic ark with Smilodon the sabre-toothed cat, American lion, cave lion and American cheetah. They have done the massive short-faced bear, giant jaguar, cave hyena and European bison. They looked at the dodo, New Zealand's enormous moas, elephant birds, and giant ducks. "We were running out of good ones to do," he laments. The warrah made the cut.

In 1996, Cooper travelled to London's Natural History Museum to check out one of only six specimens of Falkland Islands warrah that were known at the time. Darwin collected the animal himself, and his handwriting graces the label (although it's unclear whether he actually clubbed it over the head himself, as some stories claim).

Darwin was meticulous and the skull had been thoroughly cleaned—great for museums, bad for geneticists. Cooper needed organic material that still contained DNA. He suggested to Paula Jenkins, the museum's curator of mammals, that he could pull out a tooth, cut off part of its root, and put it back in. "Her countenance was not one that suggested this was going to happen," says Cooper, delicately.

But Darwin had missed a spot. As Cooper turned the skull around, he noticed a tiny sinus on its face—an opening, and one that clearly had something in it. He reached in with some tweezers and pulled out a little piece of nerve and blood vessel. It was just three millimetres long and one millimetre wide, but it was enough. It was raw tissue, loaded with DNA. "I thought: This is definitely going to work," says Cooper.

Though Cooper's team were clearly ignorant of Dale Evans's skull find, from which DNA was successfully obtained, they collected DNA from five warrahs, including a moth-eaten, stuffed specimen that was gathering dust in an attic at New Zealand's Otago Museum. One of his students took a bit of toe from what had previously been thought to be a badly-stuffed fox, sequenced it, and confirmed that it was indeed a match for the other Falkland Islands warrahs.

When they finally analysed their sequences, the team concluded that the Falkland Islands warrah's closest living relative is the maned wolf, a handsome stilt-legged dog found in South America. The two species split apart around 6.7 million years ago, which was useful information, but didn't help in the quest to discover the animal's mysterious origins.

Cooper tried again. This time, he compared the Falkland Islands warrah's DNA with that of a close relative that lived on the mainland—the similarly extinct Duscyon avus. The DNA revealed that the two species diverged from their common ancestor just 16,300 years ago during the last ice age. Putting together these two dates gives a pretty good indication not only of when the warrah reached the Falkland Islands, but also how it got here in sufficient numbers to survive and start evolving independently from its mainland cousins.

ISLANDERS declared "Yes" in a landslide referendum result announced on Monday evening, March 11, 2013, at the Town Hall.

At a lively party on Arch Green, hundreds of Islanders braved the cold to learn together the result of the referendum on the Falkland Islands political future; the question being 'Do you wish to remain a British Overseas Territory?'

Their first cheer celebrated an impressive 92 per cent turnout and some time later an even louder cheer followed the official figures as announced by Chief Referendum Officer Keith Padgett:

The number of ballot papers issued: 1,522

The number of votes cast at the referendum: 1,518

The total number of rejected ballot papers: 1

The percentage of turnout at the referendum: 92%

The number of "Yes" votes cast: 1,513 (99.8%)

The number of "No" votes cast: 3 (0.2%)

1 vote was unaccounted for

The referendum was conducted under the eyes of an internationally recognised group of observers, Referendum International Observation Mission, under Head of Mission Brad Smith and Deputy Head of Mission Juan Manuel Henao.

Their preliminary findings were released after the official announcement of the vote result.

Mr Smith said: "It is our finding that the Falkland Islands referendum process was free and fair, reflecting the democratic will of the voters of the Falkland Islands."

"The international observation mission has concluded that the voting process was executed in accordance with international standards and local laws. The process was technically sound, with a systematic adherence to established voting procedures."

The team was made up of ten members from six different countries. "with no political alliances," from North, Central and South America and the South Pacific.

Islanders took a very pageant style approach in the days before the referendum. On Saturday around 50 vehicles formed a large YES on the Camber: an image to greet the 55 international journalists, primarily arriving that day on the Lan Flight from South America. On Sunday afternoon hundreds of vehicles decorated with Falklands and British flags formed a convoy led by horses and motorbikes and moved from Moody Brook into Stanley before eventually forming up for a photograph on Ross Road.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

IT HAS not been a good year for tomato plants, or not for ours anyway. They look a little sad, probably because there are too many of them but I just couldn't bring myself to throw them on the compost bin. So there are tomatoes in pots dug into the soil in any empty area that presented itself. They are not very good-looking plants this year but they each are very productive for all that. I removed a lot of the bottom leaves the other day to allow as much light and food as possible to reach the bunches of tomatoes. Also took the tops off, they now need to concentrate on what they have already got on there. They are still being fed once a week. I've also removed a lot of leaves off the pumpkin plants as the leaves were taking over the greenhouse and I could not see where to feed and water let alone find female and male flowers. It was not a moment too soon either for two of the pumpkins had started growing originally next to the glass but, as they got bigger they had become jammed under the framework. They would have eventually lifted or twisted that part of the greenhouse so Bill got in there with a crowbar and got those two out. The rest are larger and still growing well. The marrows are also doing well, as are the peppers, which is surprising in this dull weather.

The grapes are filling out nicely and the blackberries are flowering well.

There was a lovely lilac growing on the west end of the border next to the embolthrium, which flowered beautifully this year. Unfortunately, now that it was in a border rather than surrounded by grass it had decided to 'flex its feet' and the suckers started appearing all over the place. I dug it out, cut it down to a foot or so and re-planted it, with lots of water, elsewhere. I hope it will grow happily in its new home but have potted up some of the suckers, just in case.

This latest bout of rain has caused a lot of what I call 'rain grass'. It really is just a meadow grass but it would look great in a lawn if only it would grow there. It is that beautiful green, very fine grass which grows like a velvet mat and is almost impossible to lift out until it grows a little taller, by which time it ready to seed itself and start the whole merry-go-round again. Ah well, where is my little hoe again?

The buddleia davidii (butterfly bush) are really coming into flower now and all the different colours are lovely. Sadly, the caterpillars have made a mess of the leaves which detracts a little from the overall appearance.

When we widened the border next to the house I shifted a small laburnum shrub, which seemed too close to the house and out of proportion, the rest of the plants being low growing ones. I planted the shrub in another border but it did not take. The original plant however, sent out new growth in the Spring. And so I tried again the following year, and the year after that too. This year, the shrub showed itself once more and I decided it deserved to stay in its bed and so I pampered it a little. Some things are meant to be.

Meanwhile, one of the 'lifted' shrubs has decided it likes its new home also, so now there are two.

The dahlias outdoors are very slow into flowering this year as the earwigs have been having a field day with the leaves and the odd bud daring to show itself but maybe we will see them flower before the season ends.

The kniphofias (red hot poker) have many different kinds and between them they have flowered all season. Also in flower at the moment are the sidalceas (mallows) crocosmias, with 'Lucifer' as the tallest and very eye-catching. the dieramas (angels fishing rods) are full of nodding flowers. Most of the lilies are also in flower as are the roses, dianthus (pinks), baby gladiolus, hardy geraniums, oestospermums, digitalis (foxgloves) Veronicas, perennial linarias and of course delphiniums, pansies, polemonium (Jacob's ladder) with various campanulas (bell flowers) and alstroemerias (Peruvian lilies).

Some of the potatoes are starting to die down now. Soon it will be lifting time again. Where has this last year gone? I do hope we will get some more drying weather before then. it's no fun digging in a peat-bog for your potatoes. Speaking of potatoes, we keep a small pedal bin in the kitchen just for stuff heading to the compost bin and when it gets full of used tea-bags, green leaves, peelings and odd bits of soft paper, usually at most inconvenient times, I put the contents into a plastic bag and sit them outside the back door where I promptly forget to take and empty them in the compost bin. I always tell Bill that I'm just starting the rotting down process but this year I've been caught out. The peelings have grown great potatoes. Oops! I guess that didn't work.

Glenn retains SCB Open

By Sarah Bowles

THE Standard Chartered Open was played last Sunday in cold and demanding conditions. The Open is normally a two day event with both rounds counting towards Island Games qualifying. The first round was scheduled for Saturday afternoon but was postponed due to the awful weather.

Sunday morning at 0800 twenty hardy golfers signed in for what was to be a long, cold day that left some feeling like they had taken part in the Standard Chartered marathon a week early. The morning conditions were tough with a stiff easterly wind and occasional hail showers. Unsurprisingly scoring was relatively high with almost everybody struggling against the elements. Roy Smith was the leader after round one with a solid 78. There was a three way tie for second with Troyd Bowles, Glenn Ross and Ian Stewart all on 79. There was then a gap to the rest of the field on 84 and above. Highlights of the first round included a scorching start from Ieuan Ford, who was level par through his first seven holes and would have been comfortably leading at that stage and an Eagle 2 on the thirteenth by Tim Bonner.

There was a break of just over an hour for lunch, during which competitors enjoyed a lovely BBQ provided by the staff of Standard Chartered. First round scores were sorted during lunch and play got underway in the second round at 1330.

The afternoon's weather was a little kinder with the wind dropping and the showers dying out which led to better scoring. After ten holes Roy Smith still led the way with a 2 shot lead over Troyd and Glenn. Ian, in the group ahead was having a solid round but had lost ground on the leaders. The five hole stretch from 11 through 15 were pivotal with first Troyd, then Roy faltering leaving Glenn with a 2 shot lead at one point only for Roy and Troyd to close up again. With three to play Glenn and Troyd were tied, one shot ahead of Roy. All three bogeyed 16 and parred 17, meaning it was all to play for on the 18th.

Glenn Ross

Roy was unfortunate to finish with bogey whilst Glenn and Troyd both had birdie putts. Glenn went first from 20 feet and left it just short of the hole meaning Troyd had a chance to win with a ten foot downhill putt. However Troyd also missed, meaning for the third year in a row there would be a playoff between Glenn and Troyd.

The four hole playoff saw Glenn take a one shot lead after the first only for Troyd to pull back level on the second. The third hole was dramatic with both players facing putts of little more than two feet for par. Glenn narrowly missed his leaving the door open, only for Troyd to miss also. For the second time within an hour they faced the intimidating 18th to finish with the scores level. Glenn played the hole almost identical to how he had in the earlier round meaning he had a short putt for par. Troyd had missed the green with his approach shot and unfortunately hit a poor chip leaving a very difficult twenty foot putt across the slope of the green. The putt ran across the edge of the hole but refused to drop, leaving Glenn to roll in his par putt for victory and retain the trophy he had won last year in very similar circumstances.

Other scores of note in the second round were a 76 from Declan Bonner despite triple bogeying the first hole and double bogeying the last and a personal best 81 (nett 60) from Gordon Lennie.

Hayley Bonner from Standard Chartered Bank was on hand to present the prizes. The minor prizes were presented first with Wayne Clement and Alan Bonner winning nearest the pins and Kevin Clapp taking longest drive. Best nett score from round one went to Ian Stewart and Richard Bonner had the best second round. Third Nett was Gordon Lennie, Second Nett was Martyn Gilson-Clarke and First Nett went to Declan Bonner. Finally the main prizes were handed out with Roy Smith taking Third, Troyd Bowles Second and Glenn Ross First place and the Rose Bowl trophy. The golf club would like to thank Standard Chartered for their generous sponsorship of the tournament and a special thanks to the staff members who spent almost 12 hours at the club preparing the BBQ and supporting the golfers as well as the Referendum Rally as it past the club.

The rounds of the Standard Chartered Open were the final qualifying rounds for the Island Games. Unfortunately as I write this, I don't have the actual scores to hand, but can confirm the final qualifying order. Troyd Bowles, Glenn Ross, Wayne Clement and Roy Smith finished in the top four positions and have officially qualified for the golf team. Ian Stewart, Kevin Clapp, Declan Bonner and Tony McMullen make up the rest of the eligible list. If any of the top four are not able to go to Bermuda the position on the team will be offered to the next golfer on the list.

The Marathon and 3K Fun Run Is this Weekend!

Standard Chartered

Standard Chartered Bank would like to advise the following information in connection with the Stanley Marathon & 3K Fun Run on Sunday 17th March 2013.

Registration

Marathon: 8.30am – 9.40am in the Banking Hall

Fun Run: 8.30am – 9.40am in the Town Hall

Race Briefing 9.45am in the Town Hall

Both the Marathon and the Fun Run will begin and end at the Town Hall car park. The start for the Marathon is scheduled for 10am and 10.30am for the Fun Run with the finish line due to close at 4pm.

Closure of Town Hall car park

The Royal Falkland Islands Police will close the Town Hall car park to general use from Saturday evening until Sunday evening once the race has completed and the finish line cleared away. There will also be minor disruption to drivers on Ross Road between the Junctions from Villiers Street to Barracks Street during the start of both races.

Notice to drivers in and around Stanley

The Marathon is to be run along Ross Road between the Beaver Hanger and Rowlands Rise, Jeremy Moore Avenue and nearby back roads, the Airport Road and By-Pass between the airport and the Sapper Hill.

All roads will remain open to traffic.

Along Ross Road (including East and West and Crozier Place) runners should remain on the harbour (north) side of the road. On the By-Pass and Airport Road runners will run facing on-coming traffic.

The Fun Run runners will run along Ross Road West and will turn just before John Biscoe Road back along Ross Road to the finish line in the Town Hall car park. Runners should remain on the harbour (north) side of the road.

Drivers are therefore asked to be vigilant and watch out for the LEAD RUNNER VEHICLE and runners especially when approaching the junctions with Ross Road (East and West), the By-Pass and the Airport. Please give extra consideration to the Fun Run runners who are age 8 years and above.

Please be patient and give runners a wide berth.

We hope this will be a great event for the Falkland Islands and your co-operation in making it a success is hugely appreciated.

If you have any questions concerning the above please contact us on 22220.
Thank You.

'Hazardous' road access point DPW replies to worried public

ANY alternative to the planned vehicle access point onto St. Mary's Walk, Stanley, from the Malvina Development would be, "problematic," Director of Public Works (DPW) Manfred Keenleyside told Penguin News this week.

Concern was expressed at Monday's public meeting that the intended road onto St. Mary's Walk would create a cross roads with King Street, opposite an infants' play park and as such, be hazardous. Penguin News contacted Director of Public Works Manfred Keenleyside for a reaction who said: "There will not be a crossroads. There will be a single direction egress point only onto St. Mary's Walk from the new Malvina Development which will be opposite King Street."

He said this will have a stop sign in place, so drivers should check that the road and footway were clear and also, "as they will be just starting off again, be travelling at lower speed past the toddlers area than they are likely to be if leaving from either of the other options on to St Mary's Walk."

He said the main access into the site will be from Ross Road via the northern end of Cable Street, "so will not affect St Mary's walk."

Mr Keenleyside told Penguin News there were three alternatives for the egress. One of those would have been via the new car parking area south of Police Cottages, "where additional vehicles leaving the new Malvina development would need to transit right through this area and then either go west along St Mary's Walk, and potentially achieve higher speeds before they pass the toddlers area, or east either past IJS or down an already problematic Barrack Street to Ross Road."

Another would have been via Cable Street onto St Mary's Walk: "with its poor visibility; and likely to cause rather more nuisance from a noise point of view to the residents of the adjacent property to the west."

The third suggestion was via Cable Street and Thatcher Drive, which he said was already problematic. Mr Keenleyside assured that the southern end of Cable Street will be made pedestrian only (from just south of the point where the access into Malvina is taken) if the development progresses, "so the number of access points onto St Mary's Walk will remain the same, but the new one will offer much better visibility than is or can be achieved for Cable Street."

Minutes from December 13, 2012 Planning and Building Committee Meeting show that both the Chief Fire Officer (CFO) and the Police objected to another junction onto St Mary's Walk as they were concerned over pedestrian safety.

The minutes say Mr Keenleyside commented that it would replace the sub-standard Cable Street junction.

The CFO backed by the Police were also concerned that drivers in winter travelling down King Street in icy conditions might not be able to stop at the junction with St Mary's Walk.

In response the DPW said surface water and foul discharge would be kept separate and be connected to separate systems.

Members then debated the merits of the proposed egress onto St Mary's Walk.

On a show of hands all but one Member indicated they supported the proposal, so it was passed.

Court issues arrest warrant

CAMERON Goodwin of North Arm, who was listed for trial in the Magistrates Criminal court on Thursday morning, failed to appear when called. In consequence, the Senior Magistrate ordered that a warrant for Mr Cameron's arrest should be issued to the Royal Falkland Islands Police.

The court was told that once arrested Mr Goodwin would be detained in custody and should be brought before the court within twenty-four hours, when arrangements for a new trial would be made.

Mr Goodwin had been ordered to appear for sentencing after pleading guilty on March 14 to the possession of an offensive weapon in a public place and was due to be tried for a further charge of using racial abuse and insulting words to cause harassment, alarm or distress to which he had pleaded not guilty.

Delay sternly criticised

THE appearance in court on Thursday morning of former police constable, Mr Thomas Clarke, four months after the date of complaints made against him, brought forth stern criticism of, both the police and the Attorney General's Chambers from the Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley.

Mr Clarke is accused of the assault by beating of three persons on November 17 and of repeating the same offence against one of them on November 23. It was deemed advisable that he should be interviewed by the military police. This interview took place on January 16.

Given the serious nature of the charges, Mr Gumsley said: "I cannot even begin to understand why it took seven weeks to find some police officers capable of interviewing him."

Before adjourning the case to 9am on Monday, May 25, the Senior Magistrate asked the Senior Crown Counsel to provide a full explanation in writing for the delay, which far exceeded the Attorney General's Department's own recently announced target of one month between offence and court appearance.

Penguin News

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

SADLY it is a too frequently observable fact that in the frantic and frenzied world of news media, the good always struggles to compete with the bad or the simply weird.

Here in the Falklands, no sooner had the good news been released that 92 per cent of those eligible to vote in the recent referendum had turned out and 99.8 per cent of those had voted 'yes', then we began to be briefly plagued by journalists wanting to know if we had identified the three 'no' voters and, if we had, asking what we were going to do about them.

The answers "no" and "nothing" seemed rather to disappoint them and we found ourselves apologising for putting our respect for the democratic process above the desire for a good news story.

Whether the reason for those no votes was senility, simple incompetence at form-filling, a lack of trust in the government's willingness to consider further steps in the direction of complete autonomy, or sympathy with the Argentine sovereignty claim, we shall probably never know unless the people concerned choose to tell us. Until then, it remains their business. We shall not be conducting a witch hunt.

Mercifully we were spared further interrogation of this sort, when the day after the referendum came the news that white smoke ascending from the chimney in the Sistine Chapel in Rome marked the election of a new pope, this time not a European, but would you believe it, an Argentine! The phone began to ring again.

I did tell one lady ringing from Italy that in the circumstances the election of an Argentine pope the day after our referendum seemed a touch ironic, but didn't feel it polite to quote someone who on Facebook wrote that he was "99.8 percent sure that God was taking the ps."

By contrast with this pithy observation, my feeble protestations that as I was not a Catholic I didn't feel qualified to comment, but my lack of outrage just seemed once again to disappoint fellow hacks in various lands.

Never one to avoid the opportunity to offend good taste and decorum, fortunately the President of Argentina was ready to step in to fill the outrage gap. At her meeting in Rome with the Holy Father, whom she had previously vilified as an enemy when he was a bishop in Argentina, she asked him to intervene in the sovereignty dispute, before commenting that this was the first time she had been kissed by a pope.

Whatever his old views on this subject, surely now in a role which transcends nationalism His Holiness will have more pressing concerns?

Cubs and scouts fly the flag

DURING referendum week, the cubs and scouts turned out at 8am every day to raise the Union Flag and Falkland Islands flag on Victory Green.

Cub scout Nick Rowlands made it eight out of eight days Leader Jan Miller told Penguin News, and on the Thursday he made his cub scout promise and was Invested into the cub pack after flag break.

New technology first for Falklands new museum

THE new Falkland Islands Museum which continues to grow like a mushroom behind the Penguin News office will be host to a pioneering information system, which will allow visitors in the museum's vicinity to learn all about what it has on display, even when it is closed.

Webnebulus, a company set up by Leicestershire entrepreneurs and IT boffins Neil Rathbone and Paul Palmer has developed a product which allows mobile phone users to access web-type information in areas where there is no internet access.

According to Museum Manager, Leona Roberts, this low-cost system will offer what she described as, "web-less web pages" anywhere within about 500m of the museum, without having to log on to a conventional internet connection.

The product which is called Info-Point is targeted at the heritage and museum market and the Falkland Islands Museum is their first customer.

However, since the initial order from the Museum and National trust, the business has had some 30 enquiries from various visitor attractions, including the Fife Folk Museum in Scotland which is located in three remote cottages.

Messrs Rathbone and Palmer came up with the idea while trying to stream live footage from an archaeological dig at iron-age hill fort Burrough Hill, in Leicestershire.

Mr Rathbone said: "We wanted to see how visitors to the site could use their phones to enhance their experience of visiting places like that but when we got there the signal wasn't strong enough to use video. "It struck us that this would be a common problem across the heritage industry."

The pair's invention uses a powerful web server and a super-fast web connection which lets smart phones access Wi-Fi and receive the content that the site owner wants visitors to see. The museum plans to set up the equipment close the walls so visitors can access information about the museum from outside and even when the attraction is closed.

Referendum births new electoral procedure

MEMBERS of the Legislative Assembly confirmed at a public meeting on Monday evening that a new electoral procedure introduced at the March referendum would be likely to be carried through to future legislative elections.

In the past the number assigned to the voter appeared on both the voting slip and the counterfoil. However to ensure greater anonymity the number was removed from the voting slip itself.

MLA Jan Cheek assured, however, that the old system was anonymous in that votes were immediately bagged, sealed and destroyed within a certain amount of time, however, she and MLA Short agreed that the new system was likely to be continued.

St Helena Airport

A member of the public enquired whether during the visit to the Islands by Julian Morris, in relation to St Helena Development, there had been discussions about the new airport and if MLAs had been involved.

MLA Dick Sawle confirmed they had, and that they had lobbied hard for additional length to the runway, however, the lobbying had not succeeded and the decision had been made for it to, "stay as it is."

When asked if FIG had considered investing in the runway, because of advantages of the Falklands having access to a, "second flight," MLAs noted that practical difficulties were involved and figures suggested had been "fairly frightening."

Other matters

Concern was expressed that the historic Camber names, should be protected from potential land development, being situated as they are on private land. MLA Jan Cheek commented that, "generally people value the history on their land." She also noted that such structures could come under Historic Buildings.

MLA Cheek also confirmed there was still interest in pursuing the purchase of a building in the UK in which Falklands medical patients could convalesce or await appointments. She noted however she did not know whether it would be budgeted for in the next budget.

When asked why the referendum vote was not, "split," into constituencies, MLAs referred the question to the Chief Executive who said the question was not constituency based and was one for the whole Islands. He said all voting slips were mixed in one box so that the slips could not be attributed to one constituency.

Top prices at ram show

Farmers bid at Saladero ram sale

THE top price paid for a ram at the Saladero ram sale on Wednesday March 20 was £400, for a, "very handsome ex-stud sire, closely followed by an excellent price paid for one of the Merino crosses," the Department of Agriculture's Assistant Agricultural Advisor Lucy Ellis told Penguin News.

She said the show was a resounding success: "A very much larger crowd than has been seen for many years attended which included a fair sprinkling of members of the public."

It may have been the lure of the new genetics in the form of the Merino Polwarth cross shearling rams offered for sale that was the main attraction, said Lucy, "however, that did not detract from the interest shown in the pure Polwarth animals for sale. All ex-stud sires, shearling rams and the 06 drop ewes were successfully bid for during the Helmsman auction."

The department offered their thanks to the farmers that attended and purchased sale animals, the Galley Café which kept everyone well fed during the day, Workboat Services for providing the ferry service for the day and, "Keith and Rudolfo for help tackling the rams the day before."

Saladero is the home of the national stud flock and national beef herd.

Our man in Punta visits

A RECEPTION was held at Government House on Tuesday night in honour of the Honorary British Consul in Punta Arenas, John Rees MBE, who is currently visiting the Islands at the invitation of the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Governor Nigel Haywood emphasised the importance of the strong ties between the Falklands and Punta Arenas and praised the work done by Mr Rees in fostering that connection. For over twenty years Mr Rees had been instrumental in helping forge commercial and educational links between the two communities. His presence had been of considerable comfort both to those travelling to Chile for medical treatment and to those stranded in Punta Arenas for one reason or another.

In reply, Mr Rees said that the people of Punta Arenas held the Falklands, "close to their hearts." He reminded his listeners that first flocks of sheep, which formed the foundation of the successful sheep farming industry in Southern Chile came from the Falkland Islands.

In his role as International Relations Manager, for the Clinica Magallanes Mr Rees emphasised the first-class medical facilities available in Punta Arenas, just an hour and a half away from the Falklands.

John Rees and H E the Governor Nigel Haywood

Honorary Consul in Punta Arenas since January 1992 Mr Rees was awarded the MBE for his services in 2009.

Mr Rees is accompanied by the Clinica Magallanes's Commercial Executive, Ana Maria Romero, and has been holding talks with the staff at KEMH and the Director of Health, David Jenkins, as well as visiting Mount Pleasant to view the medi-vac provisions there.

As part of the discussion relating to the civil and military medical links, Mr Rees and Ms Romero briefed local medical authorities about a new large extension to the clinic in Punta Arenas. This will be opening in April.

This evening, Friday, from 6.30, Mr Rees is inviting former patients of the clinic to meet him for an informal get-together at the Narrows Bar.

— Court news — Bail extended

HAVING already appeared in court on two occasions since February 15, when he was initially charged with possession of an offensive weapon in a public place, Mr James Lang was in court again on Wednesday to plead guilty to the original charge and four others: one of assault by beating committed on February 8, and three of making threats to kill committed on February 13 in Deano's Bar, the West Store Car park and the FIC's Electrical store, respectively.

At the request of Mr Lang's attorney, Mr Keith Watson, sentencing was deferred until May 13 in order for the preparation of a report on Mr Lang by the Social Welfare Service. Mr Watson also presented two medical reports to the court.

Mr Lang's bail was extended on the existing conditions.

Licence refusal

AN application for the reinstatement of his driving licence was refused to Mr Maverick Bowers of MPA in the Magistrates Court on Monday. As was his entitlement under the Road Traffic Ordinance, Mr Bowers was appealing against a two-year driving ban imposed on January 11, 2012, when he had pleaded guilty to being in charge of a motor vehicle, while three times over the legal limit for alcohol.

Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley, said that while Mr Bowers had presented himself well in court and could be given credit for an early guilty plea at the time of the offence as well as for having had no previous convictions, drink driving was, "a scourge," which it was the court's duty to discourage.

He advised Mr Bowers that were he to apply again in three months time, he might find that a more lenient view could be taken.

No Insurance

PATRICIO Andres Balladares, who works at the Malvina House Hotel in Stanley, was fined £300, ordered to pay £85 prosecution costs and had his driving licence endorsed after pleading guilty in the Magistrates Court on Monday to driving a vehicle without valid insurance.

The court was told that Mr Balladares, who was driving on a provisional licence and accompanied by a qualified driver, was stopped by the police on December 8, 2012, because of a broken headlight on his Citroen car. Prosecuting counsel Ms Alison Inglis told the court that the delay in bringing Mr Balladares to court was a result of an incomplete report submitted to the Attorney General's Chambers by a police constable who had then gone on leave for eight weeks.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

It is encouraging to see the number of positive reactions to the referendum. The negative one from Argentina was entirely predictable. Since logic plays no part in their arguments it is not surprising that the only response from their president is to call us 'squatters' and put the new pope in a potentially embarrassing position by calling for his support.

Congratulations on the result and the way the referendum was conducted have come from well wishers as far afield as Bulgaria from Lyubomir Ivanov who compiled and published an interesting booklet on the Islands. Another was a new contact, Carlos Detieff, a descendent of one of the early Falklands families who grew up and works in Chile and has been following recent events.

This week we have routine meetings, some portfolio meetings, some oil related briefings and by the end of the week should be busy reading all the budget information prior to next week's meetings. This budget will be even more difficult than previous ones because of the increasing and often conflicting demands linked with some pretty unrealistic expectations. I'm hoping someone allows the fact that this is an election year to affect their judgement. It will be some years before we see real oil revenues and I fear that public expectation in some quarters would happily end it before we get it. We are in a relatively strong financial position now because of a cautious approach in the past but that could quickly unravel if we were to attempt to meet demands, some from surprising quarters, that we end money in ways that are not sustainable.

In the next few years have the potential to secure the long term future of the country but there is a mass of preparatory ground work to be done to ensure that that oil industry and all it brings with it is well managed to the benefit, and to the detriment of the population. Careful investment in the regulatory structures is essential as is some infrastructure development. We must look to the long term, not quick fixes that may cause multiple future problems.

CFK's inconsistent policies on the Falklands complains Clarín

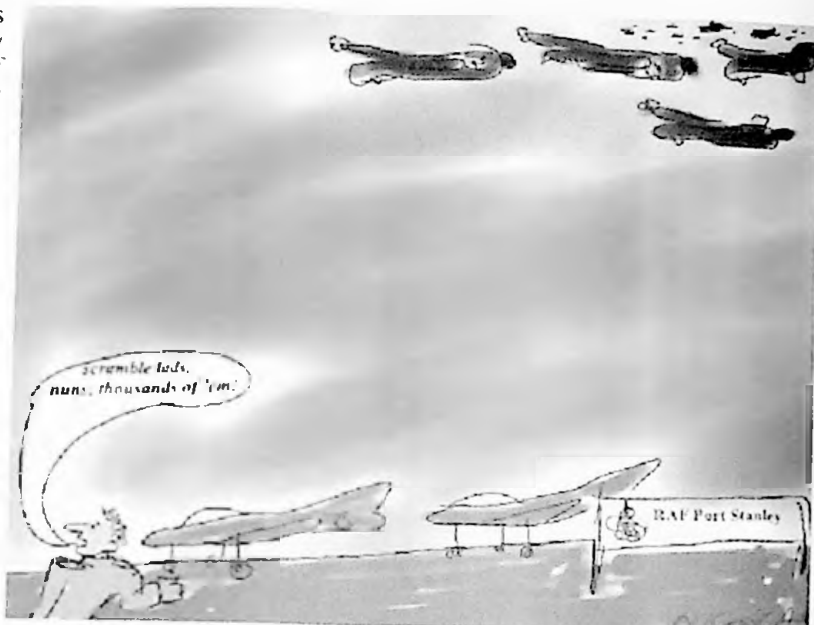

THE Clarín newspaper in Buenos Aires this week carried a story which illustrated the tendency of all governments, but especially that of Argentina, not to be entirely consistent in its application of policies.

The article, by frequent visitor to the Falklands, Natasha Niebieskikwiat, began by remarking on how Argentina's President, Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner had taken the whole sovereignty question to new extremes when she asked newly-elected Pope Francis to act as an intermediary in her country's dispute with Great Britain.

According to the journalist, the Argentine Government has "sought channels by which to pressure Britain involving its Foreign Ministry, its Agricultural and Fisheries Ministry, its Ministry of Planning and even its armed forces in imposing shipping controls in the South Atlantic."

Clearly, however, the Argentine Federal Ministry of Finance (AFIP) had been left off the list of the ministries to be recruited in the anti-Falklands effort.

While, according to the official Argentine Government view of things the Falklands or Islas Malvinas are part of Argentina, Scramble lads - nuns thousands of them. Created by Journal, Private Eye and Readers Digest cartoonist Nick Whitmore for PN.

AFIP seems to regard the Islands as a foreign destination and subjects would-be travellers here to the same restrictions that apply to any foreign destination.

Argentines wishing to travel abroad have to apply for a limited quota of dollars and to pay a premium which is now going up from 15 to 20 percent.

Ms Niebieskikwiat, who was in the Falklands to cover the recent referendum complains that even without the surcharge, the amount of foreign currency allowed is insufficient to cover the high costs incurred in the Falklands, and writes that there is what might be regarded as a 'double-whammy' in that the Islands do not even appear in the list of countries issued by the agencies which supply foreign currency.

In consequence of this omission, it is necessary for the would-be Argentine traveller here to make the shameful declaration that he or she is travelling not to the Islas Malvinas or even the Falkland Islands, but to the United Kingdom.

The article concludes with some good news.

Although the Islands are as expensive for the international tourist as they are for locals, according to the writer, Argentina's current high rate of inflation means that some articles are cheaper in our supermarkets than in Argentina.

Cartoonist Nick

A friend of Falklands lawyer Keith Watson, cartoonist Nick Whitmore who provides a daily cartoon for a Newcastle newspaper The Journal - something he has done since 2006 - has also had his work appear in the Spectator magazine, Reader's Digest and Private Eye.

Nick provided the cartoon above free of charge; our thanks to him for his generosity.

He is quoted as saying that like most cartoonists he is inclined to be grumpy: "If cartoonists ever have the misfortune to get together, they aren't funny, they're just cross. The collective name for a group of cartoonists is a 'grumble'."

