Baroness Thatcher memorial

THE Falkland Islands Government is in the process of commissioning a sculptor to create a memorial bust of Baroness Thatcher.

The project follows a public consultation held to determine how to best commemorate the late Margaret Thatcher in the Falkland Islands. More than 140 suggestions were received demonstrating the high regard in which she is held in the Islands.

Following the consultation, the Legislative Assembly agreed to commission a local sculptor to create a bronze bust of Baroness Thatcher, to be mounted on local stone with a plaque containing the following quote:

"They are few in number, but they have the right to live in peace, to choose their own way of life and to determine their own allegiance" - Margaret Thatcher April 3rd 1982.

It is intended that the bust be situated on the corner of Thatcher Drive, which runs behind the 1982 Liberation Monument, in front of the Government Secretariat, and past the sheltered housing for pensioners. The close proximity to the Liberation Monument is felt to be particularly appropriate.

The Legislative Assembly has written to the Thatcher family informing them of the proposed project and seeking their approval.

The Legislative Assembly would like to thank the community for their participation in the consultation, and for their patience as this sensitive matter has been pursued.

Falklands students overseas 'confident and positive' says new Director of Education

NEW Director of Education Annie Tempest is already familiar with Falklands' students having visited Chichester College and Peter Symonds College in the UK prior to taking up her post in the Islands.

Ms Tempest, who arrived on Monday, described the sixth form and vocational course pupils she met as, "very confident and positive about their experiences," adding that she was, "heartened with the facilities and care," provided by the establishments.

She added, however, that things could always be better, and plans to visit the colleges again in order to talk to Falklands students and liaise with college staff.

Just days after her arrival she had caught up with Infant/Junior and Camp Education school staff as well as those of the Falkland Islands Community School.

Asked about her first impressions of staff morale she said she had met with, "warmth, enthusiasm and passion," for their work.

Ms Tempest, who described both head teachers as, "very good," was also impressed with the IT facilities at schools, "the ratio of computers to students is good and the classrooms are well resourced," but she acknowledged that the schools were small for the growing amount of pupils.

Ms Tempest sees her first task in the schools as support training for staff, updating on skills and legislation, and helping staff, "move forward with confidence."

She will also have a vital role in supporting staff in terms of changes planned to the GCSE curriculum.

The British government announced in February this year revised plans for changes to GCSEs. The examinations are to be comprehensively reformed and a new draft National Curriculum was proposed.

Three months ago in UK a consultation began on the subject content for English Language, English Literature, Mathematics, Science, History, Geography, Modern Languages and Ancient Language, and at the same time the exams regulator launched a consultation about the regulatory requirements for reformed GCSEs in England.

As a mentor to head teachers under the Independent Association of Prep Schools (IAPS), Ms Tempest has travelled the world providing support to heads of international schools in Nigeria, Lagos, Papua New Guinea, Australia and the USA, although her most recent appointment was in her home county of Devon.

She came upon the IAPS organisation while working at a school overseas.

Much of her work within IAPS involved support for developmental change, "taking the team and the community with you as part of the process," and suggesting ways to deal with that change.

Ms Tempest is on a two year contract but commented, "if they like me and I like them," she will consider extending.

Drumming up trade in Uruguay

MEMBER of Legislative Assembly Dick Sawle and Acting Chief Executive Simon Fletcher are in their second week of a diplomatic visit to South America.

Following talks in Brazil, as reported last week, they have now moved to Uruguay, "hoping to interest potential businesses to trade in goods and services, and even have Uruguayan companies in association with local partners actively participate in the logistics of the hydrocarbons industry."

They have met with government and opposition Uruguayan parliamentarians including Senator and former president Luis Alberto Lacalle from the main opposition National Party and Jose Carlos Mahia, Chair of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Lower House from the ruling coalition.

Mr Mahia has a fishing industry background and is reported to be aware of the significance of the Falklands fisheries for the port of Montevideo.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

ON a bit of a slow news week when seeking to stimulate the grey matter in order to produce something resembling an editorial, I'm invariably drawn to ripping open the latest edition of 'The Week' - the best of the British and foreign media.

Not so much for the subject matter itself, which is also pretty fabulous, but in the hope that the mental exercise might somehow jump start brain cells. Incidentally if you don't have access to the magazine, pop along to your doctor's appointment a little early, there's always a few floating around the waiting area.

Coincidentally while having a quick scan this week, I came upon a small piece that claimed a cup of cocoa will boost the wits (and stave off dementia) by increasing blood flow to the brain. With that in mind I zipped along to a coffee shop in search of something to induce great swathes of wisdom, intellect and imagination. While probably an overly optimistic target, it did prompt the thought that being able to purchase chocolate in a cardboard cup was a very recent perk in this little corner of the world and one of an increasing number of developments that seems to be generating (in me anyway) spoilt brat status. This was emphasised on Tuesday when I was overwhelmed with the urge to stamp my foot in a shop when the assistant gently explained to me that, "yes, we have pet hair remover roller re-fills but we've run out of the rollers."

Am going any where with this? Well hopefully.

With silent tantrum abated and mortification setting in, the question that followed was, why, if the expectations of us Stanley types have become so heightened that we (or alternatively, I) anticipate every petty whim immediately satisfied, were Camp dwellers required to confirm their desire for access to FM radio? While consultation is a marvellous concept, and I accept they obtained additional information, surely some things should go without saying? Whoever's heard of a farmer that doesn't listen to the radio, and why would they not automatically be entitled to such 'equity of service'? Not that the government deserves to be singularly berated, at least they're trying, because if I hear just one more person suggest Campers shouldn't whinge about the lack of certain amenities (practically accessible ones of course) because they 'made a lifestyle choice', I may be forced to - well - glare at them with my very best glare.

So thoughts for this week:

- We're getting a bit spoilt.
- Consultations are valuable but some things can probably be assumed.
- Campers are people too (but please can they keep the price of beef down).
- If you don't like coffee or chocolate, apparently sex will sharpen your thoughts even more so than a Sudoku puzzle (The Week August 17).

Sixteen new FIG houses approved for building

TWENTY THREE new dwellings were approved, at the Planning and Building Committee this Thursday.

Sixteen of the new builds are to be two and three bedroom semi-detached properties developed by the Falkland Islands Government at Sapper Hill at the odd numbered plots between 7 - 29 and the even plots at 16-22.

Other developments approved at Sapper Hill were a 1.5 story dwelling for Sarah Crofts and Micky Reeves at Plot 27, a dwelling for Terence and Carol Phillips at Plot 6, and a 1.5 storey dwelling at Plot 1 for Malcolm Jamieson.

Dwellings were approved to be built at 7 Mink Park for Kieran Morrison, the Frying Pan for Neil Rowlands, and 1 Mullet Creek for Stephen Luxton.

Construction of an EU standard fish processing plant at Plot 12 Boxer Bridge Road was granted for Fortuna Ltd assisting their plans to develop Sea Trout fishing in the Falklands.

An application to erect a steel framed materials recovery facility at Eliza Cove Road from Kelper Recycling Ltd was deferred pending more detailed plans that address the concerns and questions raised by the committee on the exact location and use of the building.

Committee Chair MLA Sharon Halford added, "no one objects to the idea, it would be wonderful to have a facility like that here, we just need more detail."

Also deferred was an application from KTV Ltd to install two 18 metre lattice masts and an equipment cabin at Dairy Pad-dock Road.

The committee decided more detail was needed to show the uses of the existing structures on the site and, following concerns raised by a neighbouring residential property, research sought on the noise caused by lattice mast structure on windy days.

KTV Ltd's other two applications to extend the existing mast to 18 metres at the hill south of the old BFFI site, and to extend an existing mast to 18 metres and install two 40 metre masts at Sapper Hill were approved.

The British Antarctic Monument Trust was granted permission to erect a monument at the Dockyard Point, Ross Road.

The monument lines up with another based on its mould at the Scott Polar Research Institute in Cambridge and will bear the title 'United through distance and time' to honour the works undertaken by Polar explorers in the South Atlantic.

Several amendments to existing property and plots were also granted by the committee including: Stuart and Lillian Wallace to erect a sun room and window at 38 Ross Road West; Shane Blackley to construct a garage and off-road parking at 4 Barrack Street; a light industrial unit at Plot 4 Gordon Lines for Neil McKay; off-street parking at 3 Hebe Street for Neil Rowlands; a steel framed warehouse and security fencing at Plot 33 Lookout Industrial Estate for Byron Holdings Ltd; a warehouse extension for Goodwin Offshore Ltd at 9 Coastel Road; a glass greenhouse at 9A Philomel Street for Jeffrey Halliday; relocation of a Portakabin at Stanley House for FIG; and renovation of a Portakabin for private and tourism use at Fox Bay East, West Falklands, for Mark and Karen Jones.

Two years temporary permission to site a static home at 36 John Street was approved for Angeline Joshua.

The decision not to permit permanent siting was taken to keep in line with similar recent applications that advise permanent siting of mobile/static homes is best reserved for the anticipated mobile park development at Murray Heights.

Strictly legal for quarter of a century

PINSENT Mason staff celebrated 25 years of business in the Falklands last week with a lively gathering of colleagues and clients at the offices they have occupied at 6 John Street since 1988.

Although the service has remained consistent the original Scottish based firm of Ledingham Chalmers has now changed hands twice to come under the current ownership of Pinsent Masons.

Ledingham Chalmers partner Gavin Farquhar opened the offices in August 1988 when the immediate economic concern was to develop the agriculture and fishing industries rather than look to oil as a commercially exploitable resource. It was the first private practice of solicitors on the Islands and served a range of clients on everything from corporate to private client work.

On April 3, 2006, Ledingham Chalmers including the Stanley office which was headed at that time by Keith Watson, became part of the British law firm of McGrigors.

The merger was expected to bring mutual benefits, with clients having the added advantage of the additional resource and knowledge base the network would bring.

While it might seem that the law firm has gone through many changes, a quick look at the background of the current company Pinsent Masons is a fine example of how law firms expand.

Pinsent Masons is the result of a number of mergers, the most recent being between McGrigors and Pinsent Masons in May 2012.

A previous merger took place in December 2004 between Pinsents and Masons. Masons was recognised as one of the leading firms in the construction and IT outsourcing markets in the UK, with Pinsents having a more broadly based corporate practice. The rationale behind the merger was that the merged firm could sell its corporate services to Masons construction and IT clients.

Pinsents itself was the result of the merger of Pinsent & Co, a Birmingham based law firm, and Simpson Curtis, a Leeds based law firm in 1995 with the merged firm trading under the name Pinsent Curtis. In 2001, Pinsent Curtis merged with Biddle & Co, to form Pinsent Curtis Biddle. In 2002, the Birmingham office of Garretts was incorporated into the firm. Pinsent Curtis Biddle subsequently was renamed Pinsents in 2003.

ANNIE Stewart and Faron Greentree were married in the Town Hall Registry Office on Saturday at 3pm with a small gathering of family and friends.

A celebratory reception was later held at the Falkland Islands Defence Force hall.

Annie wore a pink and white dress with a white shawl and was assisted by bridesmaid Jada who looked adorable in pink and white and pageboy Jaden. Her son Leslie proudly carried out the role of ring bearer.

Man jailed for assault on sleeping victim

JUAN Mauricio Ortega Godoy (36) was jailed for eight months on Wednesday after he admitted assault occasioning actual bodily harm.

Mr Godoy who has lived and worked in the Islands for some six years had chosen not to have a legal representative, however Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said this was not a disadvantage as a comprehensive pre-sentence report with relevant points had been prepared.

Mr Godoy along with a 17 year old youth had entered a property on John Street in the early hours of July 14 without invitation and entered the bedroom of the victim who was in bed asleep with his girlfriend. Mr Godoy punched the victim in the head several times.

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said the victim and his girlfriend must have been terrified, as must another 17 year old girl who was in the house at the time and disturbed by the noise.

It was a "joint visit, a joint attack, a joint enterprise," said Mr Gumsley, adding that there had been a significant degree of premeditation, with many opportunities for Mr Godoy to, "come to his senses."

Mr Godoy had "invaded" the victim's home where he was entitled to feel safe, and the offence had to be seen in context of Falklands society where doors are regularly left unlocked, said Mr Gumsley.