Business and baking creates cash for Red Nose Day at Camp Schools

Kia, Jose and Layla at Goose Green School

CHILDREN at Goose Green and North Arm schools combined recently in a Red Nose Day project which tested their baking abilities and their business skills.

Last Friday our Goose Green correspondent Kia told Penguin News, how she and seven fellow pupils donned pyjamas, painted their faces and arranged their hair in weird and wonderful ways to sell cakes for charity at the Goose Green store.

The range of baking sold included cherry and chocolate cakes, muffins, biscuits and cup cakes, all baked by the children at the school. Not surprisingly they all sold out very quickly leaving the group with a profit of £35 to send to Comic Relief.

The five pupils at North Arm School, who had been in consultation with their Goose Green colleagues through the week, did the same, and the sale of their baking raised £22.56.

North Arm Teacher Clare with Marco, Elisha, Beth, Jessica and Adam

Adam selling cakes at North Arm

Goose Green teacher, Jackie Adams told Penguin News that though part of the purpose of the event was to have fun and to raise money for Comic relief, it was also a business project.

Goose Green Year 6 pupil and obvious future business wizard, Layla, ran the project, producing spread sheets on the computer to record income, costs and, of course, profit.

Jay Gamble and Charlie

1. What is your most prized possession? It was my Man United season ticket but I gave that up before coming here.

2. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with? Sir David Attenborough and George Best, no second guesses to who I'd be having the cup of tea with!

3. If you had a motto, what would it be? Be true to yourself...my mum has always said it and it has always made sense to me.

4. What is your most embarrassing or happiest moment? There are far too many embarrassing moments to choose but my happiest would be Man United winning the treble in 1999 (Charlie will kill me for saying that!).

5. If you could set up a business in the Falklands what would it be? It would have to be a curry house; I think it would go down a treat.

6. What in your everyday life drives you crazy? Bad manners really frustrate me; which I haven't really experienced since moving to the Falkland Islands.

7. Who would you make Governor of the Falklands? Sir Alex Ferguson, I don't think he'd manage to run the marathon though!

8. What is your favourite TV programme (and why)? I'm Alan Partridge, because no matter how many times I watch it I laugh and you can't match his cringe worthiness.

9. What song makes you feel happy (or sad) when you hear it? Ten Storey Love Song - The Stone Roses is a song I have fond memories of.

Jay arrived in the Falkland Islands with his partner Charlie six weeks ago and is contracted as a Statistics & Performance Officer in the Policy Unit for two years. He is currently working on finalising and publishing the complete F1 Census report before moving on to a number of different projects within the Policy Unit. He has previously worked as an analyst for Greater Manchester Police and Local Government in Manchester. He has thoroughly enjoyed his time in the Falklands so far and looks forward to the next two years. He is an avid sports fan (especially football) but also enjoys photography (still a complete novice) and getting outdoors.

Acorns thanks for community support

Thelma Ferguson and Marge Hayward at Acorns with benefactors Cathy Bowers, Marlene Short (Shorty's Diner) and Sheila Stewart (Argos)

COMMUNITY group Acorns expressed their gratitude to a number of benefactors this week for the gift of sixteen new chairs for use in the King Edward Memorial VII Hospital Day Centre.

Trustee Sharon Middleton explained to those assembled at a tea held at the Day Centre that the group had been active for fourteen years and was going from, "strength to strength," primarily due to the great deal of help from the community in terms of both donations and the provision of entertainment in the form of talks and lectures. Outings are also on offer courtesy of the Red Bus purchased for the group by the Maud Sallis Trust. The group meets three times a week.

Sue Howatt, who organised the purchase and delivery of the chairs explained that the group were in need of vinyl high backed comfortable chairs as well as lower ones without arms for less able members of Acorns.

Mrs Howatt said South Atlantic Trading Ltd made no charge for freighting the chairs to the Falklands, which were paid for by donations from Fortuna, Argos, Kelper Stores, Shorty's Diner, the Maud Sallis Trust Fund, Yvonne Alazia, Cathy Bowers, Heather Finlayson, Winnie Miranda and Margaret Knight.

Mrs Middleton offered her heartfelt thanks to the Falkland Islands community for all its support of the group.

Why 25 mph on one section

WHEN Stanley Airport commenced operations in November 1977 there was a single lane tarmac road joining it to Stanley with a 20 mph speed limit over the whole length of the road. Some years later, following considerable repairs, and widening of the road the speed limit was raised to 40 mph again over its entire length.

My question now is why has a 25 mph speed sign been erected at the last section of the road, that is, from the turn off to Surf Bay on to the airport. This section of road is to all intents and purposes quite safe hence the original decision to introduce a 40 mph speed limit at least to the car park at the airport.

Perhaps the appropriate authorities who decided on this reduced new speed limit could please explain why.

Marc says thanks to Islanders

I WOULD like to use your letters page, if I may, to thank everyone connected to my recent visit to the Falkland Islands as an entertainer on a Shackleton Scholarship.

During my five weeks there I performed on 33 separate occasions, to an estimated total of around 800 people, and had a wonderful time with some of the most enthusiastic and appreciative audiences I've ever had. Without exception, Islanders were amazingly friendly, welcoming and generous, and I made countless new friends.

In particular, I'd like to thank my hosts Richard Lewis and Falklands Conservation, my Shackleton sponsor Kerri Jamieson and Brian, Clare and Ben, Corina, David, Liz and Jock at FIRS, Julie and Lesley at Bittersweet, Andi and Matthew, Critta, Norma, along with others too numerous to name whose help and hospitality

I enjoyed. I very much look forward to more visits in the future.

Open letter to Argentina

THE world is a very small place. When meeting a stranger, many of us identify ourselves by our nationality. Our home and where it stands are important to us. It gives us a sense of place, individuality, security, pride; a national identity.

A few hundred years ago the entire South American continent was in turmoil. Movements and conquests were taking place from Venezuela to Tierra del Fuego. Nobody living in the Falklands had been there long enough, for generations, to give themselves a national identity. Those days are gone; empire has gone, but the Falkland does have a culturally diverse population, who have made it their home.

Argentinians have their own homes, country and security and a national identity that encompasses the tango, Iguazu, gauchos, mountains, various industries from oil to cattle, deserts, lakes and estancias. You have a national identity to be proud of. Nobody is trying to take it from you. It belongs to the Argentinians.

Geographically we may be an anomaly, but anomalies make for a more interesting and diverse world.

Very recently we chose, almost unanimously to be British Falkland Islanders. That is our national identity. Please respect it as we respect yours.

Help with a family history

WHILE in Santiago recently I met a lovely girl during my physio sessions called Doreen Morrison whose parents live in Punta Arenas. During our chats she told me some of her family history which originated from the Falklands. She had no idea if there were any relatives here as she knew very little of her family history.

Her grandfather Roy Walter Morrison left the Islands as a small boy with his parents and four sisters. Walter's mother was a Clarke. Doreen does not know what year they went to Chile, possibly in the 20/30s. They became farmers. Walter was sent to boarding school in England and returned to Punta when he was 17 years old. He married a Chilean girl.

If you think Doreen is a branch of your family could you please contact me on telephone number 21393 or I can give you her email address.

Monument video lost

DURING the visit of the Celebrity Infinity on February 26, a couple from Oban in Scotland came especially to visit the Liberation Monument to take a video of the husband playing the bag pipes.

They were good friends of Marine Gordon MacPherson who was killed during the battle for Two Sisters on June 11-12 June 1982. Readers may recall that Gordon's brother together with Mike Cole, ex RM who also took part in the Two Sisters battle, and Trevor Law (PSI FIDE) yomped from Port San Carlos to Stanley during May last year.

Unfortunately during the couples' journey back home to Scotland they lost their tablet in Rio and they have asked me (I took them around on 26 February) if anyone had also taken a video of this event and if so could they please get in touch with me if they are willing to provide a copy for Gordon's relations back in Oban. You can contact me on telephone 21402 or e-mail gmcheek@horizon.co.fk.

Many thanks

Proud to be part of it says veteran

WE would like to thank all the wonderful people we have had the privilege to meet during the last week, especially: Ellen and Gary from SAMA (82) Ady and Lisa Lowe and their family, Patrick Watts, Tom, Alva and Olaf Keane, Gloria Anderson and Kris Thorson, Barry, Len, Dick, Nobby and all our police colleagues and our new friends from the Stanley Arms. This was my first visit to the Islands since 1982; we arrived on referendum day and I was overcome with pride that in a small way I am part of the Islands staying British, which has helped me a great deal.

All our love

Referendum an act of value say Uruguayan Parliamentarians

"I WAS surprised that such a small community with so few human resources to organise an electoral act did things so well, so properly, in conformity with international standards. This was a demonstration of a desire that this should be an act of value, not only in terms of its effects in the Falklands themselves, but also for the international image of a legitimate process."

This was the opinion of Uruguayan parliamentarian Jaime Mario Trobo, who with his colleague and fellow parliamentarian José Carlos Cardoso, was in the Falklands to witness the referendum on March 10 and 11.

Mr Trobo, who is President of the Commission for International Affairs of the Lower Chamber and Coordinator of the Secretary of International Relations of the opposition National Party was part of the team of international observers assembled for the Falkland Islands Government by Canamend and Mr Cardoso, who is President of the Uruguayan Parliament's Agriculture, Livestock and Fisheries Committee and a former Minister of Education, was present as an independent observer.

Asked why he had come to the Islands, Mr Trobo said that his first purpose was to witness a democratic process in action through the exercise of a free vote, but his secondary motivation was to gain a deeper understanding of a community which despite being very close to his own country, was not really sufficiently well known there.

Both parliamentarians had faced some opposition to their visit to the Islands, including from a government minister, Mr Trobo said, but this did not worry them because they were freely autonomous and wanted to learn more about the sovereignty claim in respect of which their party in Uruguay has taken a position. The important thing in their view was that a group of people were participating in a democratic exercise, regardless of their nationality or political persuasion.

As observers, Mr Trobo said that they had witnessed all aspects of the referendum. Their first concern had been the formal legal framework by means of which the citizens could express their views freely in a referendum. They were happy that the established forms and procedures were of an internationally acceptable standard and also that their practical application met the standards set. They had observed how easy it was for citizens to exercise their right to vote, the behaviour of the referendum officials, the casting of votes, the security of the ballot boxes, and finally the counting of the votes.

Mr Trobo concluded, "We were able to observe that the process was perfectly in conformity with established international standards."

"We can say with absolute independence and regardless of the result, that this has been an exemplary civic act which we recognise as having been properly carried out."

Reindeer eradication first phase completed

THE Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) has announced the completion of the first phase of the eradication of reindeer from the island of South Georgia. The first phase of the project, which ran throughout January and February 2013, saw the removal of over 1900 animals from the Busen area (one of two peninsulas on South Georgia that were inhabited by reindeer).

Norwegian whalers introduced the reindeer to two parts of the island in the early 1900s and Norwegian expertise has been instrumental in their demise. Reindeer numbers increased after whaling ceased in the mid-1960s and they have had a devastating impact on the island's vegetation, with knock-on effects on native bird species.

In January and February 2013 a group of Norwegian experts, including indigenous Sami herders and expert marksmen, joined GSGSSI staff to undertake the £500,000 first phase. Depending on the terrain, one of two methodologies was utilised. In central areas, the team of Sami reindeer experts gathered the reindeer into a corral where they were humanely killed under veterinary supervision. In outlying areas, where the terrain meant it was not possible to herd animals, animals were shot by experienced marksmen from the Norwegian Nature Inspectorate (SNO). Meat was recovered from approximately half of all animals that were killed, and proceeds from the sale of the meat will partially offset some of the costs of the eradication.

Small numbers of reindeer may have been missed by the operation, but are likely to be spotted from South Georgia Heritage Trust helicopters that are now dropping rat bait over the Busen area. Skilled marksmen will shoot any remaining reindeer that are spotted.

In parallel with the removal of reindeer, several scientific research projects were undertaken, including the establishment of long-term monitoring programmes of plants, birds and invertebrates to track the recovery of the island's systems after the eradication.

In addition to the work on the Busen area, the SNO marksmen made a start on the larger Barfl Peninsula and shot over 1500 animals from remote locations. It is thought that over 1500 animals remain in the Barfl area and this work will be completed in January and February 2014.

GSGSSI CEO Martin Collins, who was on the island overseeing the project, said: "The combination of reindeer and rat eradication will help return South Georgia to a more natural state."

"We expect to see a rapid recovery in vegetation, invertebrate populations and, in particular, ground nesting birds."

Marathon triumph for RAF's Van Kints

THE RAF's Andrew Van Kints this year claimed the title of winner of the Standard Chartered Stanley Marathon, in an impressive time of 2:51:43, some distance ahead of second placed runner Marcelo De Bernadis in 3:03:01. While Van Kints was new to the Falklands marathon De Bernadis from Argentina has completed it on a number of occasions, last year in 02:55:06.

In third place and also representing the British Forces at Mount Pleasant Complex (MPC) Benjamin Shepherd took third in 3:05:17.

While long time Falklands marathon runner Hugh Marsden did not make it back from South Georgia in time to run, honour was upheld by his partner Dawn Teed who took first place in the Women's Open in a time of 3:50:24. Rebecca Frostick of MPC was second (3:54:00) and Stanley resident Lynsey Sutcliffe came in third (4:32:22). The Challenge Trophy for the first Falklands-born runner was taken by Richard Short in 3:59:16 and the British Forces South Atlantic Inter-Service Trophy and Team Relay was won by the team Conmael (2:56:44 a course record for the Inter-Service Trophy).

Ben, Colin, Luke and Rob of MPC were second in the team relay (2:57:46) and Mercian third in (2:58:28). The Falkland Islands Football Team managed a creditable fourth place in 3:01:27.

The 45 runners were blessed with sunshine and relatively low winds this year, although still enough to add the traditional Falklands battle against the breeze.

Earlier in the day the 3k Fun Fun also provided an excellent spectacle with 36 participants. Michael Goodwin was first junior male (0:13:54) with Jack Alazia second (0:13:56) and Shaun East third (0:14:05). Hazel Fowmes took the Junior Female Open Race (0:18:49) Jessica Cooper second (0:19:44) and Emma-Jayne Burston third (0:20:45).

In the Senior Open, Mark Tucker completed the course in 0:18:08, with Hayley Owen second in 0:18:09 and Yanni Anastasiadis in 0:18:10.

All money raised from the Standard Chartered Bank Marathon will as always be donated to the charity Seeing is Believing. Bank Manager Binoy Karia was uncertain of the exact amount raised at the time but thought it would be in the region of £10,000.

HE the Governor Nigel Haywood presenting the prizes, who also ran the marathon itself, said it was amazing that the Falklands had been able to organise three such large events in such a short time: the CPA conference, the referendum and the marathon. These events involving as they did so many people, were of great credit to the Falkland Islands community.

Inconsistent and flawed

Remarks on Prof. Peter Willetts' Stanley lecture and SAC paper

AUTHOR of the following piece, Dr Lyubomir Ivanov gave a public lecture in the Falklands in 2003. He subsequently wrote up that lecture into a wider paper called 'The Future of the Falkland Islands and Its People', consisting of some 90 pages. Dr Ivanov has been the Chair of the Section of Logic Institute of Mathematics and Informatics, Bulgarian Academy of Sciences since 1999 and has been an advisor to the Minister of Foreign Affairs since 2001. His qualifications and associations are too lengthy to include however information can be found at http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lyubomir_Ivanov_\(explorer\)) with Britain." – Who says there will be no further evolution in that relationship? And why association with faraway Canada and not with Britain which, apart from its strong historical and modern links with the Falklands, is anyway present in the South Atlantic (South Georgia, Saint Helena etc.) and has vested interests in adjacent Antarctica? As for the link to the Americas, do Curaçao or French Guiana have it without being associated with any American country?

"Applying this to the Falklands, self-determination means choosing to be independent or to integrate with Argentina or to integrate with Britain or to have full self-government in association with any country that agrees to offer support with external relations." – The UN Fourth option is once again missing, and what about defence? As reminded by Willetts, free association option "means full internal self-government, with another government being responsible for defence and foreign affairs." Presently the Falklands security and defence are guaranteed by Britain, one of the few world powers that can do that effectively (as demonstrated by the Falklands War). There are a handful of other countries with such military capabilities like the US, Russia, France, China or India, which however have no rationale for providing similar protection. Notably, Canada is not among them; who is to guarantee the Falklands security and defence under the Willetts 'distributed sovereignty' arrangements? What happens if, say, one day Argentina establishes a military outpost on the Falklands like they did it in 1976 on Thule Island in the South Sandwich Islands?

In his public lecture Willetts conveniently skips some key details of his 'distributed sovereignty' proposal presented in his recent South Atlantic Council paper "Distributed sovereignty and the Falkland Islands (Malvinas) dispute." Here are but a few:

"... sovereignty over fishing in the whole eco-system being transferred to a multi-country fishing regime for the South-West Atlantic region." – What happens if some future Argentine government gets frustrated by such an arrangement and starts issuing fishing licenses unilaterally?

"Hydrocarbons will not be developed solely under the authority of the FIG and the UK, because they will need participation by a variety of TNCs." – So TNCs already do participate under FIG authority and UK protection, with no particular need for third countries involvement.

"It is very difficult to imagine commercial hydrocarbon extraction being practical without the large companies having significant facilities both on the Islands and on the South American mainland." – Oil extraction in the much harsher and remote Antarctic environment is considered viable by both analysts and oil industry, so this reservation seems ill-founded.

"...the Islanders cannot indefinitely appeal to the right to self-determination without acknowledging that, at the UN, self-determination means making a positive choice in favour of some new non-colonial status, embodied in a new non-colonial constitution." – In addition to the already pointed out abuse of the concept of 'colony,' this statement attempts to constrain self-determination in contradiction to the UN Fourth option of decolonisation.

"As soon as we consider the claims made by the Argentine and the British governments, it is clear that they give different content to sovereignty. The Argentine government always argues about territory and the British government always argues about the right of the Islanders to self-determination." – Yes, they do give different content albeit not to sovereignty but to the sovereignty dispute, which is not the same. Britain does not separate people from their territory, something that Argentina would like to see and Willetts envisages.

Willetts suggests that "the British could agree that the land belongs to Argentina." – Once agreed (by the Falkland Islanders, it's not up to the British to do so), that would be the end to the Islanders self-determination. The proposed 'distributed sovereignty' with the land belonging to Argentina would be no longer under Falkland Islanders control. The rest of Willetts' 'sovereignty distribution' is mainly camouflage of temporary and transient nature.

Indeed, the core of self-determination lies in the ability to decide how sovereignty is exercised, including the right to change one's mind in that respect in the future. What Willetts actually proposes is that the Falkland Islanders disrupt their process of ongoing political development and nation building, and effectively relinquish their self-determination rights. In other words, the Islanders are invited to renounce their birth right.

Flagship Shackleton Scholarship worth £10,000

To mark the anniversary, the Shackleton Scholarship Fund is offering a 'flagship' scholarship worth £10,000 for research in the natural or social sciences of relevance to the countries of the South Atlantic, in particular the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and the British Antarctic Territories.

Commenting on the announcement, His Excellency the Governor Nigel Haywood, and Chair of the Fund's committee in Stanley said: "The Shackleton Scholarship fund has always been a considerable asset in encouraging serious academic study in the South Atlantic. This Centenary Scholarship is a very welcome step on the part of the trustees to offer the opportunity for a high-impact academic study which will be a fitting tribute to the spirit of Shackleton and his expedition in his centenary year."

Professor David Walton, Editor-in-Chief of the international journal Antarctic Science, who is a member of the Fund's committee in London said: "We believe this special centenary scholarship will be sufficient to fund serious research of a calibre to ensure publication after peer-review by an international science journal, marking our continuing quest to understand Antarctica and the surrounding countries, begun so many years ago."

Applications from individuals or teams of research workers from any country should be made to the Funds website www.shackletonfund.org by September 15, 2013. A decision will be announced in November 2013.

The Shackleton Scholarship Fund was set up in 1995 to commemorate the lives of the explorer Sir Ernest Shackleton and his son Edward, Lord Shackleton, statesman and friend of the Falkland Islands. In a normal year it spends around £12,000 on about five academic scholarships and awards to improve the quality of life of the Falkland Islands.

We are conscious that we have spoken to many of you in the past, however please call again, as frankly since the .22 ran out we have lost track of who is chasing what. There will be no commitment to your order until such time as we have our ducks all lined up with the MOD, however we are just trying to see if there is enough requirement to justify a special shipment. Please call Steve on 55632 or e-mail as above for more info.

Funding for police training

STANDING Finance Committee yesterday agreed additional funding of £22,100 to temporarily employ two additional trained police officers to release four untrained police officers from duty so that they can be trained.

It was believed however that funding might be found within the existing training budget.

The funding will be used to employ two recently retired UK police officers for a period of two months.

The Royal Falkland Islands Police retains 12 police constables but of those, four are totally untrained and four are unavailable for duty due to one suspension, two on prison duties and one on long-term light duties.

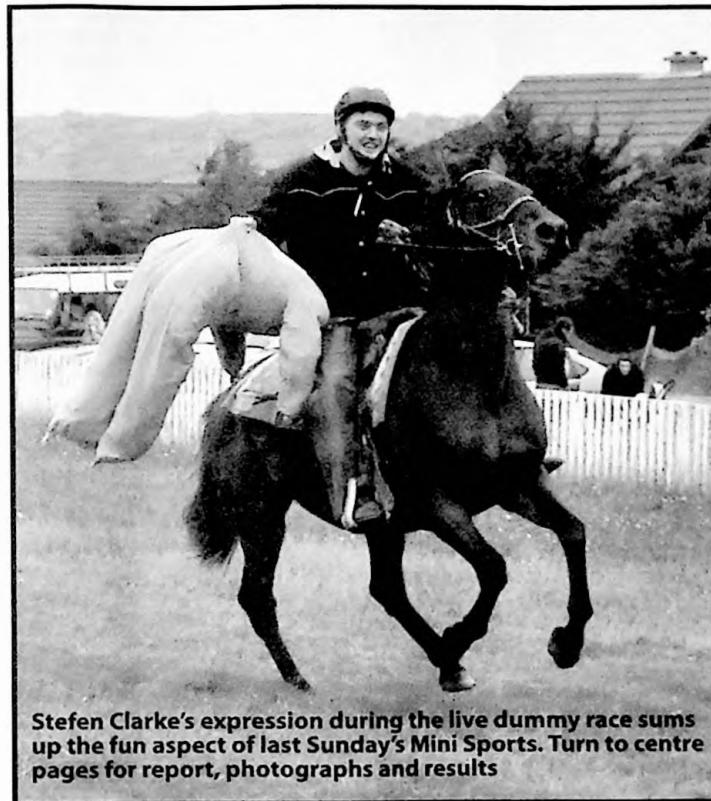

According to a paper placed before SFC by Director of Emergency Services and Chief Police Officer Barry Marsden, "Of the remaining four trained officers, each one needs to use some of their leave, as they are showing fatigue from doing so many duties and carrying heavy work loads."

He noted that the supervisors, managers and even the Director of Emergency Services have been, "plugging patrol gaps for the past three months but this too is unsustainable as it detracts them from their primary role and is an ineffective use of resources."

"The RFIP Reserve Officers tend to work for FIG and are not available during weekdays and other Reserve Officers are no longer available due to personal reasons."

"The result is that three trained police constables are trying to run a 24 / 7 service until the recruits can be trained."

"The ideal solution would be to abstract the four untrained officers as quickly as possible to complete a six week basic probationer course plus conduct a two week ABE / FLO course which has been recommended as a result of a recent complicated child abuse investigation."

Wrong man in the dock says Senior Magistrate

AT the conclusion of a trial in the Magistrates Criminal Court on Tuesday, Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley said that he believed the wrong man was in the dock and asked why other people involved in the case had not been charged.

Serving as an officer in the Royal Falkland Islands Police, Mr Tom Clarke, had faced four charges of assault alleged to have occurred on the nights of November 17 and 23.

The Senior Magistrate, who was accompanied on the bench by justices of the peace, Phyl Rendell and Anton Livermore, said that due to what he described as incoherent, conflicting and weak evidence offered by witnesses, who in at least two cases had confessed to being drunk at the time, he found that Mr Clarke had no case to answer in each of the charges made against him.

There were, said the Senior Magistrate, a number of worrying aspects to the case, not least that Mr Clarke was the only person to have been charged out of a number of persons arrested in the course of what one police witness had described as the worst situation on the street encountered in 14 years of weekend duty.

Once again, in Mr Gumsley's opinion, there had been last minute evidence introduced in a case which had taken an unacceptably long time to come to court.

Mr Gumsley praised Chief Inspector McGill for taking responsibility for delays which had previously been publicly criticised. He said that the court would not hesitate to criticise the police if it was in the public interest, but was aware that they had a difficult job which the court would support when it was done properly.

He was sure that the police as individuals were keen to receive further training which was essential if they and others were not to be put at risk, but evidence offered in court indicated that police training had been systematically reduced in recent years.

Six more channels for KTV

STANLEY company KTV have expanded their digital cable service to include six more channels in addition to the 26 already available on their network.

Speaking on behalf of the company Sharon Zuvic told Penguin News: "Recent investments also allow for the expansion of up to 50 plus channels when possible."

The six additional channels included in Pack 2, along with FITV, BBC Entertainment and BBC HD includes comedy and films channel TBS and real life action channel TruTV, both of which were already on the service from last week. This week will include four more channels from the Discovery group: Discovery Home and Health, Discovery Travel and Living, Discovery Animal Planet and will introduce its third 24/7 children's educational channel: Discovery Kids.

Happily for viewers there are currently no plans at this time to amend the present subscription fees. "and indeed KTV has always managed to be consistent with its prices," said Mrs Zuvic.

She added: "As our subscriber base grows, we have and will continue to add more channels."

Subscribers may have to reload the new channels to receive, if they do not appear automatically.

Where subscribers have compatible TV sets they will also have access to High Definition (HD). This is already available on BBC HD channel on Pack 2 explained Mrs Zuvic.

She added: "In the future we envisage most channels if not all, converting to the HD signal and be assured, we will be ready for it when it happens."

Some smart cards have already been installed and subscribers are happy with them said Mrs Zuvic.

KTV will be carrying out the changes where possible and when time permits.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

LISTENING to the fascinating and very touching eulogy to the late June McPhee at her funeral at the Tabernacle last Friday (see page 6) including the story of her becoming a teacher at the age of 16, often only a year older than some of her pupils, I was struck, as I so often am, at what an alluring, and of course pioneering social history the Falkland Islands' possesses.

A few hours later at the gathering hosted by the McPhee family, hardly surprisingly the historical revelations continued and not only about the remarkable lady herself.

At one point I happened to be chatting to the military padre, a Scots-woman, who explained that she was related to a man called Charlie Robertson. Charlie (not of the Port Stephens Robertsons) the Falklands older generation might recall, was the man hired to dig hundreds of drainage 'buffalo' ditches, primarily in the soggy land of the north camp.

Having in turn briefly mentioned my grandmother, Maud Watson, to the padre, due to her having been a Tabernacle lady herself, I will admit to a sudden amused thought: that while my deeply religious Grandmother probably never in her entire life took the Lord's name in vain, on one of her rare trips as a passenger overland to my parents farm, and suffering the crisscrossing, bumping and bogging in countless muddy buffalo ditches, I'm fairly certain poor Charlie Robertson's name wouldn't have been awarded quite the same courtesy.

Although all of those little stories and reminders of Falklands yesteryear, were gifted in sad circumstance, for me personally it was a reminder that our Islands history is so much more than the constant bickering over its political past: a timely nudge that our history isn't wholly about who got here first, who expelled what and which treaty can still be considered valid. And after some months of expending energy chatting about just that with journalists and tweeters and even the occasional parliamentarian, it was a relief to remember that the part of the Falklands truly worthy of recollection and preservation isn't territorial wrangling but colourful, hard working, courageous and humorous people.

At the same time who could possibly deny Mrs Joyce Allan's conviction that somewhere out there right now are two feisty personalities: June and her late husband John, who will almost certainly be enjoying 'a right old political chinwag'.

FIG responds to Argentine lobbying of United Nations

THE Falkland Islands Government this week responded to a visit to the United Nations by the Argentine Foreign Minister.

Falkland Islands Assembly member Gavin Short said: "Last week two members of the Legislative Assembly, Sharon Halford and Mike Summers visited the United Nations in New York to discuss the results of the Falkland Islands referendum and to hand over a letter to the Secretary General.

"This letter reiterated that the Falkland Islands people have no wish to be governed by Argentina and that we value our constitutional links to the UK. It is a relationship founded on free choice.

"It is disappointing - though not surprising - that Mr Timerman seems so anxious to discredit our referendum. Suggestions by the Argentine Government that our referendum was "illegal" and that it contravenes UN resolutions, or that the Falkland Islanders are proscribed by the UN from discussions on the future of our Island home, are all absurd and untrue. Mr Timerman's frantic efforts to lobby the international community to ignore our voice strikes us here as the diplomacy of desperation.

"Having spoken so clearly in our recent referendum, it is not credible for anyone to pretend either that the Falkland Islands people do not exist or that we do not have the basic human and political rights to determine our own future. In a spirit of openness and a desire to engage with the international community, our letter also invited the Chair of the UN Special Committee on Decolonisation to visit the Falklands and to see for himself that our home is not a colonial relic but a vibrant twenty-first century democracy."

MLA Summers, MLA Hansen and MLA Halford's visit to the UN was part of a referendum results promotional tour of North America, Central American and Caribbean countries, that included meetings with UN Committee of 24 ambassadors, the US State Department and National Security Council.

For those without a compatible television, no need to panic, "as they will just continue using the decoders as before, so no need to rush out to buy a new TV set; you will not miss out on any of the services that we provide."

KTV Limited commenced broadcasting almost twenty years ago this year, "to offer an alternative and something different to the Government service," said Mrs Zuvic.

A privately owned company, it is funded entirely by subscriptions. KTV has also provided the BBC World Service broadcast via Radio Nova to FIRS and around the Islands, since September 1997.

Mrs Zuvic said: "The company would like to thank their subscribers, many of whom will remember the very beginning when KTV first started with just three channels: CNN International, TNT and Cartoon Network. Thanks to you and hard work and determination from us, KTV have managed to build the business up through subscriptions, today offering so much more choice."

BFBS

This week Falklands viewers were able to tune in to the new line up of BFBS TV channels. These included BBC 1, BBC 2/CBBC daytime, ITV, BFBS Extra/CBeebies daytime and Sky News Live.

South Georgia shipping

FIVE cruise ships visited South Georgia in the early part of 2013 as well as five yachts and two larger motor yachts. BAS vessels RRS Shackleton and RRS James Clark Ross also visited as did HMS Clyde. Two fishing trawlers were operating in South Georgia waters targeting icefish during February. As is usual for this species, catches have been variable. At the start catches were good, limited only by processing capacity of the vessel, and fish sizes were larger than usual.

A very different kind of posting

Commander British Forces Falkland Islands, Brigadier Bill Aldridge says farewell

PENGUIN News was the very first introduction to Falklands life for outgoing Commander British Forces Brigadier Aldridge.

From his home in Wiltshire he read about the personalities of the Islands, and became convinced that he would enjoy his two year posting which would span the thirtieth anniversary of the Falklands war, he told Penguin News work experience journalist (and his daughter) Phoebe Aldridge.

Later of course he also found that his tour would include the visit of the Duke of Kent, command of the future King of England, and the referendum on the Falkland Islands' political future.

Prior to his arrival the strong focus on the thirtieth anniversary had already begun and when asked what he remembered most about it his response was, "busy."

Meeting the constant flow of large numbers of veterans was a definite highlight for Brigadier Aldridge, and, he said, "listening to their stories and achievements was extremely humbling."

However, what really stood out, he said, was the extreme hospitality of Islanders; welcoming the veterans into their houses again and again.

The Brigadier reflected that the Falkland Islands was a different kind of posting to any other in many ways. In some respects, it seemed a harder job than a European tour. The distance and isolation from the UK can cause complications in terms of conducting both logistic and military operations. However, he enjoyed the fact that the Falklands was also a place where there was always a new skill to be learnt, or opportunity to be taken, whether it was peat cutting, sheep shearing, simply using wire gates or off-road driving.

Over his two year tour, the Brigadier said he had learnt many of those skills, adding: "Fishing has given me both an opportunity to appreciate the landscape, as well as a reason to explore and get away from MPA."

Measuring the microns of wool in a fleece and watching sheep shearing might not be the normal way to spend your weekends in the UK, however, some of his lasting memories of the Islands include attending events such as Camp Sports, Farmers' Week, or the Ram and Fleece Shows at Fox Bay and Fitzroy, where characters such as Critta Lee, Andrew Newman and the Knights first introduced him to such activities.

Events such as those are typical of the Falkland culture, so does he believe an oil industry might affect such traditions. "There will obviously be a lot of change," the Brigadier stated, but he hoped Islanders would steer this change the right way, "in order to continue the positives of the current way of life."