Application to leave Islands refused

APPLICATION for bail restrictions to be lifted on Clarence William Youde (54) to allow him to leave the Islands was refused in Court on Thursday.

Mr Youde pleaded not guilty to a charge of sexually touching without consent and his trial had been listed for September 4. This was adjourned until November 13 on Wednesday, due to a witness not being available.

Defence lawyer Keith Watson requested that the bail restriction on Mr Youde's passport be lifted so that he might travel to Ascension where his brother would sponsor him until his return for trial.

Mr Watson recognised that the Court had no jurisdiction on Ascension and if agreed, would be based on trust.

Crown Prosecutor Ros Cheek objected to the application on the grounds that Mr Youde had no incentive to return to the Islands and there was a risk he would refuse to surrender his passport in Ascension.

Refusing the application Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said the offences were serious as were the consequences of potential conviction and there was a clear lack of ties in the Islands for Mr Youde.

Memorial for Sir Rex Hunt

A MEMORIAL to the late Sir Rex Hunt - Governor of the Falkland Islands at the time of the Falklands war is to be publicly unveiled in a service of dedication in Zetland Park, Redcar at 3.30pm today.

The memorial has been commissioned from the annual budgets of Zetland ward councilors on Redcar and Cleveland Council, Josh Mason and Ron Harrison.

Lady Mavis Hunt will attend the celebration which will include Royal British Legion standard bearers, a service of memorial and dedication by the vicar of St Peter's Church, the Rev Rachel Harrison. Cllr Mason said he felt it was really important that those who had contributed to the rich local history and culture were remembered and extended an open invitation to those with links to the Falklands War.

Neil Judd back for Ag Dept

NEIL Judd is to return to the Falklands to take up the post of Senior Agricultural Adviser in mid October. Mr Judd is no stranger to the Falklands, having previously worked in the Department of Agriculture for six years. Director of Natural Resources, John Barton, said: "I am very pleased to welcome Neil back to the role, and the fact that he is already very familiar with agriculture in the Falklands will be a great advantage to the Department and the Islands."

Mr Judd said he and his wife Jenny were greatly looking forward to returning to the Falkland Islands and to saying hello once again to their many friends.

New look at 1982

JEREMY Brown was serving as Air Attaché in Brazil when the Falklands War broke out in 1982. From this position, in his book 'A South American War' due to be published on September 26, he provides a fresh perspective on the controversial hostilities and how they impacted on Argentina's neighbours and their relationships with Britain.

This book features enlightening interviews with eminent politicians, high-ranking members of the armed forces and diplomatic services (British and South American), Falkland Islanders and journalists.

Their stories bring to life the realities of the brief but intense war, how it affected the rest of South America, and the actions of 'the other players' behind the scenes.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a Member of the Legislative Assembly

IT is difficult to measure the success of our attempts to ensure that people worldwide are aware of our situation and our rights. We can chalk up a small success when Simon Jenkins, a journalist not known for his support for our rights, conceded in a recent Guardian article that the UK's claims to the Falklands and Gibraltar are legally sound. It is only a small victory, partly because the rest of the article is his usual carping negative stuff and also because the Guardian's readership is so tiny. Meanwhile we just need to continue pushing out the facts to all open minded enough to listen.

AS Ian Hansen, Sukey Cameron and I, assisted some days by other Islanders, head off to the party conferences in Glasgow, Brighton and Manchester over the next few weeks I'm very conscious of the need to keep the British public well informed. We will speak to hundreds of people across the political spectrum, and, if previous experience is a guide, we will be able to correct many inaccurate impressions. This is the twenty fifth year the Islands have exhibited at the Labour and Conservative conferences so is a cause for celebration. Many politicians and party officials are full of praise for the work Sukey has done over her years as representative, as well as acknowledging the considerable financial contribution that our purchase of the space for our stand each year has made. The fact that we continued to take a space whether they were in or out of power is also appreciated because many of the big commercial exhibitors do not.

AS students head off to start their studies at what ever level, our good wishes go with them. They have worked hard to achieve the necessary grades and follow many who have been a great credit to the Islands and their families. Some may struggle with all the different challenges of living and studying away from home and I would urge them to seek help early to sort out any problems rather than give up an opportunity that may not come again.

FM radio goes Island wide

THE Stanley FM radio package is to be extended Island wide following a recent consultation carried out by the Falkland Islands Government. 89 per cent of respondents expressed their preference to receive the radio package that is currently aired throughout Stanley.

The multi-channel FM transmitter network will provide three channels across the Islands. The preferred package includes FIRS, BFBS Falklands and BFBS Radio 2 with BBC World Service to be broadcast when FIRS is off air.

The Falkland Islands Government and KTV Ltd have signed a contract for a new FM radio network with the aim of providing equity of services and FM coverage throughout the Islands, and to deliver an improved service with high quality reception.

MLA Dick Sawle said, "Camp is a pivotal part of the Falkland Islands community and Government is committed to providing services to Camp residents that enhance the quality of life for those living there. We hope the extension of the Stanley radio package will enhance Camp's communication with the rest of the Islands and the international community."

The whole network is due to be completed by June 1, 2014 and it is anticipated that some areas may go live prior to this date.

Government receives Mary Hill investigation report

THE Falkland Islands Government has received the independent investigation report into the Mary Hill Quarry oil spill that occurred in June 2013.

Members of the Legislative Assembly (MLAs) said they felt that the incident was of such a nature that an enquiry should be carried out to investigate the circumstances of the spill.

The Chief Executive was asked to draft terms of reference on behalf of MLAs for an enquiry.

Phyl Rendell was appointed as an independent Investigation Officer to undertake the enquiry, assisted by Adam Cockwell.

The report reviews the circumstances of the spill, and makes recommendations for implementing plans and procedures for dealing with any future onshore oil spills, and also makes recommendations for improving the handling and disposal of waste oil generally.

The report will be considered by Executive Council in September 2013, following which it will be made public announced the Falkland Islands Government.

Who's in FIG

EIGHT new appointments have been made in Government Departments it was announced in the last Gazette, the most high profile being Martin Winward as Head Teacher at the Falkland Islands Community School.

Rose Toolan took up the post of Social Work Assistant with the Health and Social Services and Sue Wilks is now Speech and Language Therapist, with Yesenia Fernandez Acosta a General Assistant in the same department.

Bruce Wilks became Director of Civil Aviation/Head of Regulation at the Attorney General's Chambers. Ian Price took the post of Police Constable with the Emergency Services Department and Beatriz Lopez Gutierrez is now a Scientific Fisheries Observer (Seabirds), Natural Resources Department. Ville Markus Peltovuori, is now Economist at the Policy Unit.

Andreas Gustav Winter, Stock Assessment Scientist with the Natural Resources Department, renewed his contract as did Hilary McFarland as Senior Personnel Officer with the Human Resources Department.

Completing their contracts with the Education Department were Jacqueline Adams, Primary (Settlement) Teacher, Helen Bell, Deputy Head Teacher, and primary teachers Jackie Cooper, Robin Cooper, Kiernan Edwards and Sara Edwards, Special Needs Teacher Christine Houston, Physical Education Teacher Ruth Kemp and Art Teacher Laila Salt. Also completing his contract with the same department was Acting Director of Education Tom Hill.

Duane Stewart was promoted from Airport Firefighter to Airport Fire Service Manager and Geoffrey Greenough, from Plant Operator/Handyman to Assistant Foreman, at the Public Works Department.

Resigning from the Education Department were Learning Support Assistants Jennifer Thomas and Tamara Graham, English Teacher Deborah Hollingworth, and Primary Teacher Anna Stenning. Bethan Halliday resigned as Auxiliary Nurse, Health and Social Services Department. Anthony Payne as Head of Environmental Planning from the Environmental Planning Office, Alison Inglis as Senior Crown Counsel with the Attorney General's Chambers, and Andrew Pollard as Senior Agricultural Advisor at the Natural Resources Department.

Under the 'transfers' heading were Jessica Chapman, from Home Help, Department of Health and Social Services to Learning Support Assistant, Education Department, and Alan Henry from Customs and Immigration Officer, Emergency Services Department, to Fisheries Protection Officer, Natural Resources Department.

Britain's crisis of confidence

TAKE two foreign affairs stories that have been high in the headlines over the last few weeks, and consider which is more relevant to the Falklands. Is it Spain's re-energised offensive over Gibraltar or the vacillating Western response to chemical weapons atrocities in Syria?

From the online chatter, I feel fairly sure that most Falklands watchers and actual Islanders have been more concerned about the goings-on around the Rock.

Spain has attempted to make life difficult for Gibraltarians by tightening access, justifying the blatantly political move as necessary controls on smuggling. At the same time, Madrid has had some intimate chats with Argentina, and it seems possible they will cooperate with Buenos Aires in the United Nations.

It's been interesting to watch these manoeuvres, and, no doubt, the political and diplomatic efforts involved in countering the Spanish "aggression" has been time-consuming and annoying. But we can be sure that resurgent Spanish nationalism and cooperation with Argentina will not lead anywhere particularly unpleasant.

Both Spain and Britain are members of the European Union (which was, we should remember, set up originally to ensure that quarrelsome Europeans do not start swinging punches at each other). They are both members of NATO, and they are very happy trading partners. All of this means that the air will blow as hot as that which attracts we Brits to the Costa Blanca for a while.

But it won't get uncomfortably hot. Gib and the Falklands are safe from any BA-Madrid axis of anger, and so is Britain's supply of Rioja.

No, counter-intuitive though it may seem, the will-we-won't-we attitude of Europe and the United States to the murderous government in Syria is much more important. America has astonished the world by prevaricating over punitive attacks, even though Damascus blatantly ignored President Obama's warning and used chemical weapons. The 'Red line', endorsed by the UK, was quite clear: gas your own people, and you will pay a heavy military price. Well, no one is sure about that now.

After the dreadful fiascos of Iraq and Afghanistan, it's not surprising that much of America is happy to leave foreigners to rip each other to bits if they want to, regardless of the innocents who die. But if Washington ignores Syria, the US's reputation as a, by and large, bastion of decency with power to punish will be in tatters. That will worry many other decent but relatively weak countries, but many Americans will not be too uncomfortable.

Throughout their history, Americans have periodically retreated from troublesome foreign affairs, but we always know they can emerge again, all guns blazing, at any time they wish to do so.

The problem is much more acute for Britain because maintaining the UK's prominent place in the world depends on being willing to stand tall, and being seen to do so often. Arguably, it was right for the Prime Minister to seek parliamentary approval for military action, but this should have been a mere rubber-stamping of policy, leading to the early mobilisation of naval vessels and jets that are already in the Eastern Mediterranean.

Instead we have seen stark evidence that most Brits are tired of conflict and believe our forces have been weakened fatally by budget cuts. It all points to a nation that is more world-weary than at almost any point in post-colonial history.

This crisis in British confidence is of real interest in Buenos Aires. The "Malvinas Observatory" (whatever that is), the Presidency and diplomats in BA are, as I write (trust me) working out what Britain's apparent desire to turn away from the troubles of the world means to them. They are extrapolating today's crisis to work out what it would mean if Argentina turns up the military, diplomatic or economic heat under the Falklands. They may reach the conclusion that Syria is a turning point for Britain. By not leaping to the support of the US, we have thrust a dagger into the "Special Relationship", and are not eager to test again our military capability. They may well look at us and conclude we are tired.

This would probably be a mistake, but Argentina has an uncanny ability to misread the signals. One can't directly compare Syria, a foreign country with no major links to the UK, with a dependent territory that has very strong cultural and developing economic links. But, the fact remains that, depending on what we see over the coming weeks and months, we may be seeing a very profound change in the way Britain feels about itself and its place in the world, and that can at least influence Falklands strategy.

Throughout history, the belief that we will win despite the odds has carried us through. Just summon a few names from history: Waterloo, Dunkirk and even the Falklands to see what I mean.

Few would have put money on the UK emerging triumphant from those episodes, and yet we did, thanks to that great but intangible asset: confidence. Syria is, however, making us question this.

After two long wars in the last decade that we cannot really say we won, after watching the Treasury decimate our forces, and after experiencing the worst economic malaise in three decades, do we still have the confidence to stand up to the world's ne'er-do-wells?