Asked what he would miss most about the Falklands, not surprisingly it was the hospitality and character of the people. From evenings at 'Fitzroy Social Club', through cups of tea with Stanley folk and Camp farmers alike, to standing at Fox Bay for Liberation, where it was so windy the band were in difficulty, only to see Keith Knight in a shirt with his sleeves rolled up - freezing.

Only a few months after the Brigadier arrived, two Falklands characters Paul Peck and Don Bonner were keen to give racing tips for the Boxing Day Races. "Not all of these bets however," said the Brigadier, "were entirely successful."

The Brigadier expressed the importance of recognising that although there were many highlights of the posting, there had also been significant challenges, including the practical demands of the fires over the Malo Hills. In that case, success was the result of the joint contribution of both the military and Islanders, all of whom were willing to take time and effort digging out the hot spots in the peat, and working in searing heat.

Speaking of the overwhelming 'yes' vote in the recent referendum the Brigadier commented that it was of course another example of 'Islanders' self-determination and their will to make anything happen. He said often the military were involved in local events, but in the case of the referendum, "it was right to stay away from what was a completely Falkland occasion."

As he prepared to leave the Islands for the last time, although Brigadier Aldridge said he had greatly appreciated his posting in the Falkland Islands, and enjoyed learning about lenticular clouds, parking a vehicle so the doors don't get blown off, and the fact that penguins don't just live on ice, he claimed he still didn't fully understand the geology behind stone runs.

Maybe he needs to come back...

Nightmare over for SAAS

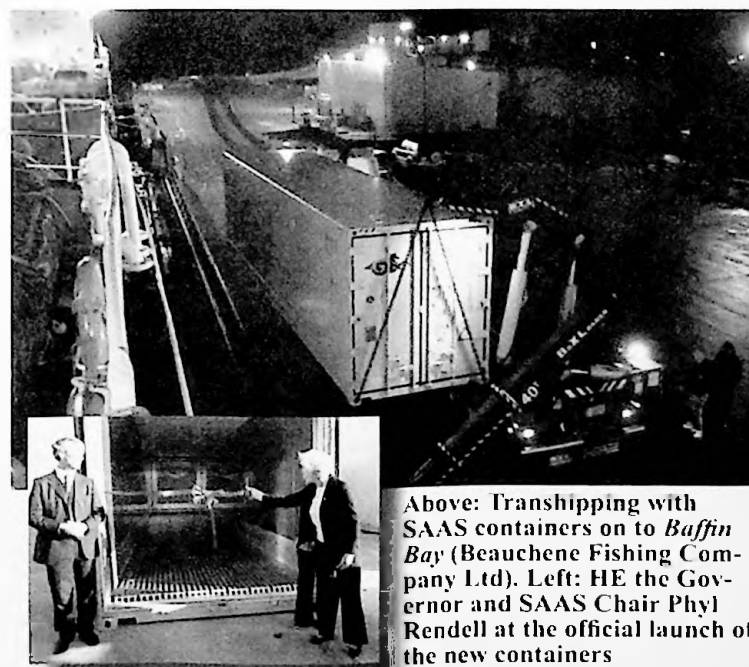

SOUTH American Atlantic Services Ltd (SAAS) has turned a "nightmare" into a going concern and is now over-target on imports, Director Hamish Wylie told customers and other invited guests at a reception at the SAAS offices last week.

The shipping company that has suffered years of interference from Argentina, resulting in containers being held up, plus ongoing difficulties, "with carriers," have launched a "new model" in terms of dealing with the issues they have faced.

This new approach has included dealing with the lack of yard space, being able to work on FI-PASS and the need for equipment, said Mr Wylie. He said the company had now reached the stage where nearly all of the issues had been addressed and they now able to, "provide a service to its customers," that offered a good price and was reliable and competitive.

SAAS Manager Eugene Hurly confirmed to Penguin News that the company will have 300 reefer boxes in total. The new ones arrived on March 17.

Mr Hurly said the reefer boxes, "will be used by the meat and fish exporters and for the import of fresh and frozen products. The regular containers are used for import and export of all other goods."

Mr Wylie also noted that the Falkland Islands Government (providers of the container park) and SAAS shareholders had given their full support and a great deal of money and effort to the company; one crucial for both the fishing and the agriculture industry.

He paid tribute to Mr Hurly who he said understood the industry and as such was able to guide customers.

Referendum misunderstood

A MEETING between British and Argentine members of parliament took place in Quito Ecuador in the margins of the 128th Meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union last week.

According to the Argentine Deputy, Mara Brawer, this was, "a conversation which was conducted in a very good tone, given the disparity of the positions of both sides."

Ms Brawer insisted that her country's position was, "not to impose sovereignty," although they wished to comply with the United Nations resolutions urging both sides to sit down to talk. The United Kingdom was not in her judgement complying with the UN resolution, though she emphasised out that in Quito there had been a, "meeting point," between the political delegations of both sides.

Ms Brawer insisted that by recognising themselves as British in the recent plebiscite, the citizens of the Falklands had ratified her government's position that there was no third party in the conflict between Argentina and Great Britain over the sovereignty of the Falklands.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

WITH full days of GPC, EXCO and then two days preliminary work on the budget this week is a very sedentary one. The life of an MLA is not a healthy one.

I've drawn the short straw this month as we appear to have a huge EXCO agenda and it is my turn to write the report. We do not customarily report on budget papers while they are still work in progress so I might have a few less items. The public will be able to get an inkling of the number and complexity of the oil related issues with which we are dealing with the release this week of the oil readiness checklist. There are some difficult decisions to be made and much of the advice we've commissioned needs to be digested to inform those decisions. All this is being fitted in around planned absences of groups of MLAs on various journeys to spread information about the Referendum.

Setting aside the oil related decisions we also have to deal with all the normal budget items which, as always, have to be weighed against each other taking into account the need for caution to maintain common sense strategies. Bids for new posts are always a conundrum because however convincing the justification they do almost inevitably contribute to an increase in the annual operating budget.

The first group of three MLAs returned last weekend and each had been well received in the numerous places they visited. Three more head off shortly and the last two in early April. We have to be imaginative to make best use of the extraordinary result from the Referendum. Like the writer of last week's editorial I've had some very odd press queries about the three 'no' votes. I've restated that it was a secret ballot and we live in a democracy, surely self evident from the whole exercise.

This week we say farewell to Brigadier and Mrs Aldridge. They will both be missed and Bill Aldridge will be a hard act to follow having worked hard to enhance the relationship with the civil community.

Focus of medical treatment overseas is 'what is clinically best for the patient'

WHAT is clinically best for the patient, is the primary focus in terms of medical treatment overseas for Falklands patients, according to a written answer to a question submitted to Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Asked if there were any plans to reduce the number of overseas referrals by improving facilities at the KEMH so that more procedures could be carried out in the Islands, it was noted that there was a "continual balancing act," undertaken at the weekly Medical Treatment Overseas (MTO) Chaired by the Chief Medical Officer (CMO).

Clinicians also attend who explain what the best clinical care options are for the patients brought before the meeting. "Consideration of estimated costs are part of these discussions but the primary focus is what is 'clinically best for the patient'."

The response said the MTO policy is continually updated and potential changes are raised at the Health and Medical Services Committee meetings, where appropriate, for wider discussion.

There is also a spreadsheet that identifies initial clinical information combined with financial estimates initiated at the MTO meeting and then reviewed after the MTO transfer. This is to ensure that the most appropriate clinical decisions were made, that estimated costs can be, "latterly married against actual costs and that a clear audit trail is available for later scrutiny if required."

As such reducing the number of overseas referrals, "should be seen therefore as a continual process of clinical assessment." The response notes that such assessment has to take account of a variety of ever-changing issues. These issues might include:

- The increasing reluctance of some clinical specialists visiting the Falklands to undertake invasive procedures that they may have been more comfortable to undertake in the past.

- More accurate but more complex investigations being required as international clinical guidelines change.

- That, as the patient population gets older and more obese, comorbidities requiring intervention will continue to increase.

- Patient referral to Chile versus UK: Patients are seen quickly in Chile, but within a private and highly investigative medical system. The subsistence costs are cheap, but medical expenses are high. The reverse is true in the UK. Every effort is made to ensure the cheapest route is taken for each individual patient where possible, however, a case by case approach is taken within the MTO process to allow for each patient to receive care that is appropriate for them, and this may not necessarily be the cheapest.

It goes on: "the number of overseas referrals are considered on a monthly basis and a comparator is drawn with the referral rates of the same period for the preceding year."

The answer also notes that within the last two years there has been an increasing number of specialist visits that have a focus of treating patients in the Falklands whenever possible and so reducing potential MTO costs.

A significant number of patients are still sent overseas for specialist tests and scans and these are deemed essential to confirm diagnosis or most appropriate treatment options. The urgency of such scans, their numbers and influence on patient management as well as costs are continually being considered both by the various clinicians but also by the Department of Health, where appropriate.

It notes that all clinicians, be they GPs or surgeons are working within, "a more litigious climate and therefore are becoming more risk adverse."

In the past, doctors may have treated without the detailed investigations now available to them, however in the modern day this approach is frowned upon.

Your questions answered

Q: Presented to Members of Legislative Assembly by a member of the public:

How is it decided what medical services should be subject to a charge and what should be provided free?

A: Provided by KEM Hospital via Gilbert House:

Providing a health service is an expensive proposition wherever it is delivered. There are a variety of models that can be used in running the most effective and efficient service, which are applied wherever possible.

For example, there have been arguments put forward that to run an efficient and effective health service there should be a minimum population size of 170K; the efficiencies relate to throughput of patients, skills and knowledge, training staff, shift patterns, etc. So, whatever the Falklands does we will not be in a position to run the most efficient service due to the small population size.

We therefore need to generate income wherever it is deemed appropriate. Such consideration is undertaken by clinical and health management staff, HMSC and sometimes public engagement and eventually Exco decision.

The jack-up barge and deck-mounted core drill machine on location in Port William

Getting to the bottom of Port William

AS part of the design process of the new port facility planned for Port William, port engineers require detailed information on the make-up of the sea bed and the rock structure below it. This is to assess the strength, formation, depth and type of load-bearing strata found in the location.

There are a number of surveys that inform the engineers of some of this information, such as hydrographic & geophysical surveys carried out by surface run vessels and the like, but there is really only one way of finding out what actually makes up the sea bed and what is below it, and that is to take core samples and look at it.

To do this requires what is described as, "an over-water deployable core drill rig, made up of a jack-up barge and deck-mounted core drill machine." That is the monster that was being constructed in the Visitor Centre car park during referendum week, which is currently out in Port William.

Engineers need to know what is below sea bed up to depths of 17m or so and this can take time to do.

The work currently being commissioned by the Falkland Islands Government in Port William involves taking between 19 and 22 core samples in likely locations where the port will go, covering a survey area approximately 750 metres by 1 km. Each sample will take between one and two days to obtain.

The works commenced on March 11 and despite a couple of days of bad weather to date, the operators, UK-based firm, Holequest, who are being overseen by FIG's appointed engineers, Arch-Henderson, are on target to complete by the end of second week in April.

Paul Higham, FIG's Programme Manager for oil-related infrastructure told Penguin News that he was very pleased with the progress made so far by the crew who are working twenty-four hour shifts, seven days a week. He reported that the quality of samples was good in most cases, and rock formations that are millions of years old were being exposed the further down the drilling reaches.

Samples of the rock will be sent back to the UK for analysis and ultimately result in a comprehensive report which engineers will use to inform them of the type of sub-sea structure required for the port.

Once the marine samples have been completed the intention is to dismantle the core drill rig and use it on land for similar land-based core samples. This will be carried out on the Port William side of the Navy Point peninsula. The jack-up barge will be sent back to the UK at this point unless another party wishes to use it.

Mr Higham stresses that this equipment is in great demand, so FIG is encouraging any other parties who wish to commission the rig and barge to come forward to book it as soon as possible, preferably before the first week in April.

FIG envisages that all priority field-based surveys in relation to the port, and the proposed access road, will be completed in May or early June 2013 and says that they are currently on target to achieve this.

New ensign for war grave Antelope honours the fallen

HMS ANTELOPE'S ensign has been reinstated by members of the Mount Pleasant Complex (MPC) Dive Club.

Over the weekend March 15-17, eight personnel, both military and civilian dived onto HMS Antelope to replace her ensign on the forward gun.

The vessel sank on May 24, 1982 with a member of the ship's crew and a bomb disposal expert on board, and is a designated war grave.

The aim of the dive was to survey the condition of the structure of the ship and more importantly, to reinstate the ensign.

The team, lead by Mandy Dawson and Capt Damien Gascoyne RA, who stayed in the self-catering lodge at Kingsford Valley Farm, San Carlos, were joined by Leading Hand Phil Owen, whose father was serving on the ship as a medic at the time she sank.

Phil conducted a brief service of remembrance from the surface before laying a wreath in tribute.

Phil, who stayed on the surface throughout, said afterwards: "It was an honour to lay a wreath on the war grave and I know my parents will be proud."

Lt Col Simon Browning, one of the support divers said: "The ship is in very good condition all things considered. When you brush away the silt from the superstructure, you can see the clean aluminium hull."

He said the main gun on the bow is easily distinguishable with its rounded turret and the barrel facing forward at an incline of 30°.

He added: "The Antelope is now resting on its port side with the main damage on the starboard side. Swimming along the length of the ship you can easily pick out the railings, port holes and super structure even though it's encrusted with marine life. Unfortunately the visibility was only about three metres and the water was vivid green with algae so it wasn't possible to take underwater photographs of large sections of the ship, nevertheless, it was a huge privilege to be part of this event."

Warrant Officer Chris York, an experienced wreck diver, said: "Over several dives and through the gloom we orientated ourselves to the ship and managed to locate the propellers at the stern; one is deep in the mud and the other part proud of the seabed. A real challenge and an amazing opportunity to dive a 1982 war ship."

Capt Damian Gascoyne one of the organisers added: "The organisation of this diving event was challenging but it was worth all the effort, it was a real honour to change the Ensign."

Remembering June McPhee

JUNE McPhee was born June Iris Sorenson on the 12 June 1928 to John and Ruth Sorenson.

June was the eldest of four children, who along with her siblings Johnny, Anita, and Jimmy spent their early years growing up on Bleaker Island, where her parents worked before eventually moving to Lively Island. Whilst June clearly enjoyed life on the farm with her family, education on the mainland soon beckoned, and at the age of nine June moved to Stanley to live with her grandmother in order to attend school on a full time basis.

It was during this time that June first demonstrated her feisty independent nature. Unfortunately, for June there was one particular boy that appeared to take great pleasure in bullying and teasing her, but not for long. The bullying and teasing continued for a while before June decided that enough was enough. So, one day in the middle of the playground, June delivered her very own form of swift justice to the offending individual: a swift and firm blow to the boy's nose left him in no doubt that June Sorenson was not a girl to be messed with. This side of June's nature might come as somewhat of a surprise to many of those who thought they knew her, but to her close family and friends this incident seemed to say everything you needed to know about June: that you could only push her so far!

However, in spite of this one incident June was to become known as someone who never wanted to inconvenience anyone. In fact, it is fair to say that if June felt she could sort things out for herself, then that's exactly what she would do; she was a woman with a strong inner strength who was more than prepared to fight her corner when and if required.

Fast forward several years, and it was now time for June to leave school at the very tender age of 14. Returning to Lively Island to help her parents in any way she could on the farm, helping her mother milk the cows, and assisting her father with his garden and vegetable plot were all things that June enjoyed immensely. Then, one day June was asked by Mr Lelman, the General Store Keeper at Goose Green, if she would be interested in teaching. June responded positively and immediately took up the job of a travelling teacher. Not long out of school herself June was just 16 years and three months when she took up this position, travelling to such places as Moffat Harbour, Speedwell, George and Bleaker Islands. Each location would require a month of June's time, where some of the children were only a year younger than June herself.

June's ability and reputation as a teacher spread, and as a result she was requested to continue her duties as a travelling teacher on behalf of the Government, teaching children at Johnson's Harbour, Port Louis, Green Patch, Long Island and Estancia and deputising for the main teacher at Fitzroy.

June's time teaching was not only beneficial to the children she was teaching, but also to her parents too, as her salary enabled her parents to buy their own house in Stanley.

One of June's great passions during her early life was walking, so much so that during whatever free time she had whilst teaching at Estancia, she would think nothing of walking into Stanley to see her parents, a genuine feat of physical fitness and endurance by anyone's standards.

Then in 1950 came the moment that was to change June's life forever. This was the year when June Sorenson met Kenneth John (Jock) McPhee in Stanley. At the time Jock was working for his father, who operated a peat carting and ash drum moving business. Although it is not clear exactly how June and Jock actually met, Jock's version of his first close encounter with June has always remained with grandson Mark. Jock's version to a very young Mark goes something like this: June saw Jock for the very first time in the middle of the street in Stanley and gave chase. However, Jock insists that he immediately turned and ran for his life, but somehow the sprightly young June caught up with him, rugby tackled him to the ground, picked him up, threw him against a wall and told the obviously dazed and bewildered Jock that she loved him!

Jock also insisted to Mark that he still had the gravel burns on his shoulder to back up this version of events. Whatever the truth is, one thing is for sure, their feelings for one another must have been strong and true as they were duly married the following year, and remained married for a further 62 years.

Once married, and while waiting to move out to Camp, June was temporarily employed for two months as a nurse. Once again this was a job where she was helping others, something that appeared to come naturally to June and gave her a tremendous amount of personal satisfaction.

Eventually, June and Jock moved out of Stanley and into Mount Pleasant House; which saw Jock spending his days working at Fitzroy. With Jock out at work, June was kept busy looking after her younger brother Jimmy, milking cows, gardening, and most importantly of all keeping the cake tins full, something that was to prove her forte throughout the years.

During June and Jock's time at Mount Pleasant House there was, as there always is in every married couples lives, an occasion when a regular mundane chore ended with everyone in fits of laughter, and is remembered and recounted down the years. Such an occasion occurred when Jock was on the roof cleaning the chimney. June was inside making sure that no soot leaked out of the smoke box and June's younger brother Jimmy was the signal man for this task, standing outside the house and ready to pass the message to Jock when to stop rodding. Unfortunately, the smoke box blew open, completely filling the kitchen with soot. Once the dust had settled, little Jimmy exploded with laughter at the sight of June, his big sister, covered from head to toe in soot. As ever, June even managed to laugh at her own misfortune: she must have been quite a sight!

In 1952 June gave birth to her only child Trudi. Although a surprise addition to the family, Trudi's arrival brought great joy to her delighted parents. Whilst Jock and June remained at Mount Pleasant house for a further six years, they did at one stage almost depart the Islands in order to take up employment in New Zealand. However, an eleventh hour offer to manage Green Patch, and oversee its development into a fully operational farm settlement with seven houses meant that June remained in the Islands, and at Green Patch for a further twenty-two years, where she quickly adapted to the role of the Manager's wife. As everyone will testify, June's open house policy complete with a warm welcome to all visitors over the years was always hugely appreciated.

I know from personal experience that those in the military benefited greatly from June's outstanding hospitality. In fact, I doubt that any helicopter task within the Islands was ever complete without a stop-over at Green Patch to sample her delicious chocolate cake. One of June's other great personal attributes was her ability to treat everyone exactly the same regardless of their rank or status. However, there was one occasion when June's all too familiar catch phrase of, "Go on, be a devil and have another piece of cake," to a visiting Archbishop had everyone in fits of laughter!

In the late 70's came the news that Green Patch was to be sold off and split into six separate farms. This event once again led to June being required to take up the mantle of teacher to the Phillips and Newman children until the new Camp teaching system was properly up and running.

One of six new farms to be created as the result of Green Patch being sub-divided was Brookfield, which was to become June's home with Jock for the next thirty years. With the help and assistance of their friends and neighbours June watched with great trepidation as her home was towed by tractor from Green Patch across to Brookfield.

Once her beloved house was safely in place at Brookfield, normal service was resumed; the location of June's home may have changed, but everything else was back to the way she liked it, an open house, cake tins full to overflowing and plenty of friends popping in for smoko and plenty of laughter.

Although June was well known for her kind, warm-hearted nature, her steely feisty spirit was never too far away from the surface. As those who knew her well will no doubt recall, June always revelled in the chance to participate in a good political debate, particularly with Terence Phillips. However, there would be times when others in their company would do their utmost to change the topic of conversation to something a little less heated, and more light-hearted. Once June got her teeth into something she was very reluctant to let go.

All of us that knew June well will know of the incredibly strong bond and relationship she enjoyed with Mark, Trudi's son, and her only grandchild. No one was more delighted than June when Mark was born in 1985; their relationship was one that would endure right to the very end. Put simply, June thought the absolute world of Mark, and he in equal measure loved her dearly.

To try and sum up what June meant to her family and close friends would probably take more time than I have right now. However, what is abundantly clear was June's love of life, kind, considerate and incredibly hospitable nature; she possessed a genuinely caring nature and gained a great deal of personal satisfaction from helping others whenever she could.

June died March 18, 2013.

More stunts can be expected from Argentina says visiting diplomat

"I THINK there is no doubt that the Argentine Government will continue to look for opportunities to pull stunts of one kind or another."

The speaker was Dr Peter Hayes, the Director of the FCO's Overseas Territories Directorate who was paying a short visit to the Falkland Islands last week.

Asked what further lengths the Argentines might go to after having tried to enlist the help of the new Pope, Dr Hayes said, "For the Argentines this is essentially a PR campaign. They are looking to keep the issue on the agenda, to continue to suggest there is a problem and to wear down the Islanders, the UK and others in the region. That is one of their big miscalculations thinking they will wear down the Islanders and the UK when actually what they are doing is strengthening the resolve."

Dr Hayes, who took over the job of Director of the Overseas Territories in October of last year was paying his first visit to the Falkland Islands, following a recent visit to St Helena. He admitted that his visit was short, but said that he had wanted to make a first visit as early as possible, even if it had to be short, but expected it would be the first of a number of visits. He had already met some of the MLAs in London, read briefings and spoken to colleagues, but there was no substitute, he said, "for coming myself and sniffing the air and to start that process of really educating myself about the Falkland Islands."

He said it was such an exciting time to be in the Falklands just after the referendum when the world's media were focussed on the Islands for very good reasons, because the Islanders had taken an opportunity into their own hands and made it happen. It was, said Dr Hayes a good time to start the process of talking about how the referendum would work to the benefit of the Islanders in the long term.

A very powerful signal had been sent to the world and the task now was to consider how to continue to support that and to make it help to build the relationships that were desired.

Asked whether the Falklands referendum might encourage other Overseas Territories along the path towards greater autonomy, Dr Hayes said that while he hadn't heard any of the other territories say that they wanted to do something similar, there were Overseas Territories which had political parties who were ostensibly in favour of independence. He said that while up to now there hadn't been a lot of support amongst the people, the UK Government's position remained that if people did decide that they wanted to change the relationship then it would support that and help them. In this case holding a referendum would be important; it had to be not just the politicians' wish to either keep or change the relationship with Britain, but the clearly expressed views of the people.

Asked for a reaction to the statement by the Argentine Government that the referendum was an irrelevancy organised by the British Government, Dr Hayes replied, "One of the great successes of the referendum was the international observation. It would be very difficult to suggest that this very large group of people from a lot of different countries including people of great standing and reputation: politicians and civil society people from around the region as well as from Canada and elsewhere, had been stage-managed by you or by us in some way. It would be pretty difficult to persuade people of that."

"A particularly strong and successful part of the referendum was that we had the world media here; together with this large group of observers, who were able to say that this clearly was the genuinely expressed view of the people."

Dr Hayes said that the more difficult and in some ways more offensive issue in their campaign is that the Argentines say that the views of the people do not matter; that it is about history and sovereignty, but not about the people. "The most important thing that we have to counter is this suggestion that the views of the people don't matter."

Disconnect in PN article

IN relation to last week's front page article concerning egress on to St Mary's Walk, the DPW Manfred Keenleyside has written to note there is a disconnect between the final part of the extracts/commentary and the minutes and agendas content of the Planning Committee in relation to the concern that vehicles might not be able to stop when travelling down King Street in icy conditions. The article shows his response as relating to drainage which is completely unrelated, nor was this in the minutes for the 13 December which were:

EPO introduced his report and drew attention to the objections received from Mr and Mrs Middleton, 5 St Mary's Walk. The CFO then explained that both he and the police only wanted to see one junction onto St Mary's Walk as they were concerned over pedestrian safety. In response DPW said that it would replace the sub-standard Cable Street junction. Members then debated the merits of the proposed egress onto St Mary's Walk. On a show of hands all but one Member indicated that they supported the new access proposal. Committee agreed the recommendation.

Mr Keenleyside notes: "The EPO's report in the main agenda for that meeting covered the concern raised by RIFP/CFO in relation to icy conditions but even there my comments about drainage were separated from the RIFP/CFO comments by those made by me in relation to access."

Commerce dictates

THE front page article from last week's Penguin News concerning the access road through Malвина Paddock and on to St Mary's Walk, highlights the current trend within planning whereby commercial interests dictate the future development of Stanley.

The planning application submitted and passed, despite objections from the Emergency Services, is for a total of three two storey buildings for hotel accommodation, café and recreational facility.

An alternative proposal would be to acknowledge that the area is too small for the proposed development and a reduction in capacity of rooms would lessen the need to provide more parking spaces and therefore negate the need for a private road.

Longest line-up for years at March Mini Sports

WHILE trotting races might not normally be considered the most exciting spectator sport, this year's line up of 14 horses in the Mini Sports Mile Trot generated great delight and reminded watchers of the 'good old days' when an excess of horses often led to races being competed in heats.

Not unexpectedly, Bobby Short's Apache ridden by Amy Gilding picked up first place in both the Mile and Two Mile Trot. Super-charged trotter Apache ended this season's racing unbeaten.

Top of the table in the racing stakes once again was Timmy Bonner. Knowing his ex stallion Zafonic to be happiest in a longer distance he began the day entering and winning the 700 yards on the lively lad and later claimed the 600 yards on the same mount. Timmy's Spirit was victorious in both 300 yards races; the most exciting a close finish ahead of Arthur Turner on Monster Muncher.

Elaine Turner's Serendipity showed good form also, claiming the 400 yards with her owner on board and later the Teenagers' Race 500 yards, jockeyed to victory by Holly Williams.

Duane Evans will once again have been delighted with his gelding Destiny. Destiny and Duane laid claim to both 500 yards races.

A smaller line up but just as much fun as the senior trots, was that competed for by the juniors. Young Sean Sackett was happy with his first place on Chelsea followed by Niall Evans on Spitfire and Rhian Alazia on Beanie.

Britain is rediscovering, just in time, that some good things are not mass-produced, pre-packaged, hysterically advertised or celebrity-promoted. Have you ever wondered why the lager mass-producers market their stuff as best drunk ice-cold? It is because cold anaesthetises your taste buds. To chill beer to near freezing point is like injecting lignocaine into your tongue. It stops the drinker finding out the depressing truth – that there is nothing there to taste. Drink lager at a temperature at which nerves work, and the manufacturers would be rumbled

A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

Timothy Bonner wins the Caribbean Alliance Trophy

A FIELD of sixteen golfers signed in to contest the annual Caribbean Alliance Trophy on Sunday 17, March. The format for this competition is Stableford points. If players play to their handicap, they will return a score of 36 points at an average of 2 points per hole. In ideal playing conditions, players set off knowing that 38 points or more would be needed to be in with any chance of winning.

The day's best rounds belonged to our two Open Champions, Troyd Bowles and Glenn Ross both firing excellent three over par rounds of 70 for 39 points each. This was only good enough for second and third place respectively as Timmy Bonner, who was on sparkling form, shot a personal best round of 80 for a score of 40 stableford points and his third win of the season. The prize for the best front nine went to defending champion Kevin Clapp on 18 points and Rodney Lee scored 19 points on the homeward leg. Both nearest the pins went to Club Captain Troyd Bowles and Sarah completed the Drury Street crystal set with a thumping drive down the 18th fairway. The club wishes to thank David Kinnell and Eva Jaffray and all at Caribbean Alliance for their generous sponsorship of this popular event.

In other news, club history was made on Saturday 16 March, as Sarah Bowles recorded a hat-trick of wins in the prestigious annual club Matchplay championship. For the first time it was an all ladies final as earlier in the week, Carole Lee beat Drew Irvine in the last semi-final. Sarah began the match strongly and a lost ball for Carole on the par five 6th meant a three hole advantage for the defending champion. Sarah maintained at least a 3 hole lead until winning the 13th with a birdie to put her dormie, which is 5 holes ahead with only 5 to play, but then had to hold off a spirited late comeback to eventually only beat Carole 4 and 2 in a tense and absorbing contest. This is her fourth win in this tough knockout event that runs throughout the season and the winner needs to progress through five singles matches to claim the title. This was Sarah's fifth Matchplay final in the last seven years emphasising her dominance in this format of the game.

There was no match last Sunday as eight of our golfers were in Santiago for a week of shirt-sleeves golf.

Bermuda shorts: Three players have confirmed their participation in this year's Nat West Island Games: Glenn Ross, Roy Smith and Ian Stewart. Declan Bonner is likely to accept the fourth berth in the team and become the youngest golfer to represent the Falkland Islands.

Better access for Stanley gym members

STANLEY Leisure Centre opened their doors earlier this week in order to allow keen, early risers access to a better workout.

As a trial the cardio room was open from 6.30am Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, and the public has responded enthusiastically to the more convenient opening times.

The centre has, as a result, signed up new members and, "made customers happy," said Senior Leisure Centre Attendant Kelly Fiddes, adding that the earlier time was worthwhile for those who start work at 8am. "you get time for a quick workout, shower and breakfast."

The trial change was introduced in response to public suggestions, and as Leisure Centre shifts start 6am - 6.15am on all weekdays except Thursday, so the earlier opening option does not impact staff negatively.

It is still being advertised on a trial basis but Ms Fiddes is hopeful the earlier start will soon become the regular opening time given the great reaction it has received.

Ammunition Order

Shooting Solutions is looking to put an ammunition order in within the next two months. It is likely that this will be a 12-24 month order as shipping is increasingly difficult. If you would like to make a bulk purchase (over 1000 rounds) please e-mail shooting-solutions@horizon.co.fk with your requirements or call 55632. We are conscious that we have spoken to many of you in the past, however please call again, as frankly since the '22 ran out we have lost track of who is chasing what. There will be no commitment to your order until such time as we have our ducks all lined up with the MOD, however we are just trying to see if there is enough requirement to justify a special shipment. Please call Steve on 55632 or e-mail as above for more info.

End of poor cruise season

FIFTY thousand cruise ship passengers were expected to visit the Falklands this year, however due to 21 cancellations only 29,500 made it to Falklands shores.

Speaking to Sullivan Shipping Services Tourism Co-ordinator Samantha Marsh at the end of another tiring cruise ship season she reiterated the bad news that: "The political situation combined with the weather has made for many more cancellations than last season." It has been a turbulent season to say the least, said Miss Marsh, "but the general impression I received at Cruise Shipping Miami was of support and optimism for the upcoming season."

"We had a good season with regards to the expedition vessels; obviously the weather is not such an issue for them. We had five passenger exchanges, and the various camp destinations had over 70 visits in total."

Falkland Islands Tourist Board General Manager Tony Mason said yesterday: "If I am to look for a positive in this year's season, it would be we now have stronger relationships and direct board level contacts with our major cruise operators."

He added that the Tourist Board had established those relationships, "and they are not controlled by operators of other businesses. I also feel government, private businesses and the tourist board have worked more closely together sharing information and strengthening relationships."

Speaking of sales within the Visitors Centre, he said, "while passenger numbers are down, our sales are only 15 per cent down on last year's figures."

Shore excursion operator Nyree Heathman told Penguin News it had been a very slow season; "the hot air coming from Argentina seems to have been the main factor. We can't do anything about the weather, but it's annoying for everyone concerned," even for the tour operators in Argentina she said.

Miss Heathman added that it had been heart warming to see vessels like Seabourn Sojourn clearly supporting the Falkland Islanders: "Star Princess's broadcasting of God Save The Queen was nothing short of brilliant."

MLA Dr Barry Elsby addresses the Colombian National Congress

Columbian Congress gets Falklands message

"WE had a tremendous reception from the Colombian government, and it was a great privilege to be allowed to speak to the National Congress. I believe everyone we met in Colombia understands the importance of our recent referendum."

This quote by MLA Barry Elsby was sent to Penguin News by Krysteen Ormond, who is accompanying Dr Elsby on a tour of Central America.

In his address Dr Elsby spoke about the development of the modern Falkland Islands, the recent referendum and the wish of the Falkland Islands to have good relations with all countries in South and Central America, including Argentina, despite that country's aggressive attitude which has rejected the referendum and does not consider that Falkland Islanders exist as a people.

Miss Ormond, who was clearly excited at the honour implied in MLA Elsby's invitation to speak to the National Congress, has herself met with the Director of Colombia Joven, a presidential initiative focussed on tackling issues affecting childhood and adolescence, and held discussions with young Colombian entrepreneurs.

In Bogotá on April 2, both Miss Ormond and MLA Dr Elsby took part in a three hour debate at one of Colombia's top universities, entitled, "Referendum Malvinas/Falklands: political impact and regional consequences in Latin America."

The Falklands delegation is now in Panama.

CABLE & Wireless South Atlantic Ltd is now wholly owned by Batelco Group from Bahrain, confirmed Chief Executive Officer (FI) Justin McPhee.

He described it as a positive development, "for our business on the Falklands and for our customers. Our new parent company, Batelco, is an experienced communications operator with a number of international operations and is focused on delivering innovation and value to its customers."

Cable & Wireless was one of the founding shareholders of Batelco, and was a major shareholder until 2006.

He added: "You can be assured that Batelco run their businesses with a focus on customers and operational excellence. In addition, he said: "Batelco is investing in our businesses with a very long term perspective, with very stable shareholders," and, "is keen to develop our business and committed to providing quality communications services."

He assured the ownership change would have no impact on the continuity of service provision to Falklands' customers.

Mr McPhee added: "There will be no change to our management team or workforce as a result of this transaction. It's business as usual. Your contact points with us remain the same."

Objection to Premier's pipeline plan

A PROPOSAL by Premier Oil that part of the infrastructure required for the off-shore collection and treatment of oil from the Sea Lion Field should be constructed on-shore in the Falklands met with an objection at the March 7 meeting of the Falkland Islands Offshore Hydrocarbons Environmental Forum.

Martyn Witton gave a presentation to the Forum on behalf of Premier, outlining the relevant technology for the construction of flow lines. These are the pipes that will take fluids from the well-head manifolds to the Floating Production and Storage Offtake (FPSO) vessel, which will then process them ready for transportation, thus obviating the need for permanent on-shore installations such as refineries on the Falklands.

As reported in Penguin News on March 8, Premier's preference is to develop a pipe bundle facility onshore in the Falkland Islands if a suitable site can be found. Though the proposal is still in a very early 'desk-top' planning stage, some visits to potential sites and discussions with land-owners have already taken place.

The forum was told that the development would require roughly six kilometres of relatively flat land adjacent to a gently sloping beach leading to protected waters from which the completed pipes could be accessed by vessels which would tow them to the required site. Access roads and a work camp to accommodate between 100 and 120 temporary workers would also be required.

Construction of the facility would start at the beginning of the Sea Lion development and would take one year. It would likely be required for a further two years before decommissioning when it would be removed and the land restored.

An objection to this proposal came from the Forum's chair, former Director of Mineral Resources, Phyl Rendell who said she believed there had been a commitment by the Falkland Islands Government (FIG) and industry to minimise the amount of onshore development associated with an oil industry in the Falklands.

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

EXERCISING any kind of profession in a place as small and remote from the rest of the world as the Falkland Islands can be difficult sometimes; you feel the need now and then for the kind of energising nourishment that comes from contact with others engaged in the same work, but maybe swimming in a bigger sea.

Before it happened, we at Penguin News were complaining about the recent media invasion, but I think we ended up by enjoying the experience; it was both interesting and refreshing to compare notes with journalists from places as diverse as China and Brazil and feel for a short while at least, part of some kind of global fellowship.

Having said that, I think we also came away from these exchanges glad to be working here and not in those many places in the world where the expression of independent views can be a dangerous thing.

Incautious naming of names has in the past cost us advertising revenue, but whatever unpopular opinions we may express, the worst we are likely to suffer personally are sharp words over the phone or in the checkout line at the supermarket, not winding up in the ocean or dead in a ditch on some dusty back road.

We are censored, but as we explained many times to our visitors, it is not censorship that comes from the government - against which we are in any case protected constitutionally - or from any other exterior force. We censor ourselves.

By this I don't just mean we avoid attacking the court system when we have relatives waiting to be tried, or don't knock the activities of oil companies because their representatives throw good dinner parties; that would be a shameful betrayal of the community we aspire to serve.

Rather, being part of this very small community and therefore knowing the people we write about, as well as being known by them, it can be hard to take too detached and critical a view of what is going on around us... if anything is.

Getting back to normal after the recent 'big' events is proving difficult so the need to trot out opinions on a slow news week like this one has led to the drawing of straws in the PN office. Having drawn the short one, it would be easy for me to fill this column reflecting on the hypocrisy of Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner's April 2 speech, or Alicia Castro's distorted vision of things as demonstrated in her BBC interview, but we have all probably suffered enough 'argie-bargie' recently and I won't give in to that temptation.

Nominees announced for Tourism Board Awards

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB) has announced nominees for this year's tourism awards.

The second annual Tourism Awards will take place at the Town Hall on April 13. FITB Managing Director Tony Mason told Penguin News that this year's awards were very close with a large number of people nominated in some categories.

Mr Mason said: "I am excited about this year's event, we have loads of nominations and have had great community participation, which makes the event even more special as we honour those who have made a difference in tourism this year."

Quark Expeditions, Holland America, Seahorn and Princess Cruises have all been nominated for 'Best supporting cruise line' with FIGAS, LAN and the MoD airbridge in the 'Best supporting airline' category.

There is a host of 'Tour guide of the year' nominations comprising: Nobby Clarke, Wendy Reynolds, Emily Hancox, Graham Didlick, Trudi McPhee, Nancy Jennings, Ron Buckett, Jason Lewis, Patrick Watts, Brian Summers, Darren Bagley, Tony Smith, Charlene Rowland, Allan White, Keith Heathman, Gerald Cheek, Maurice Blackley, Derek Pettersson, Frank Leyland, Louise Taylor and Phil Middleton.

Other categories include, 'Travel agency of the year', 'Outstanding contribution by an outside firm' and 'Hotel offering the best overall experience - Hotel of the year'.

The latter comprises: Sea Lion Lodge, The Waterfront Hotel, Malvina House Hotel, Wirebird, Lafone House and Carcass Island hotel.

'Catered accommodation of the year' will be hotly competed for as will 'Self-catered accommodation of the year' and 'Best visitor experience of the year'.

Once again there will be the 'Taste of the Falklands' category, and this year the 'Outstanding customer services award' and the 'Public services award'.

For additional information or questions, call the tourist office on 22215.

Tickets are still available for the awards.

Executive Council in brief

A VAST document, the legislation Task Status report was examined at Executive Council on March 26. Its size resulted from more and more items being added said MLA Jan Cheek, "not just updating outdated laws or those that are inadequate in the 21st century, but also new legislation to meet emerging requirements."

The first fiscal paper examined by ExCo was that providing for an agreement to allow the localisation of a photocopier contract.

A paper on museum building requirements was agreed and it was also noted that the boundary of the museum development in the Old Dockyard should be clearly defined.

Two papers regarding additional large expenditure on quarry equipment were agreed and remitted to Standing Finance Committee.

"This expenditure is required because of likely demand for increased production," said MLA Cheek.

The next financial paper related to potential localisation of the air terminal. Funding was approved to investigate this.

Two legal papers followed, first a review of the Medical Treatment Overseas policy which has been agreed and published.

ExCo members then received a short report on the first year activities of Falkland Islands Legal Services, which has fulfilled expectations, "and provided a valuable additional option," she commented.

Optimistic oil outlook from local businesses

TWENTY one per cent of businesses involved in the oil and gas services industry wish to make it their primary focus, according to the results of the FIDC/FI Chamber of Commerce 2013 Business Climate Survey.

Falkland Islands Development Company (FIDC) General Manager Marc Boucher has stated that 87 per cent of businesses in the same sector believe they already have the capabilities to enter the oil industry.

It was felt that the three largest barriers preventing businesses becoming involved in the industry were perception of a 'closed shop' (13%) access to financing (10%) and certification (10%). Respondents also believed that FIDC should assist businesses to become involved in the industry by attracting joint ventures (19%) and providing financing (26%). The Business Climate Survey was provided to 304 businesses with 76 having returned a completed survey.

On the subject of certification Mr Boucher notes in a report on the subject of the survey that at a recent meeting with Lewis Clifton of Byron Marine Ltd, Mr Clifton advised that Byron Marine Ltd will be undertaking certification under ISO 9000. He sees this as an important prerequisite in order to be eligible for contracts in the oil and gas industry.

This certification, according to Mr Clifton, is not only to ensure that Byron Marine Ltd is eligible as a contractor but also impacts on access to appropriate insurance coverage. If successful in obtaining a contract from Premier Oil, he will be expecting any subcontractor to either have ISO 9000 certification or be in the process of obtaining this certification. Byron Marine Ltd is expected to start the certification process by July 2013.

In order to explore the possibility of FIDC acting as a central contact for certification, FIDC staff have contacted the National Standards Body (BSI Group) in order to initiate discussion of a certification program for the Falkland Islands businesses.

In addition to Premier Oil, FIDC will be engaging with other oil and gas operators and services companies in order to promote the use of Falkland Islands businesses. This will be done via the participation to the Offshore Technology Conference in Houston, Texas, US in May 2013.

Further oil-related papers were examined at Executive Council on March 26 and can be found at <http://www.falklands.gov.fk/self-governance/legislative/public-papers/public-executive-council-papers/>

Permission for new mobile park

FALKLANDS residents living in hope of low cost homes will be heartened to hear that outline planning permission was granted by the Planning and Building Committee to Andrea Warbrick to develop a site as a mobile home park, at Plot 767 Murray Heights to the south of Stanley.

The good quality mobile homes are required to have a minimum of six metres distance between them and a recreational play space.

Detailed approval for the siting of mobile homes beyond the 20th unit will be subject to a traffic impact assessment and the implementation of agreements between the developer and the Falklands Islands Government regarding access improvements to the site from Bypass Road.

It was also noted that all rubbish would have to be cleared from the site in advance of the site being occupied.

Also in planning news, permission was given for Felton Stream Cottage to be demolished and replaced with a semi-detached property comprising four flats for Mr D and Mrs W Harris.

Permission was also granted to Byron Holdings Ltd. for land west of 1-3 Boxer Bridge Road to extend site development with enlarged laydown and hardstanding area, to Peter McKay to extend a storage shed and convert it to residential accommodation at 10 Villiers Street, for a conservatory extension at 4 Capricorn Road, for Stanley Cottage to have an external door relocated and be provided with three new windows, and for dwelling extension and provision of decking for Mr and Mrs Faria at 3A Brisbane Road.

Owners of the business Bittersweet were given interim permission to be open until 11pm on Fridays and Saturdays subject to licence conditions.

All of the above were granted permissions subject to varied conditions.

The meeting took place on April 4, 2013.

Land disposal policy for Gordon Lines area

AN interim land disposal policy relating to land in the Gordon Lines area owned by government has been introduced as a result of the large amount of land being sold for oil-related activities.

In the near future it is likely that only around 5 hectares of land at the far eastern end will be left for development.

Government has agreed that this managed development of commercial land associated with oil development needs to be considered alongside government's policy of not allowing permanent development of oil in or around Stanley Harbour.

The interim policy guidelines will mean that the policy of granting an automatic 'right to buy' land at Gordon Lines, or land to the south of the general area and airport road, "which may also be the subject of applications relating to oil development, via conversion of a five year lease for land acquired for oil related activity will cease."

Any new applications for land at Gordon Lines for oil related activity, if granted will be offered a lease which will be in line with proposals for a temporary port facility in Stanley Harbour.

Price for land for oil related activity will in future be subject to either negotiation or a competitive bid process.

FIG will in future consider whether to approve applications for land and their terms for any disposal on a case by case basis taking into account all of these new factors.

She also noted that this development was not identified in the Plexus Socio-Economic Report regarding the scenarios concerning the Sea Lion Development.

FIG's Policy Director, Jamie Fotheringham told Penguin News that while Premier's preference seemed to be for the construction of the flow lines on land in the Falklands, so far it remained simply "an idea" and more details would be required before the due planning process could be initiated and a decision finally made.

He was not, however, aware of any formal policy which would prohibit such a proposal if it proved to be technically feasible, though he was also aware that there was an expressed preference on the part of government for the avoidance of the construction of major permanent oil installations on shore.

Falkland Landholdings Corporation General Manager, Owen Summers admitted to Penguin News that his company had been among a number of land owners approached by Premier as part of their search for a suitable site.

While he could envisage that the project might present practical difficulties for farm managers, he was not against it in principle, but agreed with Mr Fotheringham that a lot more detail needed to be available before any decisions could be made.

Keeping FIPASS fit

EXECUTIVE Council (ExCo) last week considered proposals aimed at keeping FIPASS fit for its traditional limited operations.

A new port is expected to be built by 2017 and until it is completed a second private sector supplied facility in Stanley Harbour is expected to support further offshore exploration and development from 2014.

On the basis of an estimated cost of £264,000 in 2013/14, and the objective of completion by July 2014, ExCo accepted the Major Projects Board's proposal that only the most urgent works to FIPASS should be carried out.

The work now proposed is less than that recommended by the Arch Henderson report in 2012 or the Ultrasonic Thickness Measurement Survey of 2011.

The main concerns in respect of weaknesses, corrosion and general wear and tear will be addressed, but not the structural problems, which are considered less of an issue with regular heavy lifts being transferred to the second facility. The works planned should ensure that 40' containers stuffed with wool or fish can continue to be exported across FIPASS.

Oil readiness

A HEFTY five papers including oil readiness reviews were examined at Executive Council on March 26.

A paper on Necessary Actions compiled by the Head of Policy was the first to be examined. MLAs noted a checklist which included legal and regulatory framework; maximising local economic and community benefits and a range of actions to ensure the impacts of oil production could be understood and planned for.

They also looked at range of infrastructure requirements that need to be considered and put in place to service the oil industry.

The list referred to policy decisions that require consideration in order to manage the scale and pace of change that will result.

Another paper contained advice on clarifying tax legislation and a third reviewed marine legislation.

They noted an information paper from the Falkland Islands Development Corporation on its recent activities in support of Falklands private sector involvement in the oil and gas industry (see also page 3). The fifth was to note the latest Oil Action Plan update and agree its publication.

ExCo members saw the above as, "a useful summary of where we are on most of the important foreseeable oil-related matters on which considerable work is being done and it will be useful for people to see all the areas being dealt with."

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THE preliminary budget meetings last week allowed a first run through of the most important issues. At the end of month when everyone returns we will have presentations from the main subvention bodies, FIDC, FIRS, FIMT etc. We will then do several more days work in May and produce the 2013-14 budget. In the meantime financial and policy officers will working on the options and some of our proposals in order that we can fully understand the effect they may have.

We have four members overseas this week and when I leave on Friday there will be only three here. When I met the review panel looking at MLA resources and remuneration I suggested that the time is close when we may need ten members. If it were to be agreed it would require an amendment to the constitution but as workload increases it may be the most sensible way of covering everything. Full time members, if agreed, will undoubtedly be a step in the right direction.

Meetings this week are mainly routine, media planning, Health and Medical Services, Planning and Building and Lands Committees. As part of the regular HMSC meeting each month we visit a different department in the hospital to learn more about all that they do. With ever rising expectations the department as a whole is hard pressed to do all that is demanded of it. Our remote situation presents unique challenges which require an open minded approach to solutions.

This week we can observe the annual oddity when the Argentine government hold various high profile events on the anniversary of their armed invasion of our peaceful country, while accusing the UK of militarizing the South Atlantic. Do they and their people not see the glaring contradiction in their stance given that most of the deterrent force in the Islands is only here as a result of that invasion? They would do better to celebrate with us on 14 June because not only was it our liberation but it meant days were numbered for the military junta which had gambled on keeping the Islands and lost.

Phase 3 demining completed

BACTEC's land clearance cat

The BACTEC team has now completed the Phase 3 demining and land release project confirmed Project Director and Chairman BACTEC International Limited Guy Lucas this week.

Five minefields have been cleared and verified as being free from both mines and other explosive ordnance.

A total of just over 1,000,000sq m of Stanley common will shortly be available for public use.

Mr Lucas said: "In clearing the five minefields all mines were accounted for as per the original Argentine records as well as several associated and recorded booby traps."

He said the ground conditions between Mile Pond and Mullet Creek, "were the worst I have encountered in over 30 years of mine clearance work working in 50 countries."

He added "The BACTEC Zimbabwean deminers, as in the previous two contracts, were excellent and carried out the demanding work in very demanding and arduous conditions to the required standards of quality and safety throughout the project."

The team departed the Falklands via the oil charter flight on Wednesday, "for a well deserved break and are looking forward to returning to carry on with the mine clearance and land release work in the future."

He said: "I would like to express my most sincere thanks and appreciation to FIG and to the many individuals and organisations that have looked after us, made us feel welcome and supported us throughout this and previous projects. "We look forward to returning in due course to release more land for public use."

Argentine gross distortion of the truth says Gavin in Bolivia

DURING his tour of South America, Member of Legislative Assembly Gavin Short has told Bolivian press he regrets that the governments of South America and in other regions have accepted, totally, the Argentine version of events in relation to the Falkland Islands.

He told Bolivian journalists in La Paz "when they are not aware of our position and have not dialogued with the other side in the dispute, they haven't seen the other side of the coin."

MLA Short was in La Paz with Stacy Bragger, news editor of the Falklands Radio Service with the purpose of presenting in Bolivia the position of the Islanders vis-à-vis what they consider, "a gross distortion of the truth," from the part of Argentina, reported Mercopress this week.

MLA Short said he would willingly accept any opportunity from any of the South American governments to explain the position and thinking of the Falkland Islanders.

"We know beforehand there won't be major changes; it makes sense to think so, but all we have to do is to continue reporting on the true historic facts and then we should have a chance, minimum but a possibility," said MLA Short.

Referring to the March referendum he said of Islanders: "People are happy, they have the feeling that at last something was done to show the world what is they wanted, to remain British."

He admitted the Falklands were not expecting Argentina to say something different to what they have been saying, but commented it was sad that Argentina did not acknowledge that Falkland Islanders were "humans" and have the same basic rights as any other person to decide on their status and future.

MLA Short described the referendum as the beginning of a new path towards the adoption of greater autonomy for the Islands: "We know the UK won't abandon us but something which a growing number of younger generations are longing for is independence and this has been denied to us by Argentina. We know the moment we declare ourselves independent, probably we will again be invaded."

He added: "The solution is in the hands of Argentina even if they decided to drop their claims tomorrow and say 'Yes, Malvinenses, we recognise you; you are a small country,' it will take a long time for the inhabitants of the Islands to believe them," said MLA Short.

Exploring tidal rock pools in the West of Scotland

Peter is Scottish, and has lived in south-west London for the last 20 years with his wife, Annie, who works in the FIG Tax Office. They arrived in Stanley in January 2012. Years of commuting in London left him with a desire to improve his fitness and get out more. So he took up Nordic Walking about four years ago, rekindling his love of the outdoors, as well as losing some weight! No children, but they have three stuffed Rockhopper penguins.

A fork in my road leading home

SOMETIME things happen that defy all expectations. There we are, quietly and carefully following the path that we think is laid out for us, when a fork in the road comes along, and something - surely not our own hands - pulls the wheel sharply in the 'wrong' direction.

For example, I'm a townie - latterly, indeed, a happy very-big-city dweller. I've never had anything against the idea of living in very isolated houses, such as those you find in the Falklands camp. But whenever I have played with the concept of living in traditional Falklands isolation, the thought has been brutally beaten back by a barrage of negatives. I mean, how can one survive at any distance from a decent supplier of lattes and Americanos; where no fast food outlet can satisfy my indecent appetite for hot pizza, and where broadband, an artery that is as vital to me as my jugular, is as narrow as it is expensive?

That is not to say that I do not like the wide-open spaces, the peace and quiet of the camp. In fact some of my happiest days have been spent beneath the big Falklands skies, where there is little, other than the occasional wriggly tin house, to stop the wind scything through the buff-coloured landscape. But those are mainly memories of childhood holidays spent at Green Patch or Camilla Creek, teenage fishing trips spent at the Malo and the Murrell, and time as a young adult spent guiding tourists around the coastal wildlife. These were halcyon times, but not a rural way of life. I was happy enough to live in the bustle of Stanley. And, as any of my Falklands friends will confirm, I barely know one end of a sheep or a cow from another.

So my recent decision to build a small home in the wide-open spaces of East Falklands is one of those unexpectedly sharp tugs of the steering wheel. Here I am, bumping down a rutted graded road into the North Camp in a way that I could not have anticipated a few years ago. Today, you see, I paid the deposit on a small kit home that will, all going well, soon be aboard a ship steaming south, and shortly thereafter rising from the 1,500 square metres of Teal Inlet that I now own.

This has not come out of nowhere, of course. I had hoped to build a small home in Stanley where my wife, Nadia, and I could live when we visit. But the cost of buying in Stanley and the difficulty of finding land, made this all but impossible. So I surprised myself by looking to the camp. And the more I looked, the more I liked it. Teal Inlet, where I eventually bought a plot, began to signify peace and distance from the forces of business, government and, yes, the internet that stress me here in London.

Bound Ungagged

This has mainly been my dream, but the closer it comes to reality, the more I have been able to convince Nadia that isolation can be splendid. She's coming around to the idea, and while distance from her family will always be a problem, she too is developing a romantic hankering for occasional stays in the camp.

I am sure I am not the only member of the Falklands diaspora to hanker for a home at home. I noticed a real force of nostalgia for the old country at the time of the referendum, which was mainly visible on Facebook and Twitter, (that damned internet again). Islanders around the world, but primarily in Britain, contributed energetically to the international on-line debate that focussed furiously, if briefly, on the Falklands. Indeed, I notice that some exiled Islanders even expressed their desire to vote.

I found it interesting to see how the web has created a Virtual Falkland Islands. There is feeling that absentee Falklanders can now be Islanders in most senses, without needing to be there physically.

I could go and draw parallels between the Falklands diaspora and the Irish, who have spread all over the world and do as much as those who still live in the Emerald Isle to promote the very strong idea of Ireland and the Irish.

But I will leave that interesting ideas for others to take up, as I keep my hands firmly on the steering wheel and hump off down that unexpected road to the North Camp.

AG's role is independent from court's

REGARDING Penguin News headline March 28, 'Wrong man in the dock.'

Following the front page article in the Penguin News last week I would like to reassure the community that decisions about who should be prosecuted and for what offences, are taken in a careful and rigorous way.

The Attorney General has a duty to make sure that the right person is prosecuted for the right offence. Each case is considered on its merits, taking account of the evidence and whether a prosecution is in the public interest. Only cases which pass both the evidential and public interest tests will be prosecuted.

Because of the complexity and nature of the case concerning Mr Clarke it was reviewed by two lawyers in the Attorney General's Chambers and also reviewed by an external barrister experienced in criminal prosecution work. The barrister confirmed that both evidential and public interest tests were met and that it was appropriate that Mr Clarke be prosecuted.

It is the Attorney General's role to make sure cases are properly put before the court. It is for the court to hear the case and decide whether a person should be found guilty or not. The independence of these roles is an important part of our system of administration of justice.

We are satisfied that it was appropriate to bring this case before the court and on the evidence presented to us we are satisfied that no-one else should have been put before the court. However, we will, as always, consider whether we can learn any lessons from this case to continue to improve our practice.

Mark Lewis

A challenge to Islanders

I AM pleased that Dr Ivanov made a thoughtful response in last week's Penguin News to my lecture and my paper on distributed sovereignty.

I understand why he regards me as being inconsistent in saying the United Nations offers three options for decolonisation (independence, integration with another country or free association with another country) and then later referring to a 'fourth option'. However, I think most of those who attended the lecture felt I had made it clear that 'any other political status freely determined by a people' could only be another version of free association.

Whatever may be the future of the Falkland Islands, I think we can all agree that such a small population cannot form a standard independent state, staffing a diplomatic service, joining all the UN agencies, running its own trade relations, managing a separate currency and forming distinct foreign and security policies.

Free association has been designed to allow very small territories to be independent, while receive assistance from another government in their foreign relations. Politically, the Falklands is already virtually in that situation, having internal self-government, with support from the UK. I believe the referendum decision in favour of remaining an Overseas Territory is just the beginning of a debate about the future of the Falklands. Some people are already saying they would like full independence after further economic development, but are uncertain what political arrangements could be made. Others are attracted by the idea of free association, but worried that the UK is currently opposed to taking on the responsibility. This is one reason for thinking about association with Canada.

Dr Ivanov has misunderstood my argument about self-determination. It is of great importance to make the distinction between a group of people having a moral right to self-determination and an international legal right. We may discuss whether the Scots in the UK, the Basques in Spain or the Kurds in Turkey have the moral right to govern themselves, but it is just false to suggest there is any possibility of these peoples having an international legal right to self-determination. At the United Nations and in the customary international law that has grown from the 1960 Declaration on Decolonisation, self-determination only exists as a right for a people in a colony to choose how to end their colonial status. This means the choice of remaining an Overseas Territory of the UK cannot be recognised legally by the UN as an act of self-determination.

Similarly, there is an important difference between self-government being an accurate description of the politics of an Overseas Territory and the absolute legal supremacy of the UK. A quick read of the Falklands constitution soon reveals how many powers ultimately remain in London. This is not just a theoretical question, as the Turks and Caicos government found, when they were dismissed by London in August 2009. The UN will regard the Falklands as a colony until that relationship changes. But the UN will also require any new non-colonial system of government to be approved by another referendum. The case of the UN not recognising Spain's transfer of Western Sahara to Morocco demonstrates how even a British agreement to hand over the Falklands to Argentina would require consent.

My challenge to the Falkland Islanders is for you to design some new role in the world - call it a new form of Overseas Territory status or free association or 'fourth option', as you prefer. The requirements for a stable and peaceful future require an end to all the uncertainties produced by Argentine political and economic harassment. No agreement is possible with a Kirchner-type government, but there are now voices in Argentina asserting the Islanders' wishes must be respected. If and when Argentina becomes a full democracy, an agreement that is acceptable to the UK, the Falklands, Argentina and the UN would be possible.

Peter Willetts

Let's move on

I AM gravely concerned that our Government is so focused on our political situation; jumping in response to the actions across the water of the plastic lady.

They seem to be losing connection with developing services and demands for our oil industry; it would seem to me that there are people here employed by FIG who know what needs to be done in preparation for such a development - just to be ignored.

The referendum held here told the world what the Falkland Islanders people want.

Now let's move on and gear up to develop the future of the Islands for the coming generations.

Don't be the MLAs that missed the opportunity to secure the long term future for our younger generation.

Work together

I WRITE you regarding the referendum that took place recently. I just wanted to tell you that I am a 20-year-old young man from Argentina, who would like to let you know my feelings and opinion about the conflict that has been separating us and affected so many innocent lives. Take for granted, that my feelings and opinion, as well as my thoughts about the war are shared by many Argentine people.

In 1982, our country lived under the iron hand of a brutal military dictatorship that by that time had already made disappear without limits, thousands of fellow citizens and persecuted those who opposed them. Every Argentine citizen lived under a terrorism of state and had no power of action regarding governmental decisions.

At the same time, by that time the power that they exercised had already been weakened and they needed a display to maintain power.

Firstly was the attempted war with our Chilean brothers; then, the disgusting 'Guerra de Malvinas/Falklands'. I would like to express my opinion that is very clear, the Falklands are Argentine, but this is not the aim of this letter.

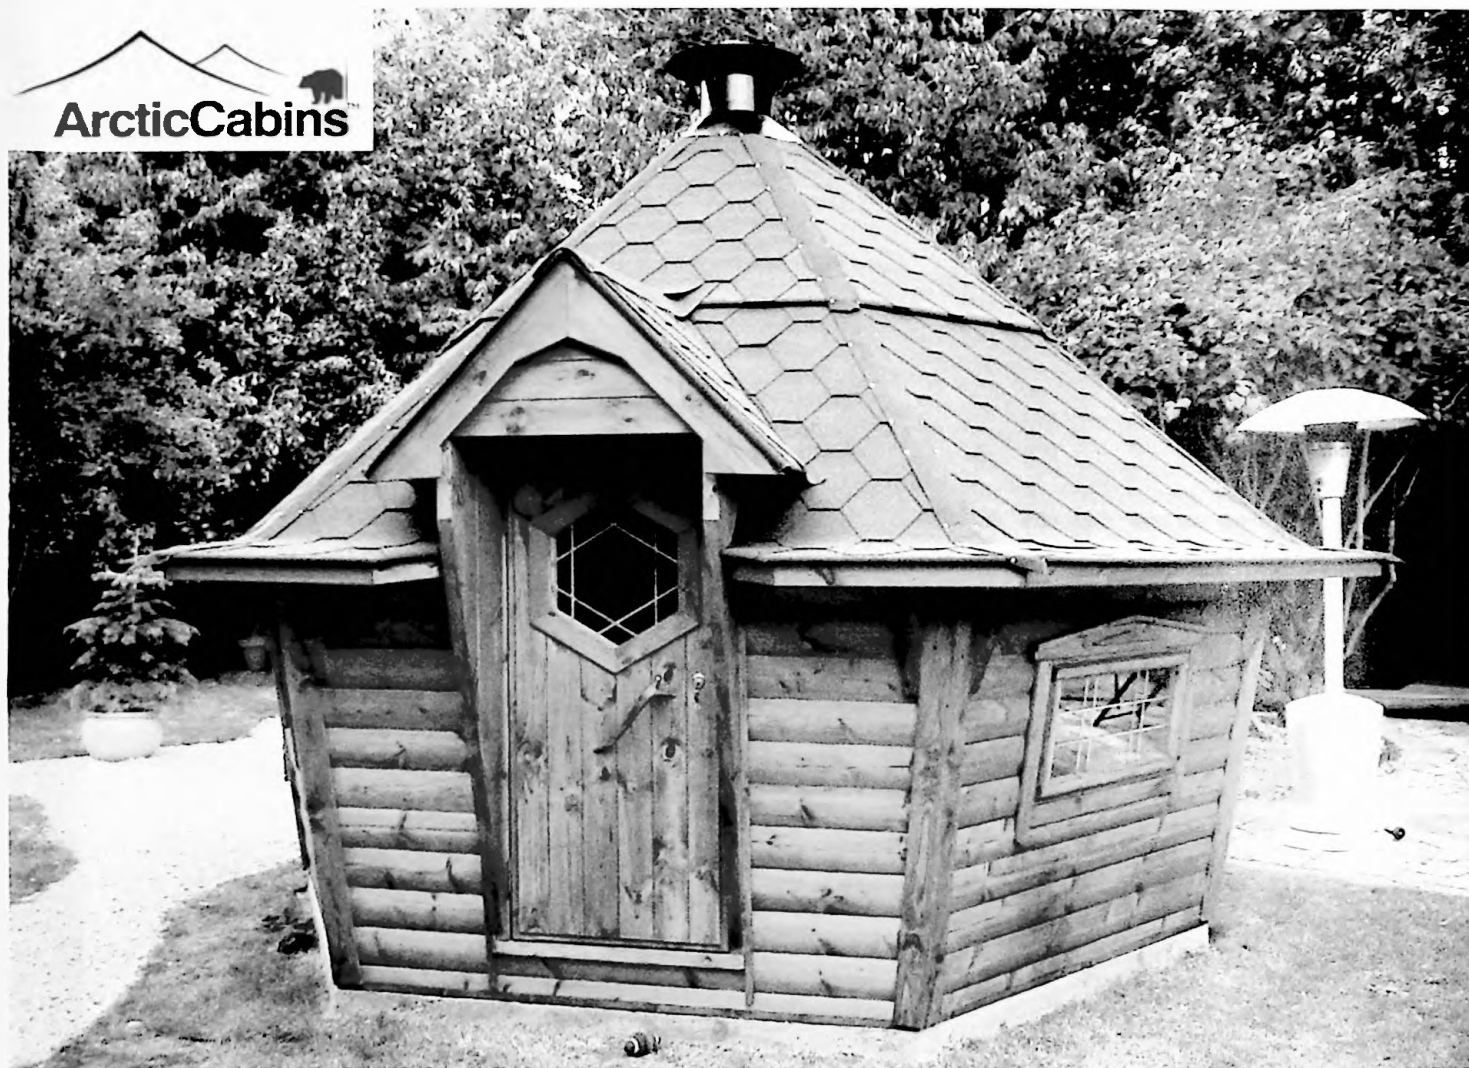

My real aim is to let the Islanders know my esteem in a general sense in spite of the bellicose desires of some people, something very sad regarding the loss of so many lives on both sides of the war.

I would also like to express that it hurt me very much as Argentine as well as a human being, to see a Falkland Islander dressed with a Union Jack outfit dancing while casting his vote into the ballot box. In the 1982 conflict, 18 and 19 year-olds were shipped without any training or experience; they were shipped with a rifle to a senseless war; that's why I consider the bellicose attitude of some Islanders harmful. Besides that, it's ridiculous to think about another conflict due to two clear motives: the end of mandatory military service in 1994 and the shattered army of these times. For that reason it is not pleasant to listen to the British Prime Minister, David Cameron, express so openly that they are prepared to 'fight' for the Islands, when there is in no way a military incitement from the Argentine side.