Actually, I think we should still have that confidence. In my opinion, we do have the best small armed forces in the world, and while we should pick our wars carefully, we can win them.

We do have diplomatic clout and we do have the sixth largest economy in the world. But that's just the way I see it. Much of the rest of the country reads the Daily Mail and its like and believes that Britain's best days are behind us. They may yet rediscover the confidence that enabled Britain to walk tall and be a winner – even in Syria – but that is by no means certain.

1. What is your most prized possession? Has to be my newest gadget – my Dell XPS convertible laptop

2. What is the best piece of advice you have ever been given? When entering the world of parenting I was advised to 'say what you mean and mean what you say' which seemed to be pretty good advice

3. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with?

I have never had a cup of tea in my life, that just leaves tots, old friends and campers usually make the best company – throw in a sing song, it doesn't get better than that

4. If you had a motto, what would it be? Where there's a will there's a way

5. If you could set up a business in the Falklands what would it be? Nandos or Las Iguanas

6. There's a "Falklands" has got talent" competition, how would you audition? Think I would be better at helping to organise the event than subjecting the public to any audition

7. What in your everyday life drives you crazy? Such a long list; bad customer service probably close to the top of it

8. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be? Always fancied NZ but love going anywhere that has a good climate. Which might go some way to explaining why when I moved away from the Falklands it was to Shetland!

9. What is your favourite TV programme? 'Great British Bake Off' is compulsive viewing at the moment. Otherwise 'Still Game' or anything that makes me laugh out loud.

10. What song makes you feel happy (or sad) when you hear it? 'Take Me Home Country Roads' and 'Paloma Blanca' always made me a bit sad when living overseas.

11. What would people be surprised to learn about you? More of an explanation than a surprise... I have a bit of a phone phobia (think it's about needing to be able to read peoples' faces)

12. What is your happiest childhood memory? Growing up on the West, so too many to choose. 'Wester' Trish returned to the Falklands in 2010 after 10 years in Shetland. She has two girls Ellie (7) and Jenna (4) and is married to Malcolm. Now both girls are at school she is embarking on a distance learning accountancy course.

Instructor/Mentor to deliver Livelihood Programme

It is vitally important that the islands young people enter the world of work as well prepared as we can possibly make them, ensuring all key aspects of development are covered, equipping them with skills and attitudes that make all the difference. In order for our youth to make the most of the upcoming opportunities in line with air access they need to have a solid foundation ensuring rounded skills are present.

Enterprise St Helena will be implementing an offshore up-skilling visit to South Africa from September to December for a teaching instructor to be trained under a facilitator delivering the livelihood model addressing key attitudes incorporating the two components of Job Readiness and Life Skills. The programme will be tailored to St Helena. Once training is completed the instructors will be expected to return to the island to commence implementation of the programme.

Delivery needs to be full-time to the wider island (learner target 16-35yrs)

Full-time Instructor/Learning Mentor - Young people, Job seekers, Long-term unemployed

To ease the path into employment by developing the skills of employability (personal and physical wellness)/life

The potential instructor should have a teaching background with experience in the teaching profession, relate to the youth, passionate, enthusiastic with high energy levels. In addition seen as a role model to the youth. If you are interested in undertaking this opportunity, Enterprise St Helena would like a proposal for the delivery of this programme.

Falklands couple walk for the Welsh Guards

HUSBAND and wife team Tim and Jan Miller took part in the Walk on Wales event last weekend. The walk is a sponsored relay walk to raise £1 million in aid of the Welsh Guards and Combat Stress and includes the whole of the 870 mile Welsh Coast. Tim and Jan's leg of the journey was from Prestatyn to Rhos-on-Sea in North Wales.

Jan said the walk is in memory of the 50 Welsh Guards who lost their lives in the Falklands, Iraq, Afghanistan and Northern Ireland, and a special silver baton is carried with the names inscribed on it. Two Falklands Veterans Jan Koops and Rod Morgan will walk the entire route.

Jan explained: "Our part of the walk was led by GSM Bill Mott OBE accompanied by his two brothers and sister. Each day is dedicated to one of the fallen Welsh Guards and on Saturday a simple drumhead service was held to remember Guardsman Paul Green and as Paul's family all now live in the Falklands, I was asked if I would carry the baton for the day in his memory."

She said this was a, "huge honour and I was extremely privileged and proud to do so."

"It was great to meet up with many ex Welsh Guards and next of kin who have stayed with us over the years," said Jan, "and the camaraderie shared during the day was amazing. Everyone looked after each other, with plenty of banter and the four lads from 2 Company Welsh Guards did an outstanding job looking after everyone and keeping everyone supplied with water."

Walk leader Jan Koops hands the baton to Jan Miller

Pangbourne venue for Kainan's christening

Jasmine and Craig with Reverend Jeffers and Kainan

THE Falkland Islands Memorial Chapel at Pangbourne in Berkshire was the venue for the Christening of Kainan Leigh Clark, son of Islander Craig Clark and Jasmine Deborah Clark.

Grandfather Norman Clark told Penguin News the ceremony was conducted by the Reverend Neil Jeffers and relatives and friends of the family attended from a far away as the Falklands, the USA and Germany.

Top darts from Chris and Lizzy

CHRIS Lloyd took first place (pictured above with Lizzy Bonner) in the Stanley Darts Club Individual Knock Out finals held on Saturday in the Victory Bar. Lizzy took second place with Adrian Minnell and Chris Clark join third. Particular congratulations to Lizzy who is understood to be the very first lady to reach the final of this particular competition.

Your letters

Rifle club needs new members

WHEN I received a telephone call from Gareth Goodwin, Chairman of the Rifle Association, to ask if I would be prepared to present the trophies to the winners of the shooting competitions held during the 2012/2013 season I readily agreed, indeed I felt privileged to be given the opportunity. The prize-giving was held at the Narrows Bar on Saturday August 31 and it was well attended by the usual supporters of the Rifle Club and together with an excellent buffet meal presented by the Narrows Bar staff it turned out to be a great social evening.

I joined the Club in the late 1960s when at least more than twenty members regularly attended most of the meetings but sadly now the Club membership has fallen into single figures.