I express my opinion without any kind of resentment; believing that both sides should refrain from further confrontations and solve everything by peace, which is what should reign between two peoples who share more values than those which separate us. Let's work together seeking peace and cooperation from both sides. I would really love to visit you to let you know the feelings of so many Argentine people who love peace.

Keeping an eye on environment and oil concerns

THE work undertaken by a group formed to consider gaps in environmental data and current knowledge with relevance to the hydrocarbons industry provided the principal focus for the fourth meeting of the Falkland Islands Offshore Hydrocarbons Environmental Forum, which took place on March 7 in the Chamber of Commerce.

Paul Brickle introduced the work of the data gap analysis group and noted that the group's final reports would be circulated shortly.

Anton Wolfaardt presented the priorities within seabird data gaps, and highlighted the need to assess the impacts of light attraction to rigs and support vessels. Penguin species were, he said, the most vulnerable species and the hardest to assess. Increased tracking work would be required at a range of sites to better understand seabird foraging habits.

Grant Munro presented priorities regarding marine mammals. Besides highlighting the need to reassess existing data on cetacean and pinnipeds in Falklands waters, he also noted the need to review and standardise observer protocols.

Paul Brickle presented priorities related to oceanography, and Paul Brewin presented priorities regarding benthic inshore and offshore research gaps.

Paul Brickle concluded the session by noting the importance attached to better curation and use of existing environmental data. The newly formed SAERI information management centre was identified as a suitable repository for data.

Now that the data gap priorities had been established a mechanism for funding this work needed to be agreed, Dr Brickle argued. This would be discussed at the next Forum meeting in September or sooner.

The meeting heard from Andy Duffy on the recent environmental baseline surveys undertaken in the Sea Lion Development area of the North Falklands Basin, which showed minimal contamination, metals and hydrocarbons levels in the area.

In his presentation on the successful FOGL Leiv Eriksson exploration campaign which was completed in late 2012, Richard Clarke noted the excellent health safety and environment record during drilling, with oil spill response training provided to all crew members, no adverse environmental or health impacts, and all hazardous waste being shipped to the UK for disposal.

Grant Munro gave a presentation on the marine mammal and seabird observations he undertook for FOGL during their recent exploration phase.

Consolidated Fisheries Ltd's long-liner CFL Gambler heading for the fishing grounds

Assessing the contribution of the Falklands Fisheries

DESPITE the fact that the fishing industry has been the major contributor to the wealth of the Falkland Islands since the establishment of the Fisheries Conservation Zone in the mid-eighties, it is probably a fair bet that many of us are at best hazy about its workings; we may, for example, have heard about Individual Transferable Quota (ITQ) but be unable to say anything sensible about it, much less comment on its effects since introduced in 2005.

We are indebted therefore, to Director of Natural Resources, John Barton for supplying the following answers to a series of questions:

Q. What different fisheries have been included in the long term property rights (Individual Transferable Quota) policy established in 2005?

A. There are 10 fisheries established under the 2005 Fisheries Ordinance. Of those eight are in the ITQ system:

Finfish
Doryteuthis gahi (Loligo) – Summer
Skate
Squid (Illex) & Restricted Finfish
Restricted Finfish – Pelagic
Restricted Finfish
Toothfish – Longline
Doryteuthis gahi (Loligo) – Winter

The two fisheries not yet in the ITQ system are the main Illex (jig or trawl) fishery and the inactive scallop fishery. A grenadier fishery is undergoing development and is somewhat exploratory.

Q. What was the value of the rights when they were granted for a period of 25 years and what is the current value with a period of 17 years remaining?

A. Placing a value on fishing rights can be a complex process, particularly in looking at a 25 year time horizon. The price of fish fluctuates and stocks can change. Since the ITQ system was introduced catches of Southern Blue Whiting are much reduced, whereas catches of Rock Cod have increased significantly. Annual access fees in the Falklands fishery are higher than in most fisheries and that impacts on the value of fishing rights.

At the time the ITQ system was implemented one approach to valuing the rights estimated them to be worth approximately £100 million. This calculation relied on a large number of assumptions. Leaving the assumptions unchanged and using the same calculation procedure the value of fishing rights has reduced by around 7 per cent with ITQ expiring in 2031. There are alternative approaches to valuing ITQ.

Q. What additional economic activities have been facilitated by the policy?

The introduction of the ITQ system was not so much about additional economic activities as creating a more rational economic environment for the fisheries sector.

The long term nature of ITQ facilitates long term investment decisions, whereas the fact that ITQ can be traded allows the industry to maximise efficiencies. In some cases fishing companies have improved financial performance, others are considering investment in new vessels.

The contribution of the fisheries sector to GDP remains significant (averaging 64 per cent over the period 2005-2010).

In real terms the value of fisheries GDP has increased by 23 per cent over this period, and is the primary driver behind an overall increase in FI GDP of 19 per cent.

In 2010, the value of fisheries was estimated in excess of £90 million, though this is just a snapshot of one year - there are significant year-on-year variations in the value of fisheries output.

It is not possible to identify any GDP effects that are specifically attributable to the ITQ system as data is aggregated from company accounts which do not differentiate between ITQ and non-ITQ related turnover/profits. Whilst some fisheries entered the ITQ system in 2006, others entered in 2008, so the full impact is probably yet to be seen.

Value from fishing activities added to GDP since 2005

The following data provided by the Policy Unit shows Total GDP and Fisheries GDP for 2005 – 2010 (figures for 2010 are provisional).

	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010
Fishing GDP £ (Million)	76.3	65.3	66.9	76.3	59.6	93.8
Total GDP £ (Million)	112.6	102.7	109.8	118.5	102.1	134.3
Fishing %	68	64	61	64	58	70

A MASSIVE £1,200 was raised at the IJS/CE fundraiser on Saturday Night. Grease was the word, and the night captured the fun of the hit film with a 1950s theme. Ticket holders transformed into teddy boys and dames with tight t-shirts, leather jackets, big hair and Rydell High style.

There was a raffle of donated prizes, a quiz, and a familiar movie to keep diners entertained. Prizes for best dressed couples went to David and Victoria Tongue and Steve and Paula Fowmes, with an additional prize for best man dressed as a woman won by Paul Brickle.

The night ended with classic tunes that urged people on to the dance floor, which was already graced by a shiny hot-rod hood converted by Ralph Harris.

The IJS/CE Parent Teachers Association would like to thank everyone who helped make the evening a hit. The money raised will be used to buy non-essential equipment for the school, said committee member Lynn Roberts.

Islanders gather whales and dolphins data

Hugues and Theo Delignières prepare to transport a Hector's beaked whale home from Hope Harbour to Dunbar in 2011

MUCH is known of the plants and birds in the Falkland Islands, but through the work of many Falkland Islanders, we now have a much better understanding of what cetaceans are part of the life of the Falklands.

Dolphins and whales unfortunately strand on a regular basis on the shores of the Falklands, but fortunately Islanders have taken a great interest in them. Over the last eight years, effort has been made to collate together as many strandings that have been documented and that people remember. This has culminated in a research paper that uses the stranding database and at-sea surveys to describe the cetacean community of the Falkland Islands.

The author of the research paper Helen Otley explained, "by September 2012, the spreadsheet had 201 stranding records representing 24 species, with the first documented stranding from 1866. Many years ago when I started asking Falkland Islanders about their memories of strandings, I would never have guessed that the list would grow to 24 different species of whales, dolphins and porpoise."

The cetacean community consists of seven species of baleen whale, seven beaked whale species, sperm whale, eight species of dolphin and one of porpoise.

We already knew some information about what whales and dolphins are around the Falklands from various reports and books, and from the at-surveys carried out during 1999 - 2001 by Falklands Conservation staff, including Andy Black, (now with South Georgia Government) and by more recent survey work by observers such as Grant Munro on seismic survey ships. "But the stranding records confirm the presence of some of the rarer, vessel-shy and/or offshore and deep-water species, which haven't been seen at sea," Helen told Penguin News.

The four most frequently stranded species are long-finned pilot whale, sperm whale, strap-toothed whale and Commerson's dolphin. But there are a variety of other species, some of which probably live within Falkland Islands year round, some that migrate though on route to foraging and breeding grounds and

The Falklands cetacean community consists of seven species of beaked whale, a type of whale whose strandings John Smith has investigated over many decades. Beaked whales are not seen in the ocean very often, perhaps because they prefer deep water, but the stranding database demonstrates that they are certainly present in the Falklands, including a strap-toothed whale with very young calves.

Even Flipper, aka the bottlenose dolphin, has turned up three times on the shores of the Falkland Islands, once being two males within a pod of long-finned pilot whales and once with a leopard seal. And yes, the Falkland Islands does have one of the world's six porpoise species, the Spectacled porpoise.

One of the earliest documented strandings is that of the strap-toothed whale, a type of beaked whale.

It was found in 1875 by John Bonner at Port Sussex and reported to the naturalists on board the visiting HMS Challenger. This sailing ship was undertaking the first global marine research expedition, which lasted from 1872 until 1876 and made a 68,890-nautical-mile (127,580 km) journey across the world.

Since that time, strandings have been documented in a variety of newspapers and newsletters, and have also remained in people's memories due perhaps in part to the sight and smell of a stranded whale.

Helen explained that the beauty of documenting details about strandings in one central place is that, "if we want to know what species exist here, it is much easier and cheaper than chartering a ship and having an observer watching the seas all day long, and if the established stranding database is continued, over the long term, it may show how cetaceans are responding to changes in ocean temperature and availability of favoured prey, and from being over-exploited a century ago".

Looking through records over time, it shows some species recorded stranded in earlier times now are not being found, such as Arnoux's beaked whale, which seems to like very cold waters. There are also now regular strandings of sei whales and fin whales, but few stranded in earlier times, which may demonstrate that these species are returning to populations levels prior to being hunted by whalers.

Another case in point is the recent stranding of a pod of 20 false killer whales, thought initially to be long-finned pilot whales. This is a species of sub-temperate waters, not usually found at 50° South. "My research paper did not describe this species as being part of the Falklands cetacean community because at that point in time the species had not been recorded at-sea or stranded. But now it's species number 25. It's a good example of why it is exciting to be involved in science in the Falklands," said Helen.

So if you're out in Camp and you find a recently stranded cetacean or even a weathered old skull, take a photo, record the location and let Falklands Conservation or the Environmental Planning Department know. You never know, it could be species number 26. Helen gives one example of a species that could be species 26: Risso's dolphin, sized between a Peale's dolphin and a long-finned pilot whale.

Please contact Nick Rendell for a copy of the research paper.

I think people these days spend far too much time worrying about what other people think about them!

I don't care what anyone thinks about me!

I noticed, seeing how often you belch and pass wind when I'm around!

Vittoria Pauloni 1910 - 2013

FALKLANDS born Vittoria Pauloni, passed away peacefully on March 19, 2013 in a Sheffield Nursing Home where she had resided for several years, reports her nephew Lyle Craigie-Halkett.

Vittoria reached the grand old age of 102 years, having been born on December 12, 1910. When Aunt Vi, as she was affectionately known, reached her 100th Birthday, Governor Nigel Haywood, on his first day in office, sent a personalised greeting to mark her 100th birthday. His message took pride of place along with HM the Queen's greeting card at the celebration party held in the Nursing Home.

Vittoria is the last of the Pauloni family. She spent her childhood at Teal Creek where her father was a shepherd. The family moved to 55 Fitzroy Road, Stanley on his retirement from the FIC.

Vittoria's parents were William and Helen Pauloni (nee MacPherson). She had three brothers, Romeo, Robert and William Junior (who died as a very young man). She also had one sister, Ethel (Craigie-Halkett).

Vittoria's father was an Italian who came to the Falklands at about the turn of the 20th century. He was on a sailing ship with his parents who were homeward bound for Livorno in Italy after farming in Patagonia. Being a teenager at the time, perhaps he liked the look and obvious challenges of the Falklands, or perhaps he was a poor sailor; anyway he decided to remain in the Islands. Sadly, in spite of years of trying, he was never able to make contact with his family again, so never knew if indeed they ever reached their home in Italy or not.

Vittoria commenced work in service at Sullivan House, later moving to Waverly House.

At some time after the Second World War she was offered a job in Sheffield looking after the children of a Mr and Mrs Duffield, who had a book selling business in the city.

She remained with the same family all her working life, caring for subsequent generations of children. The family regarded Aunt Vi as one of their own, and have remained constant to the end.

Running for a reason

STANLEY runner Anton Wolfaardt will be competing in the 2013 Virgin London Marathon on April 21 to raise money for the Outward Bound Trust, a charity that educates and inspires young people through adventures in the wild.

This will be the first time he has attempted the marathon in London but Anton is no novice at the distance. He has completed our very own Standard Chartered Stanley Marathon five times, and won a marathon in New Zealand last year in a time of 3 hours 11 minutes.

He finished sixth overall in this year's Stanley Marathon in 3 hours 14 minutes, which was nine minutes faster than his time last year. The conditions were fantastic on the day and he is hopeful to finish the London Marathon in a similar time.

Anton has raised around 60 per cent of his goal of £2,000 for his chosen charity thanks to kind contributions from the public, but if you would like to donate, any amount would be greatly appreciated, he said. Donations can be made through the website page <http://uk.virginmoneygiving.com/AntonWolfaardt>

Squash court closed for painting

THE walls of the Stanley Leisure Centre Squash Court will be painted on the weekend of April 6-7.

The refurbishment is to ensure the paintwork is fresh for the visit of Former International Squash players Peter Nicol MBE and Tim Garner. The pairs squash campaign '7 squash matches in 7 days on 7 continents' is aimed to build awareness of the sport so it may be included as an Olympic sport, starts in Stanley on Saturday, April 13.

Falklands bids farewell to a friend and supporter

"WHAT impressed me most about her was not only her charismatic presence but her ability to connect with anyone regardless of whether they were military generals or an ordinary person."

West Farmer Nigel Knight of Fox Bay is one of many Falkland Islanders who recall the visits of former British Prime Minister Baroness Thatcher to the Falkland Islands in 1983 and 1992.

Following the announcement of her death on Monday, April 8, 2013, Nigel's comment reflect the respect and affection felt for the woman who sent the Task Force to liberate the Islands from Argentine occupation in 1982.

Speaking to Penguin News this week Stanley resident Lisa Pole-Evans, recalled Baroness Thatcher's softer qualities: "We were all waiting in the cold at the airstrip to meet the great lady herself, all dressed in our Sunday best, and Roxanne (Morrison) was cold in her beautiful dress, so I was trying to keep her warm by cuddling her. Baroness Thatcher noticed, and said to Roxanne to get under the warm coat she was wearing. Roxanne disappeared under Baroness Thatcher's coat, with just her face poking out; it was a lovely gesture."

Artist and photographer, Tony Chater, acknowledged both the intimidating and the alluring in the lady, describing her as having an "aura of power, a memory like a filing cabinet and surprisingly sexy."

Earlier this week Member of Legislative Assembly Mike Summers on behalf of the Assembly stated: "It is with great sadness that we received news of the death of Baroness Thatcher this morning. She will be forever remembered in the Islands for her decisiveness in sending a Task Force to liberate our home following the Argentine invasion in 1982. Our sincere gratitude was demonstrated in 1983 when she was granted the Freedom of the Falkland Islands. Her friendship and support will be sorely missed, and we will always be thankful for all that she did for us. The thoughts and deepest sympathies of all Falkland Islanders are with her family and friends at this sad time."

Since news of her death, flags have been flown at half mast in the Falklands and messages of sympathy from Islanders have swept across social networking sites.

While her memory is viewed with less affection by many citizens of the UK, one former member of the Royal Navy and a survivor of the sinking of HMS Sheffield in 1982, Adam 'Joe' Lawton also emphasised her very human qualities. He told Penguin News: "Maggie is the only British Prime Minister in history to admit to crying in office over a decision she made. When Admiral Leach told her Sheffield had been hit and sunk she asked 'how many men were aboard Admiral?' He told her 'two hundred and seventy Prime Minister.' She was quiet for a minute and then asked, 'how many will we have lost?' He told her 'Prime Minister, the exocet missile is ship killer, it's a ship sinker. We must prepare ourselves and the nation for a loss of up to one third of the ships company. Then, she wept."

A memorial service for Baroness Thatcher is to be held at Christ Church Cathedral on Wednesday, April 17, 2pm, and Members of the Legislative Assembly have declared the day a public holiday, "as a mark of respect, and to allow all those who wish to attend the memorial service to do so," said a spokesperson for MLAs.

The service is being held in the afternoon in order to allow the community to follow the funeral service held in the UK that morning.

Arrangements will be made for extra capacity in the Parish Hall should the Cathedral be full. The Jetty Centre car park will be open for additional parking.

A book of condolence can be located in the entrance porch of Gilbert House, and will be accessible both in and out of office hours. The book will close on Friday, April 19, at 4.30pm, when arrangements will be made for the book to be accessible in Camp.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

THE name Margaret Thatcher engenders a broad spectrum of emotions, and for me the earliest involved a moment of selfish disappointment.

At age nine on May 4, 1979, my mother, utterly determined that her happy little swot would impress the teacher with her political comprehension, packed me off to school having repeated a number of times the phrases 'Margaret Thatcher', 'Conservative Party' and 'UK's first woman Prime Minister'.

Unfortunately, when the question was asked in school, 'Why is this day important?' and having almost dislocated my shoulder from the speed at which I launched a hand into the air, it was only to discover that every other hand in the class had shot up too. Sadly I didn't have the opportunity to impart my knowledge to an admiring audience: everyone else knew it was a vital day in history too.

So my relationship with Mrs T was off to a less than perfect start, and it didn't progress particularly well for some time. Being one to listen in to the conversations of adults, I picked up on both their and their friends' deep concern at the FCO's increasing determination to rid itself of the 'Falklands problem.' In 1980 came the lease-back option and then the slip slide down towards 1982 complete with a host of wrong messages dripping out of the UK government and being carefully sopped up and examined by counterparts in Argentina. Where, one wondered, was our heroine when that was going on?

But of course the lady came good for us; and many years later at university when persuaded to join a protest against Mrs Thatcher's decision to freeze student grants, my opinion was torn. While tramping through the streets of London surrounded by my furious comrades (understandably cursing her name) I was nagged by an uncomfortable thought. If it was not for her unyielding approach to decision making, I probably wouldn't have had that opportunity to bumble past Hyde Park in the first place; courtesy of a Falkland Islands Government fully funded further education.

Years later, and despite a genuine feeling of gratitude towards her, I still cannot claim to have been a Lady Thatcher devotee in the 'all hail and prostrate myself' sense but as an advocate for tenacious women there's very much a part of me that admires her greatly. After all, it's difficult not to view her in the same sphere as Boadicea, Catherine the Great and Queen Elizabeth I: strong, clever, charismatic, highly motivated and ruthless as hell.

Best choice award for Falklands toothfish

THE Falkland Island toothfish fishery is one of the three toothfish fisheries around the world awarded a category of 'Best Choice' by the Monterey Bay Aquarium Seafood Watch Programme. Seafood Watch is the most well-known and trusted source in North America for consumers and businesses seeking information about environmentally responsible seafood choices.

Chair of the Falkland Islands Fishing Companies Association (FIFCA) Cheryl Roberts, was delighted. She said the ranking was "good news for FIFCA and all its members, as it reflects well on all local fisheries management. Since the commencement of the fishing industry 25 years ago, the local fishing industry has supported the Fisheries Department in achieving good environmental credentials and sound management practices."

She explained that these include such measures as precautionary catch effort, by-catch management and seabird mortality mitigation measures.

Mrs Roberts added: "This is in addition to the wider contribution to the local economy through licensing revenue and industry activity. It is encouraging to see that these efforts from industry and Fisheries Department are being recognised at international level and that the Falklands fishery is now being ranked at the top alongside other highly regarded fisheries around the world."

Manager of Consolidated Fisheries Ltd (CFL) George Betts said: "This is an excellent result for the local toothfish fishery: not just because it is of commercial benefit to the company but it also reflects the high standards of fisheries management as a whole in the Islands. It is evidence that the Falkland Islands are at the forefront of responsible management of its natural resources."

CFL is sponsoring the current assessment of the Falkland Islands toothfish fishery under MSC Principles and Criteria for Sustainable Fishing.

Director of Fisheries John Barton told Penguin News mid week: "The Falkland Islands Government seeks to manage all fisheries on a sustainable basis. The toothfish fishery is a small but valuable fishery and the Fisheries Department and Consolidated Fisheries Ltd have worked closely together."

"Assessment of the suite of toothfish fisheries took almost a year," said Dr. Tom Pickerell, Senior Science Manager at Seafood Watch.

"In order to be confident in our results, we have a rigorous process that ensures that all the relevant data are analysed and our findings peer-reviewed. While some may consider a recommendation to buy toothfish somewhat controversial, we are confident in our analyses and the industry has demonstrated that it is possible to harvest this species in a responsible manner."

As a result of this investigation, 60% of the global allowable catches is now rated by Seafood Watch as either 'Best Choice' or 'Good Alternative'. Of the ten toothfish fisheries around the world, 17.7% have been rated as 'Best Choice', 43.4% as 'Good Alternative' (including the South Georgia and Ross Sea Fisheries), 21.4% are rated as 'Avoid' and 17.5% is not rated (principally the Argentine Fishery). The Falklands, Heard & McDonald Islands and Macquarie Island (Australia EEZ) were all determined to be the best choice for consumers.

Until the recent assessment by Seafood Watch was undertaken, the website classed all toothfish as 'To Avoid'. However, a persistent campaign led by COLTO, the Coalition of Legal Toothfish Operators, to persuade the MBA to address the real gains made in eliminating unlicensed, unregulated and unreported (IUU) toothfish catches around the world was successful in highlighting the environmental credentials of toothfish fisheries in the 21st century.

FIGAS reshape

FALKLAND Islands Government Air Service (FIGAS) Manager Morgan Goss presented a paper to the Transport Advisory Committee (TAC) on Wednesday detailing proposed changes to FIGAS flight policy.

In essence this was the same paper presented in November by co-author, Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher.

Mr Fletcher told Penguin News that while the majority of the proposed changes to the 2010 FIGAS Flight Programme had been accepted by the TAC in November, a few issues had been left unresolved including proposals relating to late booking fees and concessionary freight rates.

With a view to avoiding frequent late changes and as an extension of the current flight change or cancellation policy the revised paper presented on Wednesday proposed a late booking fee of £20 rather than £25 as originally proposed. This fee would be applied if new flight bookings were made after 10am on the day before a flight.

In response to a suggestion by Committee Member, Louise Pole-Evans, that the late booking fee should be waived if a late booking fitted into already existing flight plans, Mr Goss replied that late booking fees were 'industry standard' and to allow exceptions would conflict with the aim of having regulations that were clear cut.

With regard to concessionary freight rates which had been introduced historically to encourage the production of fresh produce by Camp residents, the writers of the paper proposed that the fourth of a number of options should be adopted as this was the one preferred by TAC in the November meeting.

In accordance with this proposal, while there would still be a freight rate for fresh produce, other concessionary freight rates should be removed from existing beneficiaries and offered only to the outer islands.

It was felt that currently the outer Islands are disadvantaged and are reliant on air transport for regular freight deliveries, while mainland West and East Islands businesses have access to the all-weather tracks and roads network and a regular cross Sound ferry service which facilitates easier access to the Stanley market.

The only other significant change to the proposals presented in November was that FIGAS would honour all return flight bookings, even if the cancellation of fellow passengers would, under normal circumstances, render the flight uneconomical to operate.

Having received the Committee's approval on Wednesday, the paper will now go before ExCO.

Tourist Board status change proposal to be presented at April Executive Council

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB) - currently designated as a company limited by guarantee - will become a statutory corporation, if a proposal is passed at the next meeting of Executive Council on April 24.

Although the proposal was unanimously agreed by Board Members at the May 2012 FITB Extraordinary Meeting, one local tourist operator has expressed a strong objection.

Adrian Lowe from the Murrell Farm said, "things have gone full circle; it's back to government running things."

Mr Lowe also disapproved of the change made some time ago, from FITB being chaired by the Tourist Board Manager to being chaired by a Member of Legislative Assembly.

Chair of FITB Mike Summers told Penguin News yesterday that the idea had been in the pipeline for some time and that Board Members were comfortable with the decision.

He also said there had been concern over the lack of oversight of FITB's hefty subvention from government of roughly £750,000.

He said it had been decided unanimously that it was the best way forward and that the current status was considered, "unsustainable."

Currently FITB's subvention covers such areas as marketing and product development, however, the move to a statutory corporation will mean this will combine with tourism infrastructure development, including the Tourism Development Strategy, flights and the waterfront, amongst other projects, currently administered by a separate body with funds held by the FIG Head of Policy.

He said: "To me and the rest of the industry it makes sense to have a single organisation. The industry will still have a significant voice in the management of tourism development."

The Board structure will be similar to that of the Falkland Islands Development Corporation and will include the MLA, with the tourism portfolio, the FITB Managing Director, the Head of Policy, a Chair and Vice Chair and four members from the industry.

South America paying attention says MLA Short

SOUTH American members of government, opinion formers and academics have been genuinely interested in hearing the Falkland Islanders' point of view, Member of Legislative Assembly (MLA) Gavin Short told Penguin News yesterday.

He and Islander and radio journalist Stacy Bragger are currently touring the region, and so far have visited Bolivia, Peru, Costa Rica, Ecuador and El Salvador.

MLA Short said: "I was fully expecting some very pro Argentine arguments to be put to us in one or two of the countries and perhaps doors to be closed. In fact the very opposite happened. We have met very many people on this trip, including members of governments, opposition figures, opinion formers, academics, the press (both print and TV), not to mention a plethora of ambassadors from many countries, through to university students and an online Q&A session..."

He said their audience seemed to be, "paying attention to our descriptions of how our Islands function, our referendum and our demolition of Argentine myths and downright untruths," especially when backed by historic documentation.

He added, "This trip was not crafted to be a deep relationship building exercise. This was an initial foray designed to be high speed, high impact. It succeeded way beyond my wildest expectations and we have actually already started building initial contacts and relationships. The groundwork has now been done that will make any further, more sedately paced visits easier to do, and fruitful."

MLA Short feels it will not be an overnight process, but, "since our referendum some peoples' views are changing."

Taking a young Islander was a real bonus said MLA Short, "and Stacy Bragger, because of his media background was a Godsend and he certainly did his country proud. There were occasions when the voice of an ordinary citizen was far more powerful than that of a wrinkly old politician as people expect us to say certain things. When an ordinary person freely expresses the same opinions most eloquently then real attention is paid."

At the beginning of the tour they encountered an Argentine ambassador: "He walked past us as he came off the set and never even acknowledged our presence. I have made a point of telling people in all countries that we visited that we would like nothing better than a live debate with an Argentine Ambassador on national TV or radio."

He added, "All in all I believe this trip was worth it."

Roads man Simon congratulated

ON Wednesday, when the Transport Advisory Committee received a progress report from PWD's Road Engineer, Simon Catton, was congratulated by members on the current state of the Islands' roads.

The Sapper Hill resurfacing was now complete other than for some ditch cleaning and hard shoulder rebuilding, which would be done during the winter months.

Out of Stanley, on East Falklands, Mr Catton reported that approximately 21,000 tonnes of aggregate had been processed, most of which had been laid on the MPA road. This work started at Sapper Hill and is currently complete to the abattoir turnoff. Works from that point would be continuing for the rest of the year as long as the weather permits them to be carried out safely and efficiently.

All East Falklands roads had been graded and the current emphasis was on keeping the MPA road as good as it can be.

Mr Catton reported that four cattle grids had been replaced on the Greenfield link road as planned. Fencing still needed to be completed before the final gate on that road could be removed.

Work had started at the Estancia causeways. At the Rumford Creek crossing, new larger diameter culverts had been installed and the road raised to reduce future damage from over-topping and wave action.

Works to the Long Creek crossing were due to commence on April 9, following which the road would be closed again for one week. On completion of the creek crossing the road would be raised.

During the next financial year work was expected to be carried out on various points on Camp roads: North Arm, 13.8 miles from North Arm junction, Turner's Stream, Plaza Creek and Big Muddy on the Salvador Road, sinking culverts on the Wreck Road, and two or three areas on the Rincon Road.

Grading had been completed on West Falklands, and the main road works on the new road to Westley Farm had been completed. The new cattle grids and fencing were being worked on as well as some of the landscaping, which it was anticipated would be completed next year. Due to a change in fence lines on the Westley Road it had been possible to reduce the number of cattle grids needed by two. The materials purchased were diverted for the replacement of two other grids on the Hill Cove Road.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

WE have meetings in London and Brussels this week. After we have completed our first planned visits and all MLAs are back home it will be time to take stock and plan future campaigns.

Most importantly we have some decisions to work on relating to the budget and future developments. The period from now to the election in November and in the months after will be critical to the future of the Islands. Those making decisions need to be wary of 'kneejerk' responses when the pressure is on, as it will be as oil production comes closer. Much good work has been done by officials to prepare the way but there is no end in sight of the work still to be done. We should receive our own socio-economic study soon and it is important as things are moving fast and some of the information in the earlier 'Sealion' development specific study done for Rockhopper is already out of date.

MLAs and their younger companions have done very good work in South America over the last couple of weeks. There is no doubt that the two who accompanied the MLAs have played important roles in helping people better understand the Falkland Islands. It is unfortunate that so much time and energy has to be devoted to neutralising the false propaganda put about by an army of Argentine diplomats and politicians when there are so few of us to do it. Nevertheless we cannot let up our efforts as there is still much distorted information to be countered and intelligent open minded people willing to listen to facts, making it a worthwhile exercise.

The latest attempt by the Argentine leadership to claim respectability is the suggestion that they are only interested in scientific research in contrast to the British 'militarisation' of the South Atlantic. They obviously ignore the fact that our defence is a simple response to their past aggression. The allusion to science has caused wry laughter among those who know the long history of our attempts to get them to co-operate on scientific research for the benefit of both countries. They walked away from the fisheries commission and have resisted attempts by respected international NGOs to reinstate some sort of co-operation in the region thus leaving the SW Atlantic as one of very few areas without regional research into the sustainable management of stocks. While we do what we can in the areas we manage, we are unable to do anything about the blatant disregard for conservation measures by Argentina. It is an inexplicable flouting of their clear responsibility to conserve stocks, not just to all their neighbours but to the world.

All aboard thanks to Fortuna Limited

STANLEY Kids Zone (SKZ) children are travelling in style thanks to Fortuna Ltd donating a brand new bus to help them travel safely and quickly around town.

"The old yellow bus was on its last legs," said SKZ Director Andrew Newman, who organised the acquisition of both the original and replacement bus.

"It was kindly donated by Fortuna some years back, and so we approached them to see if they could help with getting a loan for a new one. They came back to us and said if we would cost it and send them the information they'd cover the cost, which was just great. They've adopted Stanley Kid Zone as a community project really." Their charitable contribution was clearly well received with the children buzzing around eager to inspect the new bus.

It boasts spectacularly up-to-date safety features, floor lights, non-slip floor, hand rails and single point harnesses for each seat and even hooks so the children can hang up their school bags. "This means we can think about organising trips and fun days out that we wouldn't dare in the old girl," said Mr Newman.

The old yellow bus had served them well but will now be sold to try and recover some of the freight cost for its replacement.

Visiting family gets expensive

VISITING relatives in the Falklands turned out to be unusually expensive for St Helena Government environmentalist and conservation worker, Mr Kevin Williams, who was fined £600 and made to pay £85 prosecution costs in the Stanley Magistrates Court on Wednesday.

The court was told that at 3.43 on the afternoon of March 30, police officers received information by telephone from a member of the public that a Toyota Surf with two children as passengers was being driven erratically on Snake Hill and in the car park of Shorty's Diner. On entering the diner, police officers identified Mr Williams as the driver of the vehicle and when later tested for alcohol in the police station, Mr Williams' breath sample showed a reading of 59.4ml of alcohol per 100ml, well in excess of the permitted 35ml limit.

Sentencing Mr Williams, Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley said he was taking into account his early guilty plea and the lack of previous convictions, but the offence was a serious one exasperated by the fact that it had occurred in the centre of town, during daylight and that there were two children in the vehicle. Such behaviour was, he said, "wholly unacceptable."

Apart from the fine, Mr Williams was also disqualified from driving for 15 months and had his licence endorsed.

Intimate Tourism Awards ceremony

DUE to lack of ticket sales, this year's Tourism Awards Ceremony has been cancelled, Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB) Managing Director Tony Mason announced earlier this week.

Mr Mason said he was disappointed ticket sales had not been high enough to cover the event which was due to take place this Saturday night at the Town Hall.

He said: "We are terribly disappointed our ticket sales were not adequate to put on the event. We are very proud of those who have worked tirelessly over the season to champion the tourism initiatives in the Falkland Islands." Winners were invited to a private reception tonight, Friday April 12, hosted by Mr Mason and the staff of FITB at the Jetty Centre.

Port Margaret?

ISLANDERS were surprised to hear this week that according to the Daily Mail, Senior MPs were advocating a change of name from Stanley to Port Margaret after Baroness Margaret Thatcher.

The 'Senior MPs' were not named by the newspaper and the response to those approached by the Daily Mail was generally lukewarm.

Trial shows grading to be cheaper

CONTINUING the PWD's search to find a relatively inexpensive road sealing product which will reduce the need for constant grading of the Falkland Islands' rural roads, Roads Engineer Simon Catton reported to this week's meeting of the Transport Advisory Committee that on September 25, 2011 a road sealing product called EcoTrax was laid on 100m of the MPA road on the south side of Fitzroy Ridge.

The Committee was told that this product performed well over the one year trial period in that it held the surface together and significantly reduced the loss of material without requiring any maintenance such as grading.

During the same period, the adjoining section of the MPA road was graded 6 times indicating a significant benefit, however when it came time to repair the section of road it was found that the structural strength of the bound material had gone and the road had reverted back to its previous unsealed condition.

The original 100 m EcoTrax trial had cost £4,320 at 2011 prices and to regain the benefits achieved, the whole section would have to be treated again.

The average cost of grading one mile of the MPA road is estimated to be £360 at today's prices. Given that the EcoTrax material failed after one year, suggesting a constant need to rebuild the sealed surface at a cost far higher than that of general grading, the Committee agreed that the use of EcoTrax should not be continued.

Islands air strip repair

THE Transport Advisory Committee were informed this week that works on the West Point Airstrip were due to commence shortly, dependant upon the availability of Concordia Bay to move all the plant, materials and equipment needed.

These works are expected to take approximately two weeks, depending on the weather. Assistance will be given by Michael Clarke and accommodation and other support will be provided by the farm.

Whilst plant is on the island it is anticipated that work will be done to the temporary ramp formed during the investigative stage and to repair the sea wall supporting the historic woolshed.

The airstrip at Beaver Island is now open again, but what was described by FIGAS Manager Morgan Goss as "insufficient husbandry" had retarded the opening of the New Island airstrip.

Air Commodore Russell La Forte visits Penguin News

Cheerfully in charge of the 'big train set'

COMING into the Penguin News office on Monday, just ten days after taking up his duties, new Commander British Forces South Atlantic Islands (CBFSAI), Air Commodore Russell La Forte, seemed almost indecently chipper for a man facing a two-year posting in the Falklands.

Coincidentally his first day in charge, Friday March 29, was also his birthday and constituted, "the biggest and most expensive birthday present I have ever had."

Informed that the Governor had celebrated his recent birthday by running the Stanley Marathon, the Commander said that he could manage a marathon, "if pushed" and might have a go next year.

Asked how he felt at being appointed to his new role the Air Commodore said that having command in the Falklands represented a great privilege and a superb opportunity and added, "as an officer, what you want to do is command and I have been incredibly lucky; there aren't that many chances to command at one star level."

With the joint breadth of capabilities in the Falklands from all three services and critical support from the Civil Service and contractors, the new Commander said that, "it is a very broad train set that I have been entrusted with."

An added feature of the post is being "8000 miles away from your boss." In CBFSAI's case this is Commander Joint Forces Command, Air Chief Marshall Sir Stuart Peach, based at Northwood in England.

Describing Sir Stuart as, "very much a Falkland Islands supporter and very well-informed when it comes to matters to do with the Falkland Islands," the Air Commodore said he hoped to see him making a visit to the Islands at some stage.

As might be expected, Air Commodore La Forte said that, maintaining the operational edge of British Forces in the Falklands would be his top priority, and something for which a long and mainly operationally-focussed career had prepared him well.

In his time and at various ranks, the new CBFSAI has served on various occasions in Northern Ireland, but also in Sierra Leone, Georgia, (with the UN), Bosnia, Croatia, Iraq (on two occasions) and Afghanistan, also on more than one occasion.

Even the possibly unfair assertion that in following Brigadier Bill Aldridge into post, he was following perhaps the most popular CBF ever, did not dint the Air Commodore's good spirits, though he acknowledged that the Brigadier and his wife Jill would be a hard act to follow.

Like the Aldridges, the Air Commodore and his wife, Gillian, intend as much as possible, "to get out and about among the Falkland Islanders and a few other people that we are here to look after and reassure." Not only was it great fun to get out and meet people, but it was also, "a critical part of the job."

Mrs La Forte will be joining the Air Commodore in the Falklands at the end of this month once their son has returned safely from service in Afghanistan. Like his father he is serving with the RAF Regiment. Two of the couple's three daughters will remain at the family home in a village near RAF Brize Norton with the family's newly-acquired black Labrador.

As President of the RAF Mountaineering Association, Air Commodore La Forte says that the outdoors is his "thing" and just getting out in a remote environment "is so therapeutic and relaxing."

The day after his arrival, the new CBFSAI visited the RBA's agricultural show at Goose Green, in civvies and very much enjoyed the experience of meeting some of the agricultural community.

"The icing on the cake," according to the CBFSAI, "is just the warmth and hospitality of the people, which even in the short time I have been here is just immediately apparent. To come somewhere on an operation where everyone wants you to be there is very welcoming and the exception to the rule."

Cooks get physical for SAMA and British Legion

ALL three armed services and a civilian team from Sodexo competed in Exercise Falklands Caterer, a physical, mental and gastronomic challenge at Mount Pleasant Complex on Saturday March 6.

The charity competition, to raise money for the Royal British Legion and SAMA 82, began with teams marching 10 km while carrying 15 kg packs. This was followed by an hour of mental and physical tasks before the main event - a Ready, Steady, Cook style cook-off.

The teams of four were given a set range of ingredients as well as a surprise last-minute ingredient, and then had two and half hours in which to prepare and start serving a three-course meal.

The results of their efforts were judged by a panel of four including the new Commander British Forces, Air Commodore Russell La Forte, and the Chairman of the Falklands branch of the Royal British Legion, Liam Shelbourne.

As well as trying to please the judging panel, the teams had to provide the same meals for 20 paying customers from their own service.

Wing Commander Stuart Edmondson, who was on the RAF table said: "The first course wasn't brilliant, but the main course - the vegetables were amazing and the pudding, well, it was gone in five seconds."

Judge Liam Shelbourne, who had a slightly less biased view, said: "The food was very good. Judging on food is obviously done on personal taste, but we were also looking at the presentation and how the food was cooked. It was very close.

"Overall it was a wonderful event, with lots of money going charity. What more could we ask for?"

The RAF team were crowned the overall champions after winning the 10 km march and serving up the highest-scoring meal.

The Army and civilian teams finished in joint second place with the Navy not far behind.

The event raised over £2,000 which will be split between the two charities.

The organiser, Capt Ali Hughes RLC, would like to thank all those in Stanley and around the Islands who provided generous donations to the raffle and for all the support given on the day.

Tree is living memory of iconic para Hank

FIVE ex-combatants, former members of 2 Para, this week paid tribute to Steve 'Hank' Hood, the man who featured in iconic film footage taken after the battle of Goose Green.

In 1982 Hank was filmed with his comrades drinking from a bottle of Bacardi given to them by a newly liberated Goose Green resident.

Gaz Beman, Steve Harris, Pip Hall and Mark Saunders were all visiting the Islands for the first time since 1982 accompanied by Dave 'Charlie' Brown who has made the journey south on many occasions.

Hank died on January 3 of this year.

Dave Brown told Penguin News the group planted a tree at Goose Green near the spot where Hank was filmed.

"It's a living memory of Hank," said Dave.

Some of Hank's ashes were also scattered and a rose was laid by the tree from his widow Carol.

The men, Carol and Hank's two sons, are grateful to Tim Miller of Stanley Growers, for the donation of the tree.

Further to Self Determination

WHILE Prof. Willetts' response to my recent remarks on his Stanley public lecture and his 'distributed sovereignty' paper is to be appreciated, he still fails to fully explicate the essentials of his proposal.

I am leaving aside his ruling out the legitimate option of independence on the doubtful grounds that the Falklands wouldn't be able to staff a diplomatic service, join all the UN agencies etc. Indeed, independent countries like Liechtenstein, San Marino, Monaco, Andorra, Belize, and numerous Caribbean and Pacific island states are doing perfectly well with international representation suitably scaled to fit their particular needs as practical.

The key question here is – How come that Prof. Willetts believes his proposed, "creative variation on free association" between the Falklands and Canada might be acceptable to Argentina? Is it not because that would be no free association with Canada at all? Indeed, there is not a single case of free association between two states with the land patrimony being simultaneously allocated to a third country, as his proposal envisages ("the British could agree that the land belongs to Argentina").

Contrary to what he claims, the international practice does not confine the legal right to self determination to colonial people alone. In the mentioned case of Scotland for instance, it is not some "moral right to govern themselves" involved but self determination par excellence – claimed by the Scottish people, recognised by HMG, and scheduled to be exercised by way of a forthcoming referendum. Likewise, in his 1998 opinion 'Reference re Secession of Quebec' the Supreme Court of Canada held that in the case of a positive referendum vote any possible secession should be negotiated rather than carried out unilaterally, but otherwise commented on and did not question the Quebecer right to self determination under international law.

Apparently, Prof. Willetts' insistence that only colonial people are entitled to self determination seeks to imply that the exercise of that right is a one-time event, and once his proposal were accepted then the Falklanders would cease to be such people (according to him) and thus would be no longer in a position to decide their future. However, the right of self determination is not terminated by any one-time application as demonstrated e.g. by the Puerto Ricans who have had their association status with the USA confirmed in three referendums, only to change their mind in a fourth referendum and opt for integration as a 51st US state, or by the Arubans who have forsaken their pending independence to stay associated with the Netherlands instead.

Would it not be better to let the Falkland Islanders keep on freely pursuing their political and constitutional development at a pace and mode of their choice, including the opportunity to hold future referendum or referendums at a time they find appropriate, and with all the options made available?

Ouch

ON behalf of the cast and crew of F.I.O.D.A's latest production, I write to express my extreme disappointment at the coverage of the event by your newspaper.

I invited a member of your staff to attend the dress rehearsal in the hopes that, as in the past, you would provide an independent and objective review of the production.

What did we get? A series of photographs which we could have provided, with captions, the information for which I did provide prior to the date of the rehearsal.

Having since spoken to a number of people representing various organisations, I now realise my mistake. Apparently these days, in order to have an article, a report, or a review printed in the Penguin News, you have to write it yourself.

Perhaps a clue to the reason for this new style of news gathering can be found in last week's editorial. If you at Penguin News don't write the articles, you are not in danger of being subjected to, "sharp words over the phone or in the checkout line at the supermarket" and there is no need for you to have to take a "detached and critical view of what is going on around you."

Flock rams snapped up at Saladero

AS a result of all 'sale rams' being sold and the March Department of Agriculture National Stud Flock ram sale, a further sale of the 'flock rams' was held on the March 9 and all lots were sold.

Bids were received from nine farms and all lots (of five rams per lot and one lot of three) were sold above the reserve price, reported the Senior Agricultural Adviser Andy Pollard in a paper to the Agricultural Advisory Committee today, April 12.

Mr Pollard said all of those farms submitted a brief description of how they intended to utilise the rams and what they wished to achieve. The highest bid was £510, the lowest £210, for the pen of three. The total amount of income received from the 'flock rams' was £4,540. A combined income of £20,630 was made from the sale of both 'flock' and 'sale' rams.

Twenty eight farms were represented at the show. All rams were sold in the private auction, with nothing sold at reserve price. The overall top price was £400 for an ex-elite ram and £390 for a Merino cross, shearling ram. The total amount of income received from the sale rams was £16,090 which also included some older ewes.

In today's meeting members also examined proposed changes to the Farm Improvement Programme (the former Pasture Improvement Programme) and changes to Agricultural Returns. Rural Business Association and independent farmers were also elected to the committee.

Dancing with Jim

Triumphant at 10 Downing Street

"THE House meets this Saturday to respond to a situation of great gravity. We are here because, for the first time for many years, British sovereign territory has been invaded by a foreign power. After several days of rising tension in our relations with Argentina, that country's armed forces attacked the Falkland Islands yesterday and established military control of the islands.

"I must tell the House that the Falkland Islands and their dependencies remain British territory. No aggression and no invasion can alter that simple fact. It is the Government's objective to see that the islands are freed from occupation and are returned to British administration at the earliest possible moment....

"The Government have now decided that a large task force will sail as soon as all preparations are complete. HMS Invincible will be in the lead and will leave port on Monday. ...

The people of the Falkland Islands, like the people of the United Kingdom, are an island race.

"Their way of life is British; their allegiance is to the Crown. They are few in number, but they have the right to live in peace, to choose their own way of life and to determine their own allegiance. It is the wish of the British people and the duty of Her Majesty's Government to do everything that we can to uphold that right. That will be our hope and our endeavour and, I believe, the resolve of every Member of the House."

Remembering the Iron Lady

THE Falklands war of 1982 was described as the "defining moment" in the career of former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Britain's first and only female Prime Minister, and the lady who sent the Task Force to the aid of Falkland Islanders in 1982 following an invasion by Argentine forces, died on Monday, April 8, of a stroke, after many years of poor health.

Margaret Hilda Roberts was born on October 13, 1925 in Grantham, Lincolnshire, the daughter of a grocer. She went to Oxford University and then became a research chemist, retraining to become a barrister in 1954. In 1951, she married Denis Thatcher, a wealthy businessman, with whom she had two children.

Mrs Thatcher became a Conservative member of parliament for Finchley in North London in 1959, serving as its MP until 1992. Her first parliamentary post was junior Minister for Pensions in Harold Macmillan's government.

From 1964 to 1970, when Labour were in power, she served in a number of positions in Edward Heath's shadow cabinet. Heath became Prime Minister in 1970 and Mrs Thatcher was appointed Secretary for Education.

After the Conservatives were defeated in 1974, Mrs Thatcher challenged Mr Heath for the leadership of the party and, to the surprise of many, won. In the 1979 general election, the Conservatives came to power and Mrs Thatcher became Prime Minister.

She was an advocate of privatising state-owned industries and utilities, reforming trade unions, lowering taxes and reducing social expenditure across the board. Mrs Thatcher's policies succeeded in reducing inflation, but unemployment dramatically increased during her years in power.

Victory in the Falklands War in 1982 and a divided opposition helped Mrs Thatcher win a landslide victory in the 1983 general election. In 1984, she narrowly escaped death when the IRA planted a bomb at the Conservative party conference in Brighton.

In foreign affairs, Mrs Thatcher cultivated a close political and personal relationship with US president Ronald Reagan, based on a common mistrust of communism, combined with free-market economic ideology. Mrs Thatcher was nicknamed the 'Iron Lady' by the Soviets. She warmly welcomed the rise of reformist Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

In the 1987 general election, Mrs Thatcher won an unprecedented third term in office. But controversial policies, including the poll tax and her opposition to any closer integration with Europe, produced divisions within the Conservative Party which led to a leadership challenge. In November 1990, she agreed to resign and was succeeded as party leader and Prime Minister by John Major.

In 1992, Mrs Thatcher left the House of Commons. She was appointed a peeress in the House of Lords with the title of Baroness Thatcher of Kesteven and continued giving speeches and lectures across the world. She also founded the Thatcher Foundation, which aimed to advance the cause of political and economic freedom, particularly in the newly liberated countries of central and eastern Europe. In 1995 she became a member of the Order of the Garter, the highest order of knighthood in England.

After a series of minor strokes, Baroness Thatcher retired from public speaking in 2002.

Speaking of her death, US President Barack Obama said the world had "lost one of the great champions of freedom and liberty" and that "America has lost a true friend."

Ahead of his return to the UK, British Prime Minister David Cameron said on Monday: "Margaret Thatcher succeeded against all the odds. The real thing is she didn't just lead our country; she saved our country."

"I believe she will go down as the greatest British peacetime Prime Minister."

A Buckingham Palace spokesman also commented earlier this week: "The Queen was sad to hear the news of the death of Baroness Thatcher. Her Majesty will be sending a private message of sympathy to the family."

Mrs Thatcher and the Falkland Islands

ON April 25, 1982, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher stepped outside No 10 Downing Street accompanied by her Defence Secretary John Nott to update the public on the progress of the Falklands war.

Mr Nott announced the surrender of Argentine Forces on South Georgia, 700 miles south-east of the Falklands. The capture of the island by a group of Argentines on March 19, 1982 had been the precursor to the invasion of the Falklands on April 2.

As Mr Nott finished his statement, the gathered press clamoured for more comment.

"Just rejoice at that news and congratulate our forces and the Marines," was the Iron Lady's response.

The main campaign to re-take the Falklands would be completed on June 14.

Falkland Islanders first became personally acquainted with Mrs Thatcher and her husband Denis on January 10, 1983, when she paid a surprise visit to the Islands.

On arrival she was greeted by Governor Rex Hunt who said: "This is a great moment in the history of the Falkland Islands. For me personally it is probably the greatest moment of my life. It was here in Stanley, Town Hall on the second of April that I told General Garcia that he had landed illegally on British territory and I ordered him and his troops to remove themselves forthwith. In reply General Garcia said that they were taking back what was rightfully theirs, and that they would be here for ever. But for our distinguished guest they might well have been."

Mrs Thatcher was granted the Freedom of the Islands and responded "as you know the whole British people were outraged that such an invasion should have occurred, and promptly set about remedying the situation of throwing the invader off the islands. And as I said in the House of Commons, restoring British sovereignty and British administration to a people of British stock who were British."

"Today again the Union Jack flies over Port Stanley, and may it ever fly there. So we in the Falkland Islands and in Great Britain re-dedicate our lives to the cause of freedom and justice of people here and everywhere. We have given an example to the world, and hope to many of those who do not enjoy these great qualities. May we also act as a beacon of hope to them, that so long as we defend that which is ours now, they too one day may enjoy these great things."

In Argentina her visit was described as, "a new act of provocation and arrogance," but Islanders were delighted to greet the couple who had made the second part of the 24 hour trip in a lumbering C-130 Hercules specially outfitted with a soundproof cabin.

Mrs Thatcher's second visit was in June 1992 for a four day visit in order to mark the 10th anniversary of the Falklands war when she was greeted by H E the Governor William Fullerton on June 12.

Hundreds of Islanders greeted her in Stanley waving British and Falkland Islands flags. Mrs Thatcher left her car to chat to those gathered on Reservoir Road. Asked by reporters if she had any regrets about sending the Task Force she told reporters: "I'd do it again. Look at these children - of course I'd do it again."

During her second visit she insisted that, "this history must not be forgotten," adding, "It must be recorded for the people of the future so that they know what happened here and how liberty was preserved."

She visited Goose Green and Fox Bay; and at the latter Mrs Shirley Knight gave a speech of welcome. Mrs Knight said: "Had it not been for her decisiveness and resolve in 1982 we would not be celebrating this historic occasion today."

"She proved an inspiration to Her Majesty's forces who then performed the seemingly impossible task of retaking these Islands after Argentine invasion."

Mrs Thatcher also attended a wreath laying service at the 1982 memorial; a day blessed by sunshine followed by a public reception at which May Queen Nina Aldridge presented her with a painting of the Two Sisters mountains by local artist Mike Peake. She also spent time at a Heritage Year Dance.

On both visit to the Islands she visited the British Cemetery at San Carlos.

On returning to UK she wrote a letter to Islanders that ended: "Finally we left the Islands with the renewed and deepening knowledge that what was done ten years ago by the Task Force was RIGHT for the people of the Falkland Islands, right for Britain and for all who love freedom and justice everywhere."

A rapport with Islanders

A SPECIAL report for Penguin News by Harold Briley remembering Margaret Thatcher, whose activities he reported for 50 years.

I first encountered Margaret Thatcher as a new Member of Parliament in 1959 when I was among the few people in the House of Commons, listening to her maiden speech.

Our paths were to cross many times when I was for 15 years a political and defence correspondent, covering the Cold War in Eastern Europe, and while a Latin America Correspondent in Buenos Aires during the Argentine invasion.

In all those years, I think she had greater rapport with the Falkland Islanders than with anyone else and felt more at home and safer there. Of all the honours showered upon her, she particularly valued the unique accolade of having the Freedom of the Falkland Islands conferred upon her by Harold Rowlands.

She also had a friendly relationship and mutual respect with Rex Hunt, whose 80th birthday celebration she attended at Falklands Government Office in London.

I was told the only people she ever knelt before were the Brownies of the Falkland Islands when she was invited to take part in a sketch they performed in her honour! If so, I wish I had been there and got a photograph!

I accompanied her on her tenth anniversary visit in 1992 and interviewed her on the RAF flight south. She told me that "Despite being the Iron Lady, I am a compassionate woman. These were the most difficult years of my life and the worst decision I ever had to make was to send men to war knowing some of them would be killed." She demonstrated that compassion by writing to all the families of the dead.

The Argentines were astonished by her response to the invasion. The Foreign Minister, Costa Mendez, told me they never expected her to react as she did. "The war was a mistake," he said. "We wanted only to force definitive talks for transfer of sovereignty."

She had no idea where Falklands were. Nor did Defence Secretary John Nott. They had to consult the Times Atlas to find out on the night of the invasion.

She famously said: "The Lady is not for turning." But she turned completely on Government policy on the Falklands which for years had been to transfer sovereignty through negotiations. But she made amends for this with her brave and risky decision to send a task force and her steely unwavering determination to see the conflict through to victory. South Atlantic veterans told me they admired her for this despite the danger they faced.

The invasion came as a complete surprise leaving the Government dismayed and in disarray. A pessimistic Defence Secretary, John Nott, advised her that the Islands could not be recaptured. But this was contradicted by the head of the Royal Navy, Sir Henry Leach, with experience of the Second World War. In full admiral's uniform he was the hero of the hour when he told her he could immediately despatch a task force.

"Don't pussyfoot about," he told her. "Send every ship we have. What is the use of having the Royal Navy if you don't use it?" Fortunately he still had some of the vital aircraft carriers and the Endurance which John Nott was in the process of getting rid of.

Emboldened by his advice, her resolve hardened and she made a Churchillian speech to Parliament saying the repressive Argentine military dictators could not prevail. The Islands would be liberated. This also brought about the downfall of the dictatorship, the very scenario they had tried to avoid by launching the invasion.

And it paved the way for all the military dictatorships in Latin America to progress to democracy. Margaret Thatcher's influence on the whole of Latin America is often ignored.

The most controversial act of the war was sinking the Belgrano with heavy loss of lives. Argentina tried to have her prosecuted internationally as a war criminal. But even the Argentine admirals I interviewed told me it was a legitimate act of war.

She was caricatured by the Argentine media as a pirate complete with skull and crossbones headgear and even eye patch. But even some of the military dictators in other Latin American countries told me they admired her for her toughness.

I was partly responsible for her being called the Iron Lady by the Soviet Union, reacting to a despatch I wrote about a speech she made at Finchley Town Hall in her constituency.

It was translated and transmitted by the BBC Russian bulletin, to which the Russians reacted by calling her the Iron Lady. She was amused when I told her how this came about this, but revelled thereafter in the image it gave her and enhancing her reputation as a tough leader.

FALKLANDS 4X4

CROZIER ROAD STANLEY FALKLAND ISLANDS

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

I'VE done a very dusty job today but feel very good about the results. All through Spring and Summer I bemoan the fact that I never seem to have enough plant pots and trays to cover my needs, or perhaps I should say, my ambitions? When Autumn and Winter come I completely change my tune and whinge about the number of plant pots and seed trays awaiting a good scrub. Never satisfied eh? Well, Bill had put me an old double drainer sink and running water in the 'peat shed' (it will probably always be known as that to us, even if we cannot remember when it last held peat) together with a fairly long counter. However, all through the season all sorts of things such as empty garden compost bags, buckets, bits of wood, tools and, of course, used pots and trays get thrown in there at the end of the day, always with the intention of tidying up the next morning, of course. So really, all I had to do to use the sink was clear a space to reach it! Job done, I can now rest on my laurels for a little while until the other gardening jobs are done and all plant pots and trays are finished with so I can wash my 'dishes'!

The other, smaller job, was to get the potatoes dug out of the compost bin before they died down and became separated from the parent plant making them harder to find. They were never intended to grow in there and can only have done so from peelings so I will have to be extra vigilant next year. Hopefully this will not happen again but, there were some pretty decent spuds there so I will make the best of them. It was a good time to get rid of the nests of slug and earwig eggs in there too. The birds certainly enjoyed them!

Although the pretty colchicums (Autumn crocus) are already flowering, everything else appears to be rather late this season. True, the earwigs made the dahlias look a mess but they would have still flowered had we not had rather cold and snowy weather which more or less finished them off. Although many plants are young ones, and the roses from cuttings are very young indeed, they show flower buds. As it seems very late in the season I shall be cutting them off to allow all the strength back into the developing plant. I'm starting to put cuttings of those and other plants into pots though. Also taking pipings off the various dianthus (pinks and carnations). You can never have too many of those; when they start flowering they forget to stop and, who would want them to?

The earwigs seem to be great in number again. Last year we were sprayed around the house against them and it worked wonderfully. This year the large amounts of rain seem to have rendered the poison ineffective for the bugs are very thick and even, to my disgust, managing to enter the house again.

In the tunnels they have even managed to polish off some of the marrows. I was amazed that they had been able to bite through the skin; when mature that is incredibly tough.

I may have been a little unfair to earwigs in blaming them for everything, for when I was lifting some tomatoes and ripe strawberries the other day it was wood-lice that fell out of them. I've planted garlic cloves in there as well as outside; let's see what they think of those!

Although some of the potatoes have died down, probably due to weather rather than maturity, many in the rows are still very green so I will not be digging those for a while, those in the tunnels have almost all been dug (and eaten). They did well and all grew large, the 'rockets' having grown very well and plentifully. Unfortunately they are a floury potato in our ground and I dislike that quality for cooking with so will not be saving any seed this year. Pity.

The tomatoes are still going strong if somewhat untidily. None are more untidy than the bush ones, but oh, they are probably the strongest in flavour, quite yummy and very more-ish, not to mention convenient for popping into the pocket to chomp on the way around the garden!

The peppers are starting to colour; they will not grow any more so I will take them off the plants now. The pumpkins are also maturing rather than growing now, so I will be bringing them in to store, soon.

It is much too nice at the moment to be inside; there doesn't even appear to be much wind these days, another sign that we are very much in Autumn I guess. There also doesn't appear to be any slowing down on the weed growth though, so I shall carry on doing battle with them whenever time and weather permit.

I also need to break up and move the rhizomes of various irises grown from seed which have made so much growth over the last couple of years that they are threatening all other plants in the border. I even found a hosta hiding next to one. They are not exactly small plants either so you get some idea of the size of these iris clumps.

The couch grass is also making the best of them to spread itself all over, but still, for all that, gardening is fun and, usually, rewarding?

Experience and new tricks in the Energise Shield

ENERGISE Shield leaders Penguins took on Flyers in the first match on Tuesday evening. Both teams took a while to warm up and get shots on target, with only one score in the first 20 minutes half by Duane Evans for Penguins.

The second half started with frustrated enthusiasm; both sides eager to light up the score board. Kyran Evans scored quickly pushing a two goal lead for Penguins, but Flyers Antoine Daille retaliated with a cheeky goal from behind the keeper.

Kevin Ross stretched the lead for Penguins once more and it became clear that the Flyers were flustered. The jury's still out whether Antoine threw or dropped his stick, but finding himself stickless he decided the best way to guard the ball was to sprawl out and lean on the corner of the Sports Hall like a drunk man relieving himself. Not surprisingly this new tactic did not pay off and the Evans brothers recovered the ball for Duane to score again.

With five minutes left on the clock the game looked sewn up in Penguins favour, until the Scottish Rocket sprinted up court with a goal for Flyers: Gordon Lennie may be the oldest player in the league but he is not a man to leave unguarded. Responding immediately to the text book goal the youth of the Penguins, Kyran, scored just seconds later. Final score Flyers 2, Penguins 5.

Hurricanes took on the Blackhawks in the next game, which was a great display of experienced players stretching out their legs in the new season.

First to score was Blackhawks' Izzy Ceballos with a dominant scoop in the net. Both sides were committed from the start but few shots were on target. Hurricanes were starting to feel uncomfortable trailing the Hawks and Captain Grant Budd moved up field from a defensive role to secure two goals before the end of the first half.

The second half started frantically Blackhawks' guest goalie Marcus Morrison (who had just finished a game with his team Penguins) was under attack with Nick Francis leading the charge with a hat-trick of goals; two just 30 seconds apart.

Blackhawks could not get past Hurricanes Goalie Stuey Duncan who seemed to be plucking shots out of the air that were invisible to the naked eye.

Notification of Routine Live Firing Exercise

British Forces South Atlantic Islands (BFSAI) will be undertaking a routine Rapier live firing exercise from 15th to 28th April 2013 from Port Harriet range.

The exercise is part of the normal training cycle for the Resident Rapier Battery.
This type of exercise has been conducted in the Falklands for many years and is an example of the excellent training benefits offered by the Falkland Islands to those serving as part of BFSAI.

Rapier missiles provide short-range surface-to-air defensive capability out to a maximum range of 8.2 kilometres.

The firings will take place from the Port Harriet range out to sea, in the immediate proximity of the Falkland Islands and will remain well within Falkland Islands territorial waters and airspace.

The UK has an exemplary safety record with these exercises, and takes its responsibilities in these matters very seriously. Members of the public are requested to avoid the Port Harriet range until notified. Any questions regarding safety and access to the range should be directed to the Range Safety Officer on 76012 or mobile 53433.

Islanders honour Baroness Thatcher in Falklands and London

TEN young Falkland Islanders sat with a group of fifty Falklands War veterans at the funeral for Baroness Thatcher at St Paul's Cathedral in London on Wednesday.

One of those attending the funeral, Sam Cockwell told Penguin News: "The service was very moving, with the feeling of true reverence, respect and dignity. Particularly for me the eulogy was perfect, exactly the right balance of anecdote and moving tribute to her life."

He said overall the service and whole event seemed to go extremely well, "with thousands turning out lining the streets to pay respects as the casket was taken through London. There was no sign as far as I could see of the disgraceful and immensely distasteful displays that we have seen news of in the past weeks, indicating, at least to me that the vast majority, despite what people may have thought of particular decisions in the past, respected Lady Thatcher."

Also present Roxanne King described it as an, "immense occasion," and, "we felt incredibly honoured to have been invited to be a part of it."

She said later at the end of the Guildhall reception most of the Falklands students were grouped together, "and the Prime Minister David Cameron came and spoke to us. He was very pleased when we said we were from the Falklands and said he thought Margaret Thatcher would have been very pleased that we had attended the service. He expressed his support for the Falklands and said that he hoped to visit one day."

She said he also spoke of the recent referendum and described it as hugely significant and beneficial to the Islands future.

In the Falkland Islands at a Memorial Thanksgiving Service for the life of Baroness Thatcher, led by the Reverend Richard Hines, Member of Legislative Assembly Ian Hansen also picked up on the theme of the lady's, "particular interest," in the future of young Falkland Islanders.

In a tribute to her he said: "For over two decades students at the Community School have competed for the Margaret Thatcher Trophy, awarded for services to the school. Lady Thatcher personally donated the trophy, saying that it would serve as a reminder 'that we, who have been given so much by those who fought for us, have to give something back'."

Speaking of Lady Thatcher's strength as a politician MLA Hansen said, "...her conviction that standing up for justice and freedom was the right thing to do, may have made her difficult decisions easier. We must give thanks for that conviction, and for her strength of character. Because of her courage, and the skill, bravery and sacrifice of Britain's armed forces - our liberty and our future were secured."

Reverend Hines described the Falklands service as, "an explicit attempt to express by our presence and by our carefully-chosen words, something of the profound gratitude felt in these Islands for the unique contribution made by Margaret Thatcher in ensuring its residents' liberty and future well-being."

Oil processes uncovered

WHILE fears about the impact of the oil industry on the Falklands may still lurk in some quarters and important decisions still remain to be made about a number of matters including the on-shore fabrication of pipelines, this week the general public were given a real opportunity to increase their understanding of the various processes involved in harvesting this important natural resource.

Considerably more people than attend the usual public meetings in the Town Hall packed the Narrows Bar on Tuesday night to hear Premier Oil's man in the Falklands, Ken Humphrey, deliver an informative presentation on the proposed development of the Sea Lion Field in the North Falklands Basin.

The presentation was originally developed for a forum involving senior management from Premier, senior government officials and MLAs, and was intended, Mr Humphrey said, to allow the principal interested parties: the oil company, the private sector and government, to identify areas of concern and also those areas where joint involvement in the development would be necessary.

Describing his company as, "simple oil folk," Mr Humphrey, who was originally employed by the field's discoverers, Rockhopper Exploration PLC, was at pains to stress that Premier Oil, which now owns sixty per cent of Rockhopper's interest in the Sea Lion Field, shares his former company's concerns about strict environmental procedures and was equally interested in working with both government and private sectors in the Falklands.