Rifle shooting in the Islands has been a popular sport, with the Falklands being represented at the Bisley ranges in England since the 1920s and a number of trophies in the junior team events have been won by the Falklands teams together with some individual prizes since then.

Probably the most remembered event for the Club, and indeed the Islands, took place in September 1982 when the late Tony Pettersson and myself attended the Commonwealth Games in Brisbane Australia. This was the first time that the Islands had been represented at the Commonwealth Games and coming just a few months after the Falklands War Tony and I received overwhelming attention from the Australian press. In fact many of the local newspapers reported that when we entered the stadium at the opening ceremony we received as much cheering and hand-clapping as the Australian team did.

However my main reason for writing this letter is to offer a plea to anyone out there especially the younger members of the community to please consider having a go at target rifle shooting, it is truly a great and also a competitive sport. Have a chat with one of the Club members about at least a practice shoot down at the Rookery Bay Range. Additional members are desperately needed, it would be very sad if the great tradition of rifle shooting was to come to an end here in the Islands.

Remarkable voyage - a story of the 1900s

A 'REMARKABLE and enforced voyage' to Montevideo, Uruguay, by Falkland Islander Fred Newman which began on May 5, 1900 was reported in an issue of 'Penguin' thirty five years later based on a piece taken from the Falkland Islands Magazine of 1900.

The Editor of 'Penguin', in a piece passed to today's Penguin News by Taff Davies, explained to his readers that, "Mr Newman, who is still a well-known figure about Stanley, is now over eighty years of age and with his wife, who is also still alive, has had a family of some twenty-four children. Both Mr and Mrs Newman have outlived the majority of their children including the son who accompanied Mr Newman when he was blown out to sea in a small cutter while travelling from Teal Inlet to Stanley on the momentous occasion which we recount again."

The Editor goes on to relay the story from the original magazine: "Mr Newman's family left Teal Inlet on the 5th May in the Shamrock and reached Stanley in the afternoon. He and a son of nine years old sailed at the same time in a small cutter he himself decked."

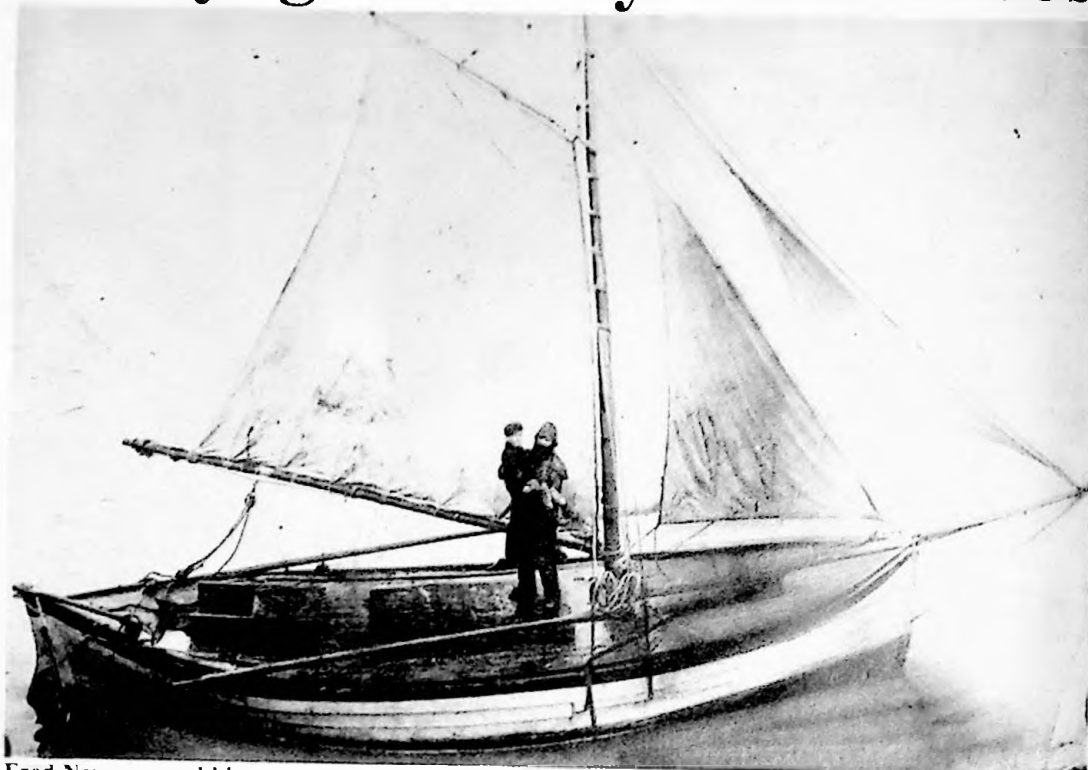

They were hailed outside of Salvador by Shamrock, goes the story, but he replied that they were "alright" and the Shamrock need not stand by.

"They have not been heard of since. The following month the Magazine reported that Mr Newman was seen on the afternoon of the 6th May from the Johnson Harbour camp about three miles north of the Volunteers, a gale from the south-west was blowing and the cutter was tossing about. The Fortuna going north was crossing Berkeley Sound at the time she passed the Volunteers at dusk. A sharp look out was kept for F. Newman by Captain Rowland who had heard of his having left Teal Inlet for Stanley but no sign of the cutter was observed. It blew very hard all night: some gear having been carried away on board the Fortuna she put back to Port William for refit."

The Penguin Editor said that after a cryptic announcement in July, "that nothing had been heard of Mr F. Newman and his son, came the sight of the two missing souls landing safe and sound at Stanley from the Pacific Company's Royal mail Steamer Orellana which arrived on August 10th."

The September 1900 magazine gives the following report:

"The Orellana which arrived at Stanley on August 10th, thus being three days late, brought amongst other passengers Frederick Newman and his little son, who had joined the ship at Montevideo. Most of his friends had almost given up all hope of ever seeing him again. The long interval of time that had elapsed since he was last seen, the fearful weather there had been for several days after he left the Falklands, the comparatively small supply of food and water he was known to have with him and the utter unfitness of his boat for such a lengthened journey – all mitigated against the chances of his having survived.