After a giving an illustrated lecture on the details of oil extraction to a floating production, storage and off-take system (FPSO), which is the methodology that Premier expect to use, Mr Humphrey charted the expected life-cycle of the Sea Lion field from today until its expected decommissioning around 25-30 years after the first oil is produced. This is expected to occur in 2017, as the first drilling begins, as planned, in 2015.

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

LAST week, we were being urged in certain quarters to consider changing the name of Stanley in honour of Baroness Thatcher. Without wishing to show any lack of respect for someone whom we honoured when she was alive by awarding her the Freedom of the Falklands and by naming both a street and a day after her, the first reaction in this office to such a suggestion was one of hilarity.

Once the laughter had died down, we began to consider the suggestion more seriously and some pragmatic factors began to emerge, like the sheer cost and annoyance that such a move would involve. For starters, anything that is currently printed with the word Stanley, from business cards to mile-stones, would have to be re-printed, or re-chiselled. Would UK MP Tobias Ellwood, who considers such a move appropriate, be prepared to meet the costs involved? I doubt it.

While some are resigned to using the name Malvinas when trying to identify where we live to Spanish speakers, others don't like it and I don't know of anyone, even including some Argentine friends, willing to use or accept the name Puerto Argentino, imposed on us in 1982 and vividly recall the horror that all the inhabitants of Stanley felt when immediately after the invasion our capital briefly became Puerto Rivero.

The fact that Argentina continues to use the name they tried to impose on us only serves to remind us of that country's lack of respect for us. It also makes the complaint by Argentine Foreign Secretary Hector Timerman that changing the name of Stanley would breach United Nations resolutions more than usually odd, even for him.

I have some sympathy with the view that annoying the Argentine Government is sufficient reason for changing Stanley's name, but fun though that might be, it rather ignores the original and presumably serious reason behind the suggestion, which was about honouring the memory of Lady Thatcher and acknowledging her contribution to our freedom.

However, one can imagine the fuss that would be created in England if we in the Falkland Islands were to suggest that the ancient city of York should be renamed Rowntreeville or Hudsonstown on the reasonable basis that these two entrepreneurs were responsible for establishing it as a prosperous chocolate and railway city in the 19th Century.

What worries me is that this kind of thing typifies the attitude of certain sectors of the British press and the British political establishment, which seem to regard the Falkland Islands as some kind of quaint toy town to be re-named, re-painted, or perhaps abandoned to the back of the cupboard, according to their whim.

While support from any quarter is normally welcome, if those giving it do not understand that what we are about is self-determination rather than being anybody's possession or colonial vassal, we might be better off without it. As the old adage goes: "with friends like these, who needs enemies?"

'Seven continents' Tim and Peter raise squash awareness

SQUASH players Tim Garner and Peter Nicol MBE currently playing the Xodus 7 Continent Challenge, visited the Falklands last week. The challenge the pair face comprises playing seven matches in seven days on seven continents, all to raise awareness of the bid to include squash in the 2020 Olympic Games.

First stop on the Falklands was morning tea with the HE the Governor Nigel Haywood. They then called in to Stanley Leisure Centre for some community work. More than 30 students from Year 8 at the Falkland Islands Community School were given an explanation about squash in general and why Peter and Tim were in the Islands.

At Mount Pleasant Complex they took on the RAF's finest. Fortunately for the pair the challenge was squash and not aerial manoeuvres, Stanley player Roger Spink told Penguin News.

A keen bunch of 'victims' stepped forward and battled hard for scant reward, particularly against Peter Nicol who was clearly conserving energy before the first challenge match and barely leaving the 'T' while his opponents gasped for breath.

On Saturday, before they reached the start line of the Xodus 7 Continent Challenge, they met up with Kevin and Hattie Kilmar-tin in order to visit the award winning Bluff Cove Lagoon penguins. Peter and Tim said they felt privileged to see the birds in their natural environment.

A cup of coffee, a couple of Hattie's legendary biscuits and they were all set to head off to Mount Pleasant for match number one.

Mr Spink said: "The crowd were treated to some top quality squash from Tim Garner and the legendary Peter Nicol," with Peter beating Tim 3-2 (11/9, 11/9, 8/11, 9/11, 12/10) in 65 Minutes.

During his career Peter has won more than 50 major international titles, including Commonwealth Games singles gold in 1998 and 2006, and doubles gold in 2002 and 2006.

He spent 60 months at the top of the world rankings and was awarded an MBE in 1999.

During his career, he won one World Open title, two British Open titles, and four Commonwealth Games Gold Medals. He is widely considered to be one of the most outstanding international squash players of his time.

The challenge began on Saturday, April 13.

PENGUIN News was essential reading at the Chinese Grand Prix in Shanghai last week, according to Canadians Philip and Richard (far left and far right in photo) who visited the Falklands earlier this year. Darwin Corral wedding for Steve and Beth STEVE Dent and Beth Reid were married at pretty Darwin Corral on Saturday April 6.

An intimate afternoon service with family and close friends present, the happy couple were married by Louise Taylor with Jan Parke overseeing as Registrar.

The bride's brother Alex gave Beth away and Pamela D'Avino, Lauren Dent, Tiph Reid, Meredith Ellis and Rosanna Reid were the bridesmaids.

Axel Reid and Byron Stewart-Reid were groomsmen and witnesses were Graham Didlick and Joseph Reid.

A small buffet lunch at Darwin House prepared by Fiona Didlick, followed the service.

Beth wore a teal dress with flowers prepared by Fiona Didlick. The bridesmaids all wore handmade teal dresses created by Trudi Betts. Karma salon hair-dresser Rodrigo Palma-Torres, "provided all who were up for it with fantastic styling and Pame from Karma applied beautiful makeup," said Beth.

They had a small evening function at Cahoots in Stanley and the couple honeymooned at Bleaker Island. The cake was made by Rebecca Hill and Jackie Cooper, and was a cupcake stand with a rich chocolate cake.

Continued from front page: Mr Humphrey was at some pains to point out that the whole Sea Lion Project was somewhere between the appraisal and development phases. Many decisions had not yet been made because a number of options were still being evaluated.

Among the options still being explored were how to construct the necessary pipe works or flow lines from the seabed to the FPSO. Mr Humphrey explained that these could be transported on ships on gigantic reels, but due to the distances involved and the scarcity of the specialised vessels required, one possibility that was being explored was that large pipes, or 'bundles' containing necessary smaller pipes, should be made on shore in the Falklands and towed out to the drill sites. As the Penguin News reported recently, some discussions have been held about this with government and some preliminary surveying for suitable sites has been done.

"These things are not insignificant," Mr Humphrey explained, "we are talking about a fifty metre wide track which extends to six kilometres with a construction yard and a warehouse at the beach end." Once fabricated on a railway track the bundles, which could be up to six kilometres long would be attached to a floating towing head and then pulled out to sea by a vessel. Mr Humphrey was able to show pictures of a similar plant on a Scottish beach, both when it was in use and after decommissioning, when nearly all traces of its existence had been removed. Describing the provision of opportunities for local businesses as, "a personal crusade," Mr Humphrey, who said that he hopes to remain in the Falklands until the first oil is produced, told the meeting that Premier intends to hold workshops on standards and procurement practices for local companies, as well as running skill acquisition programmes.

Less rain say scientists

OVER a century of weather records from the Falklands, recently collated by Jim McAdam, indicate that seasonal rainfall has declined, and over 50 years of sunshine records show significant increases in mean summer sunshine and temperature.

What are average summer temperatures and rainfall likely to be in 20 to 70 years in the Falkland Islands? What might the impacts of climate changes like these be on all the functions and resources the countryside and natural environment provides us with? How might we act to increase resilience to likely negative changes whilst also plan to make use of any beneficial impacts?

These are some of the questions that are being addressed by a new EU BEST (Voluntary Scheme for Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services in Territories of the EU and Overseas Territories) funded project entitled 'TEFRA - Terrestrial Ecosystems of the Falklands - a Climate Change Risk Assessment'.

The project will be led by scientists Dr Rebecca Upson (RBG Kew) and Professor Jim McAdam (UK Falkland Islands Trust) in partnership with Falklands Conservation and the Falkland Islands Government.

Weather records collected from the Falklands and southern Patagonia are now being used to carry out climatic modelling by researchers at the world-renowned Tyndall Centre for Climate Change at the University of East Anglia. The results will be the most accurate predictions we can have of climate change in the Falklands and surrounding region.

Jim told Penguin News that results will be used, "to model likely impacts of climate change on native flora, invasive plants and key services (such as farming systems, water quality, soil stability and carbon storage) provided by the grasslands and soils of the Falklands."

Guayaquil C24

THE United Nations Special Committee on Decolonisation will hold its Pacific Regional Seminar in Guayaquil, Ecuador, from May 28-30. UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon in February called on the C24 to devise "fresh and creative," approaches in mobilising the political will needed to eradicate colonialism.

Just to be clear

AS a point of clarification in the article on page 3 vol 24 no 44 in relation to the Tourist Board change of status. The comment: "To me and the rest of industry it makes sense to have a single organisation," was made by MLA Summers.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Gavin Short shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

AS always, whilst the trip away was extremely fruitful and worthwhile, in my humble opinion it is always good to be back home in the best little country in the world.

I will say little about our trip away as it has already been in the media but when we think about what the referendum meant to the Falklands going forward, here is one little gem that came my way in South America.

I was speaking with a member of one of the pro Argentine (and not friends of the Falklands) groups and he rather grudgingly said that the referendum has put the Falklands in a very strong position and has considerably weakened the Argentine case so it has most definitely been, as some of my other colleagues have also been told, a game changer. We will not be able to change attitudes overnight and it is going to be a long hard struggle but as I said last week, we have the truth and time on our side.

The public meeting brought out some interesting points and issues. It was perhaps one of the more edgy meetings but perhaps that is to be expected as we start the run up to the election later this year.

I think the wish of people to somehow remember Mrs T (as she will always be to me) is laudable. It really isn't a question of "should we" but rather "how we should do it". I certainly favour something like a funded scholarship or the like, something that will live on, rather than some one off payment which will get swallowed up and be forgotten about. It is only through education that a people can realise the dream of fully controlling their own country. We are making great strides in that direction and I think Mrs T would approve of our desire to build on her decision to defend freedom and human rights and the efforts of all those who translated those wishes into actions. Let us make our country a living testament to the efforts of all who gave us back our right to freedom and the basic human right to determine our own future. The wonderful thing is that we have time. Time to have the debate, to reach a decision, a decision that will not be regretted further down the line.

Birthday bump for 4 year old Chandlery

STAFF at the Seafish Chandlery had an unexpected surprise on the supermarket's fourth birthday this week, when for the second time since opening a customer accidentally rammed the front of the building.

Fortunately the vehicle was not attempting to park in a bay opposite the window frontage, and the damage was limited to leaving an impression on the wall cladding.

Hamish Wylie who was responsible for the design and construction of the supermarket was surprised by the ease with which a small car had managed to push the substantial concrete block against the building and then mount it. "Clearly we should have built the shop three foot further back" he said.

Later in the day the directors and staff marked the occasion in a rather more conventional way by holding a barbecue.

Not Korea so let's not fear

FRESH evidence of the Argentine Government's shameless ability to distort the truth emerged this week in an official statement, which read, "Argentina's Foreign Ministry has found out that the British Government plans to carry out new military exercises from April 15 to 26 in occupied Argentinean territory, including missile launches from the Malvinas Islands."

This, according to the ministry's statement, is, "a new show of contempt from Britain for the resolutions of the United Nations, which call for both sides to resume negotiations on sovereignty and to abstain from introducing unilateral changes to the situation as long as the dispute continues, as well as a new provocation against Argentina."

Should anyone be alarmed by this apparent leak of supposedly secret military information, there is no need, we know where they got it from, though we are not sure what is meant by "occupied Argentine territory."

In fact, the planned missile launches will present no threat to anyone beyond about five miles from their firing point on the Falkland Islands.

However, just in case some innocent tea berry picker or rambler might wander into harm's way, the military took space on page 22 of last week's Penguin News to deliver a warning.

Under the heading 'Notification of Routine Live Firing Exercise' readers, including apparently officials at the Argentine Foreign Ministry, were warned that there would be routine Rapier live-firing exercises from the Port Harriet range from April 15 to 28.

Rapier missiles are not inter-continental; they provide short-range surface-to-air defensive capability out to a maximum range of 8.2 kms and in this case would be fired out to sea "in the immediate proximity of the Falkland Islands."

As the newspaper notice mentioned, "the exercise is part of the normal training cycle for the Resident Rapier Battery and has been conducted in the Falklands for many years." They are, the notice continued, "an example of the excellent training benefits offered by the Falkland Islands to those serving as part of the British Forces South Atlantic Islands."

Of course, given the reportedly parlous state of Argentina's armed forces, the concept of training with expensive live ammunition might be an alien one, but if the Argentine Government or anyone else has any further queries about the routine, innocuous and nonthreatening nature of these exercises, they are invited to address the Range Officer on telephone number 76012, of course not omitting the international 00500 code if calling from Argentina.

Absorbent materials soak up the diesel spill

Environmental Planning impressed with military's fuel spill response

ENVIRONMENTAL Planning Department (EPD) personnel spent much of Monday this week in the area around Mount Kent. They were there to evaluate the response by the military to a failure in the Mount Kent fuel pipeline causing an estimated 500 - 1000 litres of diesel oil to escape.

EPD Environmental Officer, Nick Rendell, told Penguin News on Tuesday that the spillage had occurred to the north of a stream which runs down the valley between Mount Challenger and Mount Kent and that he had been impressed by the efforts of Mount Pleasant Complex (MPC) personnel to rectify the situation. These had included the use of absorbent materials and the construction of a dam in the stream so that contaminated water could be pumped out by the use of something called a gully sucker.

Mr Rendell said that he was confident that the estimates of the quantity of fluid involved were accurate as the breach in the pipeline would have caused an immediately observable drop in pressure, following which the pumping operation would have been immediately suspended.

A press release from British Forces South Atlantic Islands (BFSAI) said that the leak had occurred on Saturday April 13 during an upgrade to the system which takes fuel to the Mount Kent base from tanks situated by the North Camp turn-off from the MPA Road and that throughout the weekend, personnel had been applying a number of pollution control systems. This work would go on as long as was deemed necessary.

The statement concluded: "BFSAI's environmental policy dictates that the same response is taken to any fuel spillage incident, regardless of size, which is why there have been high levels of activity at the site. Incidents such as this are taken very seriously and an investigation will be carried out to determine the cause so that the risk of a similar incident in future can be minimised."

Given that the fuel involved was diesel, which breaks down relatively easily and the quantity involved less than that contained in the average domestic fuel tank, Mr Rendell said that he was satisfied that the effects of the environmental contamination caused would be relatively short-lived, particularly if there was a reasonable amount of rain.

Mr Rendell stressed that this was a minor spillage and, as far as was known, the first in many years of operation.

While there were no implications for Stanley's drinking water, which comes from Moody Valley the oil supply operation would need to be reviewed if plans currently being considered for using the Murrell as an alternative water source for Stanley were to be put into action.

Reports on public meeting April 15

Burial space for 31 years

THE cemetery has approximately 31 years of provision of burial space. Members of Legislative Assembly (MLAs) assured Reverend Richard Hines. They agreed however, that thought should be given to future needs. There are 420 non-reserved spaces remaining in the existing area of the cemetery and 138 reserved plots. The average number of funerals per year is currently 18.

MLAs also told Reverend Hines that the cost of acquiring and operating a cremation facility had, after research, appeared too high to be considered.

Sapper plots available soon

FIRST time buyers will soon be able to buy Sapper Hill plots at a fixed rate, but will need to 'go on a list' MLA Halford told the meeting. Other plots will have houses that will be rented by FIG to locals and used for social housing. She hoped the private sector would look to catering for the housing needs of the oil industry.

MLA Halford responded to an individual concerned that oil industry workers would be separated from the community into 'ghettos'. MLAs agreed oil industry families should be integrated into the community.

£1 million to funeral?

A MEMBER of the public suggested FIG should pay £1 million towards Baroness Thatcher's funeral as a gesture of goodwill towards the British people.

Another individual disagreed, suggesting how this might be negatively interpreted by the British public.

MLAs disagreed with donating to the funeral, believing money would be better spent locally to commemorate Baroness Thatcher. One member of the public suggested a scholarship encouraging one or more young person into politics.

£1 million for Lady T's funeral

I, LIKE some others, was surprised at the total negative response from MLAs at the recent Public Meeting to this suggestion.

We, the Falkands people, can well afford it. FIG has approximately £200 million invested of ours in various funds. One 200th of our assets will hardly break the bank nor cause any sector or group a shortage or suffering in the next year.

Every £ of our assets is thanks to the determination and strength of one single lady 31 years ago. Had she not been there who knows, we might have still been liberated, or not. There were plenty of wets in her cabinet at the time. Every person in the Islands today, Islanders and permanent residents, contractors, work-permit holders, from whatever nation would almost certainly NOT be here today, but for her stand 31 years ago.

Many of us Islanders would no doubt have long since joined the 30,000 'desparcidos' after all the infamous Major Dowling already had a list prepared by June 1982 of people to be 'removed'.

It's a fine idea: a bust or statue in future, somewhere near the 1982 memorial, an annual scholarship, or the naming of an important place.

Actually we could afford all of those as well. They don't cost that much anyway by comparison. All are good local tributes, but, the one country that aided us in our hour of need was the UK and the one country that today is important and vital to our future still, is UK, whose people we need to be on OUR side.

The least we could do is show that we appreciate and care about it all.

In the age of internet it cannot be necessary to wait until all MLAs are back in one room, and, something like this is surely a public decision as well. We are the taxpayers and ultimate owners of those funds.

So why not a simple opinion survey to get the ball rolling?

Tim Miller Stanley

Ed's opinion: Sadly, while the idea mooted at the public meeting was well meant it is most likely that British tax payers would consider it incredibly self indulgent of Islanders to assist in funding a funeral, and would demand to know why, if the Falkland Islands Government had money to spare, it wasn't offered towards the cost of the Islands' defence. The latter would be perceived of greater benefit to the UK tax payer.

Ultimately, however, I don't believe now is the time, bearing in mind recent UK benefit cuts, that FIG should be flashing money around right under the noses of the British public. Whatever amount was offered there would always be someone who would point out that it bore no comparison to money already spent on the defence of the Islands. We could well turn out to be the whipping boys for current British public frustrations.

But how do you think Lady T should be commemorated locally? Write to PN and tell us.

Always grateful

ON that night of April 1 as we awaited the invasion we remembered too well the words of Nicolas Ridley in 1980, "if you upset the Argentines there is nothing that Britain can do or will do to help you." What a relief it was on the Saturday afternoon to hear Lady Thatcher in Parliament announce the dispatch of the Task force. I remember the comment by Enoch Powell in his speech of support saying: "Now we will see what sort of ferrous metal the Iron Lady is made of." During the coming weeks we realised that the ferrous metal was steel. Her strength in holding to her demand that the Argentine forces must withdraw from the Falklands before negotiations could start and the Task Force be halted, despite the calls by other nations to open talks immediately, should be admired by all. Lady Thatcher's tenacity and the courage and commitment of those making up the Task Force led to our freedom, our prosperity and our continued status as a British Overseas Territory.

We will always be grateful to lady Thatcher and the British Armed Forces for ensuring our continued existence in these Islands.

Tim Blake Stanley

Farewell Lady T

WHO would have thought in eighty two, This lady would come to rescue me and you. The Argentines wrecked our lives our homes.

For all of us it was the darkest times.

What the Argentines have done to you, Margaret Thatcher said we will undo. We will send a Task force to kick them out. They are the aggressors we have no doubt.

A fighting force of British Pride Would stand by the Iron Lady's side. Talking she said was a waste of time. These people are all subjects of mine.

She stood quite firmly in her belief. That Argentina was an aggressive thief. Seventy four days from start to finish Her troops took back what was always British.

She then went on to do much more. She left a garrison to protect our shore. She brought us back from those darkest days. She helped us all in so many ways.

Thirty one years have come and gone. And Margaret Thatcher's name lives on. She stood by us in our hour of need. Then made sure we would all succeed.

Finally though the time has come, To thank her for all the things she's done. Freedom for the Falklands people, That they will be forever grateful.

Lady Thatcher is now at peace, But in our hearts she takes first place. We owe so much for what she's done. We will not forget her now she's gone.

The Falklands people now say farewell, To the greatest lady who served them well. Gave them the courage when it was needed, Without your help we would not have succeeded.

Workaway and see the world says Pat

MORE normally a dental hygienist, Manhattan resident Pat Warburton has been working for West farmers Peter and Shelley Nightingale under the 'Workaway' scheme. She recently spoke to the Penguin News about the website that changed her life.

According to Pat: "The very short version of my time in the Falklands might read 'for five months I was cold and smelled like a sheep'. Happily, there is much more to it than that, and I came to love how sheep smell."

Pat has travelled a lot: "I once spent eight months driving from London through Central Asia on the ancient Silk Road on the way to Beijing and Tibet, but these days I want to be more than a tourist passing through. I want more insight into what daily life is like in these places I visit. Then I stumbled across workaway.info and life changed forever."

She said like many people travel is her great passion however financing it is not always easy:

"With Workaway I can travel for well over a year at a time; this is my second round-the-world trip using this website. You work in exchange for room and board, buy your own airline tickets to get wherever it is you are going, and then live with a local family and help out."

You can work with dogsled people north of the Arctic Circle, you can help a beekeeper in the South Pacific or help restore a chateau in France. Pat has learned how to make cheese on an organic farm in South Africa and how to run a small tourist camp in the deserts of Jordan. Because there is no pay, there is no entanglement with work permits and taxes.

On West Falklands she was able

where I spent most of the five months."

Pat grew up on a dairy farm in the States, but sheep were all new to her: "Who knew that lambs go in all directions when you try to move them by themselves? Lamb-marking, gathering, seeing the dogs work, helping cook for the road crew, looking after an abandoned lamb; I loved it. And I came to love the West - the big skies, stone runs, bright yellow gorse, sparkling streams with mullet, hearing the penguins to learn a great many new things: "I was so lucky Shelley and Peter Nightingale decided to take a leap of faith and invite me to come to Hill Cove, squabbling every morning on the small island just off-shore, my sheep-shearing debut at Port Howard Sports Week, and the warm welcoming people of the West and Hill Cove in particular."

Some of her days were spent helping out at Little Chartres and Shallow Bay: "And to round it off I also spent some weeks in Stanley, as a mother's helper with Karen and Paul Armstrong-Ford. Like all my Workaway hosts, they took pains to take me around and showed me my first penguin in the Falklands."

Workaway is not for everyone, said Pat, it's very different from checking into the local hotel and taking a guided tour: "But for me here in the Falklands it has been simply the most wonderful experience and I am sad to be leaving. I want to offer my heartfelt gratitude to everyone I have met along the way. Without fail, everyone I met talked to me and made me feel part of the community. Thanks to all."

Tourism industry ups its game

Falkland Islands Tourist Board Annual Awards

"TO stay in the game you have to up your game," winner of the Tourist Board Catered Accommodation of the Year award, Arlette Betts of Lafone House told Penguin News.

One of a number of delighted award winners, Arlette has recently had her guest house entirely refurbished including extensive work to her conservatory.

She said she was, "obviously very happy and I felt a bit overwhelmed," having won the award last year also.

Arlette said, "I've put a lot of work and a lot of money into the business and I'm very, very pleased that it has paid off. People travel a lot more and their expectations are so much higher."

She said a photo of her new conservatory appeared on the Tourist Board website recently and she obtained many bookings as a result.

Other winners included Security Services for the Public Services Award, the Harbour View Gift Shop for Outstanding Customer Service Award and Malvina House Hotel for Taste of the Falklands and Hotel Offering the Best Overall Experience. Tony Smith was this year's Tour Guide of the Year and Bluff Cove won Best Visitor Experience.

The award for Self-Catered Accommodation of the Year went to Bleaker Island, and Keene Communications - London, won Outstanding Contribution to Tourism by an Outside Firm. Falkland Islands Holidays was this year's Travel Agency of the Year, FIGAS won Best Supporting Airline and Princess Cruises was awarded Best Supporting Cruise Line.

One particularly popular winner was Joan Middleton for the Managing Director's Award for Outstanding Contribution to Tourism. FITB Managing Director Tony Mason described Joan as a, "very special lady who has been a part of the tourism office since 1997."

The longest serving member of the team Joan had never missed one day of work, said Mr Mason, adding: "She has worked tirelessly even on public holidays including Christmas Day when required."

and helpful to tourists."

The awards ceremony, scaled down as a result of lack of ticket sales for the intended large event, was held in the Jetty Visitors Centre on Friday April 12 at 4.30pm.

Tourist Board Chair Member of Legislative Assembly Mike Summers apologised for the lack of an evening event and commented that they would be looking at the planning for 2014 and hoped to hold an event similar to that of 2012.

He acknowledged that the cruise season had been, "interesting," and problematic but following, "our travels in the USA," said he believed the problems were largely sorted out and anticipated a better coming season.

Dogs put on a show and Penguins shut the cats out

THE opening match on Sunday was between Coyotes and Flyers. Flyers had the advantage; Coyotes had only three outfield players who consequently were forced to play the entire 50 minute match with only half time and two 'time outs' for a breather. However, Coyote captain Nick Rendell was first to score and followed it with another soon after. Then David Hewitt got in on the action adding two to Flyers goal in quick succession, and not to be left out, premiering Coyote Teslyn Barkman stretched the lead to 5-0.

Flyers fought back, at one point propelling Nick with a Wylie Coyote cartoon 'splat' into the brick hall wall, their hard work rewarded with one goal by Andrew Miller before half time.

Coyote David sprung into action in the second half and scored another goal in the opening minute. With the legs of the Coyotes tiring there was more pressure on their Goalie Clayton March in the second half. Martyn Barlow clawed the Flyers back into contention with a goal, but the respite did not last long with Nick and David each scoring another goal showing fatigue had not got the best of them. Gordon Lennie and Andrew Miller signed the game off for Flyers with a goal each but the difference could not be made up. Flyers 4, Coyotes 8.

The usually strong Panthers team were finding it hard to break Penguins defence in the second game on Sunday.

Penguins Duane Evans was first to score and Ricky Leyton slammed in a shot from the other side of the hall to stretch their lead. Panthers were shooting hard and fast but Penguins were defending well and did not concede in the first half.

This did not sit well with the Panthers and the tension increased in the second. Ten minutes in Ricky scored again rebounding a shot off Panther Goalie Marvyn Clifton's back foot. Panthers were frustrated not to have scored yet; constantly thumping the ball up the court and it ricocheted around the Sports Hall like a pinball.

The fury of the players could not beat through Marcus Morrison who secured the first shut-out of the season for Penguins. Penguins 3, Panthers 0.

Golf news

THE 2012-2013 golf season drew to a close last Sunday as golfers signed in for the annual Charity Day event.

In this competition, golfers play eighteen holes of stableford golf with the winner nominating the recipient charity.

Glenn Ross emerged as the day's winner, edging out TV personality Troyd Bowles on a count back. The sum of £245 was raised on the day and the charity chosen this year was the really excellent Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund.

In other news, in the April medal Roy Smith recorded two tough birdies on the third and twelfth holes to edge past the season long leader Ian Stewart in the Eclectic event, and record a win by the narrowest possible margin of 0.1.

The medal itself, played in very high winds and difficult scoring conditions calling for good ball striking, was won by Club Captain Troyd Bowles carding an excellent round of 71 for a Nett score of 66 and Roy was second with a Nett 69.

The club wishes to thank its many generous sponsors and supporters, new and established, for an entertaining and enjoyable season of competitive golf.

The golf team for Bermuda is now finalised, with sixteen year old Declan Bonner making up a strong golfing quartet with Glenn Ross, Roy Smith and Ian Stewart. The rather daunting Port Royal championship golf course is a mere 2,000 metres longer than Stanley Golf Course, marginally hotter with several hundred well placed bunkers and lightning fast greens.

Now that good excuses are in place and the abacus is on order, let the games begin.

The next scheduled competition is the May Monthly medal sponsored by Décor Services. This will be the first match of the new season and points are available for the club's main event, the biennial Falklands Cup. The reigning champions are the Kelpers XI.

Members are asked to check nearer to the day for a tee-off time, as it will be later than usual, in order to account for the darker mornings.

'Weak' FIDC business plan re-submitted to Board

THE Falkland Islands Development Corporation (FIDC) Business Plan was re-submitted to the Development Board (FIDB) on Wednesday after it was strongly criticised by the Falkland Islands Government Chief Executive Keith Padgett last Friday as a weak document, and not a business plan but a wordy set of objectives.

This week FIDC General Manager Marc Boucher declined to comment whether he felt the criticism was justified.

He noted however, that the plan had once again been presented to the Board, "for their review and consideration."

He said the recommendations made during the Board meeting have been included in the revised Business Plan, "and presently additional comments are being received from Board members. The draft business plan does have a five year horizon and includes deliverables for each proposed project to be undertaken, as well as projected income and expenses."

Asked why no performance indicators and only a year's worth of figures were included in the original plan he said: "The Business Plan which was submitted followed the format of previously approved FIDC Business Plan 2011-2014. While timetables were provided in this Business Plan, these were over ambitious as to the delivery of the projects."

Mr Boucher said the updated Business Plan, "provides for implementation dates, some of the projects will not have an end date as they will be on-going, such as Tourism Activity Development and Air/Ship Passenger Interchange."

He added that FIDC will continue working on the document until approved by FIDB and submission to Executive Council for consideration at the May meeting.

Time to let the good times roll?

WHILE Britain has just narrowly escaped double-dip depression, the Falkland Islands economy is buoyant according to the third quarter report to the Standing Finance Committee which met on Wednesday.

A net operating deficit was shown on the nation's balance sheet, for the first time for three years, this was due to the transfer of £9,784,000 of oil-related taxation receipts to the Oil Development Reserve Fund.

However, the Net liquid Assets of the Consolidated Fund, described in the report as, "those funds that are readily available for use," now stand at a little over £143 million (£43,000 each, if there are 2,900 of us and a share-out were to take place tomorrow).

£143 million is over 3.4 times the government's annual estimated operating expenditure and therefore ahead of the previous target which aimed to keep reserves at three times operating expenditure.

Though much of this largesse has come from the current early stages of oil-related activities and might still be regarded as 'windfall,' some commentators, like former Financial Secretary Derek Howatt, are beginning to ask what is the justification for keeping tax rates at existing levels or for the considerable short-fall reported on capital expenditure where several projects are behind schedule?

Shackleton centenary scholarship

THE Falkland Islands, South Georgia or the British Antarctic Territories stand to benefit from an ambitious science research project to commemorate Ernest Shackleton's 1914 trans-Antarctic expedition.

The many events marking next year's centenary include a valuable £10,000 scholarship to encourage scientific research relating to the region.

This initiative has been launched by the Shackleton Scholarship Fund (SSF) for what it calls 'flagship' research in the natural or social sciences.

A scientist or a team of scientists from anywhere in the world are invited to apply for the scholarship before the deadline of September 15 this year.

The SSF was set up in 1995 to commemorate the lives of the explorer and his son, Edward, Lord Shackleton. Since its inception, the Fund has allocated about £12,000 each year to award nearly a hundred academic scholarships for research projects and also 'quality of life' awards to benefit the Falkland Islands including visits by experts coaching sport, the arts and music. The Shackleton centenary scholarship is its most ambitious and most valuable so far.

The Governor of the Falkland Islands, Nigel Haywood, who is Chairman of the Fund's Stanley Committee, describes the scholarship as an opportunity for high-impact academic study and a fitting tribute to Ernest Shackleton.

Professor David Walton, an eminent Antarctic scientist and member of the Fund's London Committee, said the scholarship will fund serious research in the continuing quest to understand Antarctica and the surrounding countries.

Shackleton's expedition was hailed as one of the most incredible feats of endurance and survival of all time. It was not just a challenge to penetrate uncharted territory.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

THE problem with having developed established times in order to catch a bit of telly most days, is that I invariably end up viewing the same awful programmes: and currently there only ever seems to be an unending variety of antique road trips, cooking programmes, quiz shows and (perhaps more helpfully) advice on how to burglar-proof your house.

Considering the latter, obviously locking my door would be a start, but as it happens any burglar misguided enough to choose my house to ransack might come unstuck.

Just getting in would be a challenge, particularly if the badly positioned washing machine door had been left open. If he successfully negotiated that without smashing his knees he'd likely trip over the western saddle and find himself cast across an open dishwasher with one arm in a bucket of pony nuts. Then should the intrepid soul eventually find some piece of technology worth pinching he'd need a few hours grace to extract it from the coiled mile of extension leads, scarts, hair straighteners, power adaptors, curlers, docks, connectors, cables, and eight chargers that no longer appear to have an implement to charge, but can't possibly be thrown away, just in case. (Please tell me I'm not the only person who does that?)