Fred Newman and his young son survived on swedes during their accidental voyage to Montevideo

"But here he is safe and sound in Stanley once more, going about his daily work as if it had never been interrupted and looking and feeling (so he says) none the worse for his wonderful adventure."

The writer explained that Mr Newman had built his boat in his spare time and wished therefore to sail her in, the distance being some 35 or 40 miles, his boat's dimensions being 26 ft 7 ins long by 8 ft 2 ins broad and 3 ft 6 ins deep."

During his journey, "Newman found that he had been blown away off the land and could only just see the lighthouse at Cape Pembroke and which was now away to the west of him. Putting the vessel about he endeavoured to get back, but was unable to do so, and to add to his difficulties some of his gear carried away, so that he could not hoist his sails."

"He was now in a bad way. Fortunately he was well victualled for the short cruise he expected. Of meat, he had a small quantity cooked, a whole dead sheep, and a young pig cut up in salt. His wife had cooked him a fair amount of bread and he had some flour. Tea he also had, but this eventually had to supply the place of tobacco and his means of cooking was very scanty. The water he brought lasted them twenty one days. But what proved to be the best of all was a large quantity of swede turnips and raw potatoes which in consequence of his moving he had taken up out of his garden at Teal Inlet and was bringing them in for his family's use."

The writer explains that these proved to be his best friends, "for though his water was soon exhausted their natural moisture was sufficient to alleviate their pangs of thirst whilst the tubers themselves gave them enough nourishment for subsistence."

"For sixty two days did he sail about, and during that time they only twice sighted a vessel and each time were too far off to be seen. For a long time his only thought was to get back to the Falklands. In his vain attempts to do so he went much farther south than the islands and found himself once in the middle of a school of whales. Then the winds took north of his home and realising by the higher temperature that this was so, he resolved to make for the coast; for five days he sailed westward and then sighted land and got to within quite a short distance of it. Then the wind fell away, and they tried to work the boat in with the oars. But the tide and currents were too strong for him, and once more, the wind rose and carried him out to sea again."

"About this time there was a great fall of rain, and so he got a supply of water. Then, for about six days more he sail about trying to reach the coast again, which on the last day (July 6th) he was within easy reach of, when looking under the sail he saw a steamer coming up. Hauling up a piece of black cloth as a signal of distress, and holding up his little boy in his arms, Newman did his best to attract the attention of those on board, quickly she drew near to investigate the strange object which they had seen for about two hours and soon, Newman and his son and their boat were all on board."

The steamer proved to be the Argentine transport Guardia Nacional bound for Buenos Aires. "Here she took them, where they were treated with the greatest kindness and shown much attention."

"Everyone was much excited at their wonderful escape and their photographs were taken and shewn on the cinematograph in the places of amusement. A collection amounting to 146.50 dollars was made for them. The boy was also taken to Government House and presented to President Roca who very kindly made him a present of 25 dollars. They were both of course much done up after their long cruise and suffered especially from their limbs swelling. For a time before they were picked up the boy was particularly poorly. Strange to say the Guardia Nacional which picked them up had also on board twenty-nine sailors from the Dumbarton Castle which had been wrecked on the 20th May, and who joined her at Staten Island (Tierra del Fuego). With regard to the boat which carried them so safely Newman was obliged to sell it."

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

WELL, winter is hanging on in there is it not? Bright sunshine for a while (with a chilling wind) and snow falling either quietly or in such a flurry of wind that almost white-out conditions exist.

That wonderful old wreck that was the Jhelum finally gave in during the gale force winds and much of it is now on the beach as rough bits of old wood and some newer pieces from patches applied some years ago, such a sad end!

I have been pulling out the odd weed at times but, to be honest the ground is so cold and hard that it is difficult to dig and it's anything but pleasant work, besides the winds are very cold between squalls.

Instead, I have been potting on some of the freshly rooted roses in the greenhouse border, having warmed the soil for the pots first by leaving the compost in the greenhouse, where it remains above freezing, just. This should see them making healthy growth as the weather warms up.

I've just had a grandchild doing a wonderful job of washing suitably sized small pots (and the mess of water left behind wasn't too bad) ready to make a start planting seeds in indoors tomorrow. I like square ones for this purpose as more pots will fit in the trays. The trays I used are fairly deep ones without any means of drainage. A layer of sand, which I buy in a bag from the Garden Centre, (I don't use beach sand as this might well still have salt or even bugs in it) goes in next and about an inch deep. This will help keep the soil in the pots evenly moist and also help deal with changes in temperature. The little pots are then filled with seed and cutting mix compost, the tops are smoothed by lightly-sitting another pot of the same size on them and then, when all the pots are in, the tray is watered well and left to sit overnight to become moist and warm right through, before starting to sow the seeds. The few seeds I had tried in the tunnels earlier barely made it up before the cold weather hit again and they either curled their toes up and died or have limped along, but really I don't think they will be up to much. So, I am sowing them all again and of course, many more besides, this time in much more favourable conditions, on the window-sill in the kitchen in fact, and in the hope that they might make good plants by the time the weather allows them to make their way out into the harsher conditions, whether under cover or directly outside.

Having said all that, the garlic planted outside in a raised bed in April or May is about four inches tall and looking very happy at the moment. Fingers crossed that the crop is as good as last year's. The onions which also did well last year kept us going for quite some time, they seemed fine just sitting in the ground in the tunnel too, only one of them starting to get a little soft in the middle when I lifted them a couple of weeks ago. Mind you, I did supplement them with bought frozen sliced ones; so convenient when in a hurry, and very good too. The strawberries outside are also looking quite healthy even though they are not making much growth at the moment.

Our wonder-wall tunnel collapsed under the weight of snow and ice overnight last week. It looked rather drastic, pretty terminal in fact. But no, when it all melted enough for us to get in there again and remove the last of the snow the whole thing sprang up again and all was well. Mind you, one of the fruit trees overwintering in there did get a bit squashed and had a couple of branches fractured. I stuck some bandages (real ones) on those and it also seems to be on the road to full recovery, well, I'm keeping my fingers crossed that this is so as this was one of the 'family' fruit trees, the ones with three or four different types grafted on the trunk to ensure flowering and so pollination all happens at the same time.