Sadly, while any perp attempting a burglary of my home would be quickly identified (thanks to my cat Spike, the criminal would be covered in white fur, and courtesy of my son and my partner he'd have Swan filter tips stuck to his socks) a recent little spate of opportunist style thefts around Stanley might not be so easily solved. And while we should probably consider ourselves lucky that the odd purse, or garden equipment theft, is the worst of the community's problems in terms of this type of crime, it's actually quite a struggle to adapt to it because we're not very good at locking things away - we've never really had to. In any case I find quite dispiriting that we may be creeping towards a situation where citizens can no longer trust each other not to nab property when backs are turned.

Still I suppose it's a comfort that while the rotten sods helping themselves to purses might be able to get away with it, trying to 'fence' lawn mowers or strimmers in a town this small could turn out to be quite a challenge.

Incidentally, a call to the RFIP revealed that some victims of recent thefts aren't actually reporting the crimes. Do we lack confidence in our Police Force? Whether we do or not, they're most certainly not going to be able to help if we don't even offer them the chance to do so.

Argentine integrity faces virtual threat

ARGENTINA makes no secret of its belief that the Falkland Islands represent a stolen piece of their national territory, something that we obviously deny. However, now, according to the Atlantic Media Website, President Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner, is claiming that the integrity of her country is under threat again.

If the theft of land in 1833 of which Britain is accused was fictional, the current threat is 'virtual.' What Mrs Kirchner is objecting to now is the claim by an outdoor clothing company to the internet domain .patagonia Patagonia Inc was founded by a small group of climbers and surfers in California and now is an international supplier of outdoor sports clothing with offices around the world.

Resolving Argentina's cyberspace dispute with Patagonia Inc falls to the little known but influential Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN). ICANN met this month in Beijing to update its policies and discuss potential additions to the global catalogue of domain names, including .patagonia, .amazon, .search, and .book, to name a few.

At the Beijing Conference, ICANN's Government Advisory Committee recommended that ICANN should freeze consideration of several generic top-level domains (gTLDs) including .patagonia and .amazon because certain governments objected to them.

Patagonia Inc has managed the .patagonia.com domain and maintained the word Patagonia as a global trademark for many years without complaint from the Argentine Government.

Although Patagonia is a sub-region within Argentina, it is made up of five provinces and also crosses into Chile. For this reason it does not fall cleanly within ICANN's definition of a geographic domain and Argentina may face an uphill battle in preventing Patagonia Inc from buying the .patagonia domain.

Sam and Tara hosted by FCO

Sam Cockwell, Peter Hayes and Tara Thomas

OVERSEAS Territories Chevening scholars Falkland Islander Sam Cockwell and St Helenian Tara Thomas met with officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Overseas Territories Directorate last week.

They included its Director, Peter Hayes, the Head of the Falklands and Southern Oceans Department, Martin Longden, and former Falklands Governor Alan Huckle. Their discussions included the outcome of the Falklands referendum and work being carried out by Members of the Legislative Assembly in the Latin American region.

The FCO organised a network lunch for Sam and Tara and a historical tour of the FCO. Sam said he was, "very impressed with the number of staff focused on the Falklands, their knowledge of the Islands and the proactive stance they were all taking. Overall, it was very encouraging for the future."

Sam is currently studying for a Masters in Petroleum Engineering at Imperial College in London while Tara is working towards an MBA at the London School of Business and Finance.

Both were awarded the FCO's Chevening Scholarship in 2012.

Curfew for early morning offender

STANLEY resident Dominic Watson pleaded guilty in court on Wednesday to three offences relating to public order, committed on three separate occasions between March 16 and March 30.

Sentencing was adjourned until May 27 to enable reports to be produced on Mr Watson's character and his performance of a community service order to which he is currently subject.

Commenting that each of three offences had occurred in the early hours of the morning and were by Mr Watson's own admission drink-related, Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley ordered that as a condition of his bail until his next appearance in court, Mr Watson should continue to reside at the YMCA in Scoresby Close and should remain there between 10pm and 6am each evening.

Fined for lapse

ABATTOIR worker Juan Alberto Naranjo was fined a total of £230 and ordered to pay £85 prosecution costs after pleading guilty to driving a Land Rover Discovery on the night of February 4, without either vehicle licence or insurance. The court heard that both the insurance and the excise licence for the vehicle, which belongs to Mr Naranjo's father, had lapsed only days before. This was taken into account by the Senior Magistrate when sentencing, along with Mr Naranjo's early guilty plea and previous clean driving record.

Adjourned

THE current lack of lawyers to provide defence counsel services caused two cases before the Magistrates court on Wednesday to be adjourned.

Mr John Didlick, who faces a charge of assault causing actual bodily harm and a further public order offence, will now appear in court again on May 13.

An unspecified case against Mr Ralph Jones was scheduled to be heard on May 3.

Minimum wage

A PERIOD of public consultation about the draft Minimum Wage legislation began yesterday (April 25).

A consultation pack has been produced containing an Explanatory Memorandum, the draft legislation itself and a questionnaire.

A copy of the consultation pack can be obtained from Falkland Islands Government Policy Unit in the Secretariat.

Readers can respond to the Policy Unit by post, fax or email no later than May 17, 2013.

THE Argentine activist group Resistencia Malvinas held protests last Wednesday in front of LAN'S offices in central Buenos Aires with the aim of suspending the flights by that company to the Falklands. British flags were burned along with photographs of Margaret Thatcher and slogans were painted on the company's office windows with aerosol.

The aim of Resistencia Malvinas and other groups associated with this protest is to bring down the post war Madrid Agreement, which they feel accorded privileges to Great Britain. Their immediate objective is stated as being the final cancellation of flights to the Falkland Islands.

No Argentine presence at Antarctic operators conference but Islanders fill IAATO seats

THERE was no Argentine presence at the International Association of Antarctic Operators (IAATO) held in Punta Arenas, Chile this year, reported Managing Director Falkland Islands Tourist Board Tony Mason.

Mr Mason told Penguin News on Wednesday that in relation to Argentina's interference within the cruise industry over the past year: "I believe Argentina has sent a clear message by not attending the meeting and I feel the industry has also taken notice of the lack of representation."

A special presentation was given by Chile's Minister of Public Works Lucas Palacios, on infrastructure developments. "many with tourism in mind planned for Patagonia and other areas of Chile over the next few years," said Mr Mason.

The Tourist Board Manager explained he was currently in talks to develop programmes with Chile's tourism departments, "in order to increase tourism to the Falkland Islands through co-op programmes over the coming year both with the local tourism offices and through joint efforts in the north. He added: "We have a great opportunity to work with our friends in Chile.

"We have excellent synergy between the parties involved and share a combined vision for increasing tourism to the region. I am so very pleased to have arrived with such a large contingency of delegates from the Falkland Islands.

The meetings concluded on Wednesday April 24.

Falklands remembers Anzacs

NINETY-eight years since Anzac forces landed on the shores of Gallipoli, Anzac Day commemorations were held in Australia and New Zealand and all over the world, including a small ceremony at Stanley's Cross of Sacrifice which took place at 0715 on Thursday morning (April 25).

As the sun rose over the Ross Road cross, Falklands resident Steve Dent introduced the ceremony with a poem before a short service was conducted by Reverend Richard Hines. A wreath was laid by Member of Legislative Assembly Jan Cheek on behalf of the people of the Falkland Islands.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

WE heard of the death of Baroness Thatcher while in a meeting at the Foreign Office with our minister Hugo Swire. Having met Lady Thatcher several times and seen a glimpse behind the one dimensional caricature so often portrayed, I felt her death really marked the end of an era. It was an honour to represent the Islands at her funeral and all the more touching as she had chosen all the hymns and readings. The music was wonderful as the anthems sung by the choir swirled around the beautiful cathedral. The streets all the way there were lined with people there to pay their respects with only the occasional protester.

I was back in London between European visits. The previous week MLA Roger Edwards and I were in Brussels where we met Members of the European Parliament and Belgian and EU officials. We also did TV interviews and met newspaper journalists. We were well received and I hope left everyone we met better informed.

Earlier last week I was in Dublin where I met officials, members of their Foreign affairs committee, journalists and academics. Some of the latter had already written at some length about the Falklands. The Irish view on the Falklands is an interesting one and I enjoyed some lively discussions.

My final visit was to The Hague accompanied by Zoran Zuvic one of the young Islanders who had volunteered to accompany MLAs on their travels. He had been at the funeral too so we travelled later that evening. Our first appointment was breakfast with the UK Ambassador Paul Arkwright who had visited the Islands when he worked at the UK Mission to the UN in the mid '90s. Like all the Embassy representatives we met he was keen to help. We had a very full day of meetings at the parliament and foreign ministry and had an opportunity to brief all available staff at the Embassy and some journalists and an academic. All agreed that they now knew much more about the Islands and that Zoran had been able to give them a useful extra perspective.

World Penguin Day

Conservation follows the lives of our feathered Falklands friends

THIS week penguins are celebrated through World Penguin Day (Thursday April 25).

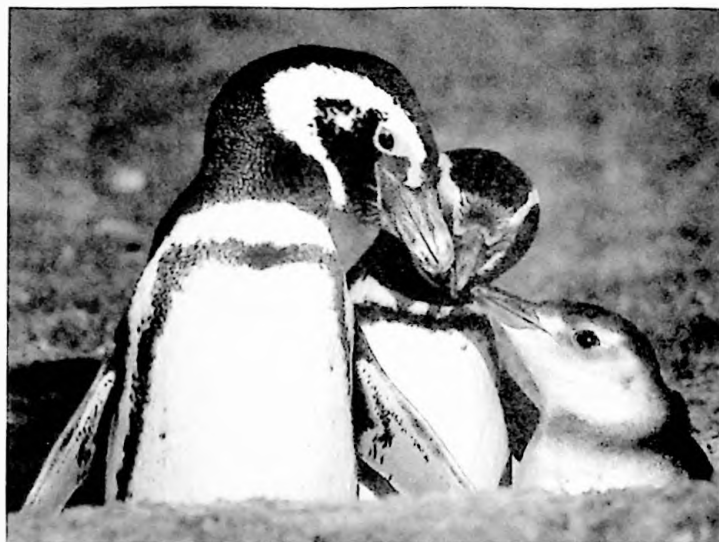

Sarah Crofts from Falklands Conservation explains why more research is desirable on them in the Falklands.

THERE are an estimated one million breeding penguins in the Falklands. Every five years, Falklands Conservation conducts an Island wide census to determine their numbers providing long-term data on population trends—something that will be an invaluable tool in future climate change modelling.

The Magellanic penguin species is, however, still lacking the simplest of baseline data.

Its nest burrowing nature and widespread distribution, as well as associated surveying costs has stalled attempts so far to collect accurate data.

Magellanic penguins- still in need of good base-line data (M Reeves)

Patagonian Shelf. A recent satellite tracking study of Rockhopper penguins by FC revealed they can travel up to 3,500 km in a winter trip and utilise ocean areas more than one million square kilometres.

Tracking breeding penguins at different colonies reveals that populations tend to have their own distinct foraging areas and prefer to keep to themselves, this way they do not all compete for the same food resources.

There are some 84 Gentoo, 40 Rockhopper colonies and widespread locations of Magellanic penguins across the Falklands.

We are only at the very beginning of understanding where they forage from each colony and how they interact or segregate themselves from other penguin populations.

Putting in place good baseline data, for penguins in particular, is one of the priorities highlighted by the Falkland Islands Hydrocarbon Gap Analysis Forum.

Tracking penguins from key sites should highlight the main areas of penguin overlap with oil licence areas and potential oil tanker routes once identified.

There is still a lot of information that needs to be gathered like identifying which are the key sites to track penguins from and which species and age groups are the most vulnerable to the main hydrocarbon areas.

With limited resources and a short time before potential oil extraction is expected, understanding more about Falkland penguins has never been so pertinent.

Falklands Conservation, alongside other Falkland Islands based researchers will have the chance to discuss some of these topical issues at the next International Penguin Conference which will be held in Bristol, UK this September.

Credit unions offer banking 'for the people by the people' says FIDC guest

WOULD you like to share in the ownership of a bank with exactly the same voting rights as any other share holder regardless of the size of your investment? Would you like to pay less interest on loans and gain more interest on deposits? Would you like to be sure that your savings or interest payments were going back into your own community rather than making some fat cats elsewhere even fatter? All this and more could be possible, according to a recent visitor to the Falklands.

Dwayne Naylor, Chief Operating Officer of a credit union in North Carolina, was down in the Falklands last week as the guest of the Development Corporation and on behalf of the World Council of Credit Unions, to investigate the feasibility of the establishment of a credit union in the Falklands.

Michael Betts of FIDC explained that for nearly a year he had been investigating the suitability of the credit union concept for the Falkland Island at the request of his General Manager and had been authorised to begin making contact with credit unions following the presentation of a paper to the Development Corporation Board.

Mr Betts had contacted the World Council of Credit Unions based in the United States and had begun an exchange of information with its President, Mr Brian Branch, who had responded enthusiastically. Unfortunately, due to other commitments Mr Branch had not been able to make a planned visit and he had requested Mr Naylor to come in his stead.

Meeting Mr Naylor in person, suddenly the Penguin News office appeared much smaller; he is a very large man with an attractive somewhat Southern accent, both of which factors somehow seem to enhance the sincerity of his zeal for the credit union concept. In this respect, he appears to be not just an enthusiast, nor a sales man, but something of a missionary.

Credit unions are non-profit financial organisations set up by members with something in common to benefit their community. That common factor may be living in the same town, or working in the same industry.

Dwayne Naylor

In the UK there are roughly 500 credit unions offering loans, savings and current accounts to their almost one million members.

Unlike high street banks, credit unions are owned cooperatively by their members, each of whom enjoys the same voting rights. As there are no third-party share holders expecting to make profit from the credit union's activities, all revenue goes towards the mutual benefit of the members, either to increase capital, improve services or to provide dividends.

During his week in the Islands, Mr Naylor met with FIDC, FIG, the Attorney General, the Financial Secretary, the Head of Regulatory Services, the Chamber of Commerce, the Falkland Islands Fishing Companies Association, the Rural Business Association and many other individuals. On his return to the United States he will be producing a report, which will be made public, assessing the suitability and feasibility of setting up a credit union here.

Asked whether the small size of the Falklands population might be a barrier to the establishment of a credit union, Mr Naylor replied that it was involvement rather than numbers which was important and stressed the locally-governed and democratic nature of the organisation in which every participant had a single vote in the election of the Board of Directors. "So the organisation is not only locally governed, it's democratically managed.

Although in consequence of this democratic organisation all the interest rates and lending decisions are local, Mr Naylor was quick to point out that unlike most co-operatives, credit unions were subject to the same international banking standards and secrecy acts as any other financial institution.

Admitting that a small credit union might not have the financial clout to offer large scale business credit, Mr Naylor said, "the community's embracing of the organisation is what will give it the resources to provide more services."

Mr Naylor's observation was that with all the changes that were currently forecast for the Falklands economy, increased access to credit would become necessary and that it would be in the community's interest to have a credit union existing side by side with the existing bank.

The fact that in the last five years the partly government financed Falkland Islands Development Corporation, has paid out loans of £1.7 million, despite regarding itself as 'a lender of last resort' would already seem to confirm that assertion.

(Contact FIDC for more information on credit unions)

It was also a serious scientific expedition to gather knowledge important to the world's well being from a unique treasure trove of secrets frozen in time for centuries. Shackleton's Antarctic expedition included not just navigators and crew but also four scientists – a geologist, a meteorologist, a physicist and a biologist, as well as two surgeons. So the researcher or researchers awarded the centenary scholarship will be treading in illustrious footsteps.

Shackleton's expedition stalled when his ship, Endurance, was crushed by the ice and sank. But he turned tragedy into triumph by leading all 28 members to safety, unharmed by their two-year ordeal. His lifeboat, James Caird, also survived to earn an honoured berth inside his old school, Dulwich College, far from the tempestuous seas which buffeted it almost to destruction.

Uruguay and finally Chile provided ships to Shackleton for the rescue effort, which was finally accomplished by a Chilean navy ship and the seamanship of its Chilean crew. The whole adventure was captured in brilliant pictures by the expedition's official Australian photographer, Frank Hurley.

Throughout his Antarctic ordeals, Shackleton suffered ill-health and he died of heart failure, aged 48, on a subsequent expedition to circumnavigate Antarctica. He is buried in South Georgia.

Lord Shackleton, who pioneered Falkland Islands' development after the 1982

Argentine invasion, pursued a different profession from his father's – that of politics – but maintained a life-long interest in science. As a senior Government Minister, he used his influence to promote interest in the Antarctic and its scientific value.

He worked assiduously for its preservation through the Antarctic Treaty and as President for many years of Parliament's Scientific Committee and of the Royal Geographical Society. For both Shackletons, the £10,000 centenary scholarship is particularly appropriate.

Applications should be made to the Fund's website www.shackletonfund.com before the deadline of 15 September this year to carry out the project in 2014.

Could it happen in the Falklands?

Building Adviser Ken Snape talks about how to protect your loved ones by reducing fire risk

THE Kiss nightclub fire happened on January 27, 2013 in Santa Maria, Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, killing 241 people and injuring at least 168 others.

At the time, most, if not all who heard of the tragedy, missed a heartbeat as the horrific death toll of these young men and women (mostly teenagers) came to the world's attention.

Gardner Fiddes (Chief Fire Officer) and I have been asked: "Could it happen here in the Falklands? Could a large gathering of our community become victims of such a national disaster while enjoying an event?"

Let's go through a recent event, the Referendum, and the precautions which were put into place or already existed behind the scenes.

Gardner and I received a telephone call from Register General Beth Dent at the Town Hall, asking if we could have a look at the arrangements in the upstairs of the Town Hall as the main hall was to be used for the count and would contain many members of the world's press present who were unfamiliar with the building.

We went through a thorough but very relaxed risk assessment (dreaded words to some I know).

We looked into how many people we could actually permit into the Hall under our Falkland Island Building Regulations (FIBR). Where were the fire exits? Were they illuminated by signs? Did the fire exit doors actually open fully? Where, how many and what type of fire extinguishers were in the Hall and did the staff know where they were and how to use them? What 'management' measures would be in place, like security staff for example? Gardner and I would refer to these people as fire wardens.

The details which Beth had already addressed in her 'project management' had covered all the points we discussed, so for the worlds press Beth had shown an audit trail of risk analysis and a comprehensive event management and planning. This takes into account or eliminates as many risks as could be identified - the service offered being second to none. Beth had professionally addressed her 'duty of care' to us the members of the public and to her staff.

We appreciate that to some this smacks of creeping legislation, but it is what most of us do on a day-to-day basis when undertaking many tasks at home or at work.

So, we had the world's press and members of our community in a safe, managed, environment and we were all comfortable that in the event of an emergency the 'staff procedures' were in place to assist, monitor and account for every person in the building whilst at the same time the emergency services would have been notified instantly of any emergency.

As an aside, some of the modern buildings here in Stanley have an 'auto-dial' which means that if the fire alarms are activated, the system rings the fire station. The new Fisheries building on the bypass is an example.

What about new build?

The Falklands has very robust yet uncomplicated legislation contained within our Falkland Island legislation, but even so this is constantly reviewed!

When applications come into the Environmental Planning department consultation with Manfred (Director of Public Works), Gardner and I takes place on every project before it goes to the Planning Committee Members for final approval.

What we look at are primarily life safety matters, passive and active. Specifically we note:

- The possibility of a fire actually starting. What the building is to be used for - this gives us a basic fire risk and fire load potential.
- Early awareness of a fire - smoke detection, any fire suppressant systems (sprinklers for example) and the means provided to give an early warning in the event of a fire - the fire alarm system.

- How many people are allowed under the FIBR into the building? How many exits we should have and what widths should these exits be? How far do people have to travel to get to these exits? Is there a requirement for additional exits?

Think of the Malвина Hotel, the Fisheries Department building and the ongoing new museum currently being built to visualise a real example of adequate means of escape.

A further consideration, if we lose power in an emergency will emergency lighting come on and will the exit doors be illuminated? It's only a thought, but when did you last have a fire alarm test and actually practise an evacuation from your place of work?

- Means to aid occupants to escape: members of staff (suitable trained/briefed) working or 'on duty', emergency lighting and suitable door furniture - push bars on the final exit doors for example.

- The actual finishes or linings to the walls and ceilings - hence the constant reference to plasterboard or other suitable non-combustible materials as an effective line of defence.

What happens then?

During the course of construction, site visits are carried out to record the various stages of work and discuss any issues that the actual builders raise or express a concern over.

These visits happen with a number of other people on many other projects as well. Graham Fiddes and I for example, carried out joint visits to the Fisheries Department during construction, and at completion, prior to occupation.

So what happens when the building is completed and in day to day use?

Owners and or operators of premises have an established 'duty of care' to ensure that the fire standards agreed are maintained - hence our offer to provide free advice and consultation.

Risk assessments? The CFO and I actively encourage developers and the consequential owners/occupiers to carry out their own discreet fire risk assessment - what are you going to do if there is a fire? How are you going to prove, if there is an accident, that you exercised 'your duty of care'? When did you last have your fire extinguishers checked and are they the correct type of extinguishers?

What we are unable to do is actually write your risk assessments and your policies and procedures for you.

We strive to ensure not, we professionally exercise our 'duty of care' to our community and try to identify and address as many risks as possible.

Fire safety checks on some public buildings have recently been commissioned and the results were very encouraging; advice and guidance was offered and accepted on a few issues.

Nobody can legislate for criminal negligence (there is the suggestion that some of the exit doors were locked in the Kiss disaster and that one of the escape corridors was used for general storage), plain stupidity and or ignorance (and I use that word kindly) of the actual legal requirements or an act of arson.

So if you have any concerns over fire safety in a building both Gardner and I would strongly advise you to speak initially to the manager or owner of the building and share your concerns.

Hand on heart: when did you last test your smoke detectors at home and if your (recently tested) smoke alarm goes off at 2.30am and the living room is smoke-filled, can you get to the kids and then get everybody out of the bedroom windows?

Magnificent message then and now

NOW the euphoria of the splendid result in the Referendum on our Political Status has subsided, we have time to reflect on the magnificence of the message it carried to country leaders around the world. It is not the first time we have participated in such an exercise.

The results of the Sovereignty Survey orchestrated by the Falkland Islands Association on the initiative of Chairman, the late Eric Ogden were released at a well attended Press Reception at Kingsley Hotel, London on Tuesday, April 1, 1986.

Eric Ogden, a great friend, spent some time with Shirley and I at North Arm and as a tribute, I think he would be pleased with me sharing the detail of the Sovereignty Survey conducted by Marplan 1986. You might think this is old hat, but the younger generation, or recent immigrants will not know a similar result was achieved 27 years ago.

The questionnaire was sent out to everyone on the electoral register in the Falkland Islands, asking one question 'What kind of sovereignty do you want for the Falkland Islands?'

Of the 1033 questionnaires sent out, 920 were received back, which is a response of 89%; one of the highest in Marplan's experience. Showing a gratifying number of 94.5% wish to remain British.

The answers to the question put out, were as follows:

British Sovereignty	869 (94.5%)
Independence	15 (1.5%)
Some other solution not listed	11 (1.2%)
Two solution selected	10 (1.1%)
Lease-Back	9 (1.0%)
Argentine Sovereignty	3 (0.3%)
United Nations Trusteeship	3 (0.3%)

The interesting features are that the three votes for Argentine Sovereignty (Eric refers to the 3 'no' votes in response to the question 'Do you wish to remain a British Overseas Territory. Although those voters might have been in favour of Argentine sovereignty it should be noted for reason of clarification, that the voters might instead have been in favour of an alternative status) were repeated this time around.

Adding all the other options together (48) plus the 869 makes 917 which expressed as a percentage of the 920 polled equals 99.67%. So 27 years ago we were of the same mind. Nothing has changed here, well done all. Goes to show we are all sure and steadfast in our desire to retain the right flag.

The above figures were published in the Falkland Islands Newsletter in May 1986 which

Thanks from Canada

WE thoroughly enjoyed our month long visit to the Falkland Islands. Everyone was very welcoming and helpful beginning with our arrival when the customs agent and veterinary officer met us at the public jetty and cleared us and our dog into the country.

Local knowledge and advice put us in contact with several people needed to undertake our necessary engine repairs, arrange for appropriate spares to be brought in and get all of the provisions we needed for our time in the outer islands and then onward to Uruguay.

We participated in the Easter celebration at the Cathedral, enjoyed the welcome at the Light-house Seaman Mission and were grateful for all of the knowledgeable information provided by Joan at the Visitor Centre. Visiting Volunteer Beach by the overland route was a great experience and it was impressive to see such a thriving colony of King penguins. Fish and chips at the pub, tea-berries, delicious curries, fresh sausage rolls from the bakery, chocolate penguins, all of the tasty British foods from the West Store and Seafish Chantry - everything was wonderful and a treat for us. We could have stayed longer, and maybe we should have, but we are cruising so it was time to move on and visit some of the other islands.

Just as we thought we were adjusting to the strong winds that seem to be a constant here we received a few calm days during our visit to Saunders Island. We were warmly welcomed by the owners, got to see what camp life was all about, and enjoyed a tour of the black-browed albatross and penguin colonies.

Thanks to all of the locals we met that made our stay in the Falkland Islands so comfortable and enjoyable. We hope to return one day to visit again.

Incredible Falklands week

I WAS fortunate enough to be invited by the Falkland Islands Tourist Board to host a group of UK tour operators and journalists to visit the Falkland Islands at the end of February. On the trip we had Steve Rooke and Gerald Griffiths, Managing Directors of Sunbird Tours and Avian Adventures respectively as well as freelance journalists Mike Unwin, Dominic Couzens and Matthew Merritt from Bird Watching magazine.

Since founding Birdfair (the UK's largest birding exhibition) I have had the opportunity to work with many tourist boards, hosting and escorting trips that helps put their destinations on the birders radar. Having travelled the globe, I can truly say that we had an incredible week in the Falkland Islands thanks to Tony and the team at the Tourist Board.

The pictures we took while we were there speak for themselves and we have set up a dedicated microsite for them. The site went live last week so feel free to take a look by visiting: <http://falklands-birds.co.uk>.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone that hosted us and made us feel welcome while we were there. A special thanks to Fiona and Graham from Darwin House, Mike and Phyll Rendell from Bleaker House, Jenny Luxton from Sea Lion Lodge, Martin and Jane Beaton on Weddell Island, David and Suzanne on Saunders Island and Arlette at Lafone House who all hosted me personally.

I was thrilled to discover that Arlette scooped 'Catered Accommodation of the Year' and Mike and Phyll Rendell were awarded 'Self Catered Accommodation of the Year' at the recent Falkland Islands Tourist Board. Having personally experienced their hospitality, I can see why they won awards!

I am confident that the trip will help raise the Falkland Islands profile as a tourist destination in the UK press. Mike Unwin has secured a feature in 'The Independent', UK national newspaper while Dominic Couzens' feature on his experience will appear in 'Wild Life Travel' magazine. Matthew Merritt will be featuring the destination in 'Bird Watching' magazine around the time of Birdfair. To top it off Gerald Griffiths from Avian Adventures is finalising itineraries with Arlette from Falkland Islands Holidays for his 2014 brochure and Steve Rooke is working on including the destination in his 2014 brochure.

I hope I will have the opportunity to return to the Falkland Islands in the not too distant future as it is a world class wildlife destination and a true birders paradise.

Bring back port says Eric

ON Wednesday April 17 we all witnessed on TV and radio, the tremendous send off to the very special Lady, Baroness Margaret Thatcher. Repeatedly hearing reference to Port Stanley, in clips from war coverage, BBC, Parliament and in St. Paul's Cathedral. Let's grasp the moment and get the PORT back in Stanley.

The suggestion that Port Stanley should be renamed Port Margaret or Port Thatcher emphasised PORT, the part we have lost in the last 40 years. Remember the postage stamps were Port Stanley and franking cachet was the same.

All the old literature, books and other publications, record the accepted name. I think the last business rubber stamp bearing the Port was FIC billing office. The Great Lady said on June 14, 1982, "The Union Flag proudly flies over Port Stanley once again." Let's keep to her word.

Thatcher Airport proposed

I PROPOSE that an apt and indeed permanent reminder of Margaret Thatcher would be achieved by the renaming of Mount Pleasant International Airport to become Margaret Thatcher International Airport.

It would be quite difficult to imagine how we could have progressed without the airport, and as I am sure many will recall that just a few months after the retaking of the Islands in 1982 it was the then Prime Minister Thatcher who stood up in the House of Commons to announce that an international airport capable of operating long range aircraft will be constructed in the Falkland Islands in order to assist in their development and future prosperity.

I cannot think therefore of any better tribute that could be made locally other than to rename the airport to commemorate that truly wonderful lady.

Queen's Birthday Parade goes off with an extra bang

THE parade in honour of Her Majesty the Queen's birthday took place this year, as always, along Ross Road, with the Royal Standard raised on Victory Green and the salute taken by His Excellency the Governor, Mr Nigel Haywood and the recently arrived Commander British Forces South Atlantic Islands (CBFSAI), Air Commodore Russel la Forte.

Had we at Penguin News given in to the temptation to stay indoors and use last year's photographs to illustrate this annual event, this year there were some surprises, which might have caught us out.

Chief among the departures from usual practice was the fact that a shortage of ammunition for the 'three pounder' saluting guns meant that the customary 21 gun salute was given by two FIDF teams firing alternate single shots from heavy machine guns. Maybe to compensate for the fact that the sound of these guns, though still loud, is slightly less ear-splitting than we are used to, Her Majesty and all present were treated to an extra twenty-second shot.

Unlike last year when blizzard conditions seemed likely to cause the whole event to take place in the Town Hall, this year the sun shone, though a very strong northerly wind made standing up straight difficult and the preservation of hats on heads a particular trial for the Tri-Service marching detachment and the Falkland Islands Defence Force.

Even the Governor was overheard after the parade telling a slightly sceptical group of cubs that if the wind had got any stronger the plumes on his helmet might have acted like helicopter rotor blades and carried him up into the air and out over the harbour.

Unusually also for this parade, those in attendance and the marchers enjoyed the presence of the Band of the 150(Y) Transport Regiment Royal Logistics Corps, whose sombre and very necessary great coats and helmets brought an appropriate 19th Century feel to the occasion as well as a lively selection of marching music. Not bedecked with plumes, their helmets which are rather reminiscent of the traditional British 'bobbies' head gear, seemed windproof, but the tendency of music to take off like small kites in the wind was noted, along with the Herculean efforts to keep on a straight course made by the bandsman with the big bass drum.

While the challenging climatic conditions may have been responsible for a slightly reduced attendance by the general public, the uniformed youth groups of Stanley: the Scouts, Guides, Cubs, Brownies, Sunbeams and Beavers were out in full force; a sign, if one were needed, that in Stanley at least the future of such public displays of patriotism, would seem to be assured, whatever the weather.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

Intense weekly workout

The Insanity programme promises fast results with improved cardiovascular fitness, muscle strength and tone. All welcome, bring water and a towel. Ensure you are medically fit – it is called Insanity for a reason.

WEEK 5: All sessions start at 5.30pm

Monday 29th April - Pure Cardio & Abs - 39mins & 17mins

Tuesday 30th April - Plyometric Cardio Circuit - 42mins

Wednesday 1st May - Pure Cardio - 39mins

Thursday 2nd May - Cardio Power & Resistance - 40mins

Friday 3rd May - Cardio Recovery - 33mins

Insanity looking in good shape

The Insanity gang get into Pure Cardio

INSANITY is becoming one of the biggest fitness crazes to sweep the Falklands.

Anyone is welcome to join in and over sixty people have tried the Insanity circuit so far. Around 40 regularly attend and at times fill the hall to capacity.

Five sessions a week for 10 weeks is all the course promises you need to achieve a better body and increased fitness. It sounds to be promising a lot, but those who have attended most sessions are starting to see the results just four weeks in.

Shaun T is the man who has been driving the group insane. He is the creator of the gruelling sessions which vary from pure cardio, recovery, interval training and power-increasing circuits.

In the first two weeks nearly every muscle was screaming after the group battered through different circuits with a notable lack of co-ordination. As the weeks have progressed, energy levels have increased; there's less groaning when the lunges just won't end and the smiles at how hilariously impossible the routines seemed when they started are now inspired by a noticeable improvement in fitness. That said, it's safe to say the hour-long max interval session coming up on Week Seven is still looking terrifying.

Dek Hockey info

PANTHERS chased down the Coyotes on Tuesday evening. There were amusing and dramatic moments throughout the game. Coyote Goalie Clayton saved the ball by losing it in his pads until it eventually reappeared plopping out from behind him. Panthers' Frank looked like he was playing cricket for a while and was sent off for high-sticking and the worst of the bruises was claimed by Coyote Luis who took a ball to the eye socket. Most of the match was tense with the chase to get one goal ahead of the other team. Coyotes would score then Panthers would close in again. Both teams defended well and a five-all draw was solace for their efforts.