With the soil in the little pots evenly moist and warm I was finally able to start planting seeds yesterday. The kiddies were kept busy writing labels while I got on with the more interesting bit. There are loads of different tomato seeds, peppers, pumpkins, lettuce, cabbages, and any other greens I could find at the time, also leeks and onion seeds went in. There are also some shrub and flowering perennial seeds in some of the pots; in all there are thirty little pots full of promise on the kitchen window-sill. These face east so they are ideal for the job, being reasonably warm but unlikely to get over heated by the sun. Most seeds are quite happy to be only just under the surface and none were planted thickly so once they were on the smoothed soil in the pots, I just passed a small garden mesh strainer with some compost over them and the job was done. I have plastic lids which fit over my trays but cling-film or plastic bags would do the job just as well.

All the carrots were up, scraped and put away in the freezer last week. My hands have become very rough and dry in the process but, at least, the sickly orange skin and nail colour has now gone.

The Law Courts of the Falkland Islands
Sentencing Advisory Committee

The Law Courts are seeking to establish a Sentencing Advisory Committee as part of the ongoing process of modernising the court system and the administration of justice in the Falkland Islands.

The purposes of the committee will be to:

- create a greater understanding of the sentencing process amongst the public and
- establish sentencing guidelines with the aim of promoting consistency in sentencing practice throughout the various courts of the Islands.

It is intended that membership of the committee will include representatives of the judiciary, the prosecution and defence, the police, the probation service, and social welfare and mental health services.

In addition the Law Courts are looking for members of the public who would also have an interest in serving on the Committee and who could provide their views from the perspective of those who have no specific connection with the criminal justice system.

Anyone who is interested in serving on the Committee is asked to send a letter of application to the Court Administrator, Law Courts, Town Hall, Stanley by 27th September 2013.

Wind farm contributing 33 per cent

"THE Sand Bay Wind Farm provides a 33 per cent annual contribution to Stanley's power from wind," confirmed Glenn Ross from the Power and Electrical Section this week.

Asked whether the wind farm was living up to expectations Mr Ross said, "I am very happy with the wind farms performance, it is worth around £880,000 of saving per annum. We sell around 12,000,000 units of electricity each year, so a rise in cost or a saving of £120,000 means an increase or reduction in the tariff of one pence."

The current price is 22 pence per unit. Without Sand Bay Wind Farm the price would be 7.33 pence higher, he said.

Other remote islands have prices per unit of 36 pence. The wind farm began Phase 1 production on August 9, 2007 and second phase in February 15, 2010.

Noble temporary port proposals

THE Falkland Islands Government is currently in discussions with Noble Energy regarding a temporary port facility to the east of FIPASS.

MLA Dick Sawle said there was still a lot of detail yet to be discussed and as with all issues which involve private companies, it had not been discussed in any public forum.

He personally feels, "reasonably confident," that a solution would be found that would suit Noble's requirements.

He noted that any proposals the oil company put forward would have to go through the normal planning process which would provide opportunity for the public to respond.

AN exhibition of art to be auctioned at the Conservation Ball on September 27 was on show last night at Bittersweet. Guests had the opportunity to preview the items on auction coupled with live acoustic music from local musicians Andy Felton and Mike Greig. The public exhibition will be running at Bittersweet between September 12 and 26. Check out www.penguin-news.com for further information including which items are available as sealed bids or key items for live auction on the night. Right: Conservation's Andy Stanworth, Farrah Peck, Freya Gill and David Doxford with artwork at Bittersweet.

Adult recreation replaces toddlers' unsafe play pool

A DECISION to remove the toddler pool at the Leisure Centre and replace it with a spa facility has caused controversy locally.

Responding to a question from Penguin News on Tuesday, Director of Central Services Simon Fletcher circulated a press release saying it was part of a programme of improvement works at Stanley Leisure Centre.

He explained that the jacuzzi and sauna would be installed where the toddler pool was previously situated. The decision to replace the toddler pool was taken following advice from STA (International Experts in Safety Training Solutions) about its suitability and safety. He added that the jacuzzi and sauna were, "improvements requested by members through our last customer survey."

Stanley parents have expressed dismay at the decision. Mum of two Jo Turner told Penguin News: "I would have thought that the baby pool is essential to build water confidence in younger children which is the first step towards enjoying swimming which has huge health benefits and is good fun."

Ms Turner said: "It's pretty disappointing if the baby pool is going to go. If the numbers of swimmers is falling then maybe someone needs to look at how to increase those numbers rather than just taking away the facilities."

She also commented on the availability of a jacuzzi and sauna at Malvina House Hotel and asked, "Why is FIG trying to compete with a service that the private sector is already providing and has successfully provided for many years. FIG should provide swimming facilities for the whole community, including the very young, and let the private sector continue making a return on the significant investments that they have already made."

Another mum Julie Halliday has written to the Falkland Islands Government. In her letter she comments: "It is a great idea to put in a spa, however, certainly not at the expense of the small pool. Why not improve the toddler pool not remove it? This would encourage even more family use and bring our facility more in-line with what other countries provide in aquatic centres," she suggested, "a water spray area, activities, and a toddler pool that has a warmer temperature than the lane pool. Without this our pool facility is really adult focused."

Dozens of parents have expressed their unhappiness on social network site Facebook.

Member of Legislative Assembly Mike Summers said yesterday: "The decision to replace the toddler pool was taken 'in-house' on two grounds. There was a serious concern about safety because of its physical design and how some children threw themselves into it, and an inability to supervise it properly at times when parents were not doing so. I am advised by the pool supervisor that there will be considerably more swimming aids for small children to use the main pool."

"There was no public information because the staff wanted to achieve a, 'surprise,' opening. That in hindsight may have backfired somewhat. The works are progressing well and it will be a great new facility, but the toddler pool is unfortunately irretrievably gone."

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

WHETHER our overflowing and lively letters page this week was generated by thoughts of alerting the ears of candidates (do we have any new ones yet?) for the next Legislative Assembly, or because the recent bit of sunshine has filled us with vim and vigour, it's hard to ascertain. Whichever, it is the issue of 'monopolies' that appears to be infinite and it's certainly one likely to be faced by those interested in taking on the role of Legislative Assembly Member.

It's undeniable that a small population invariably means services on offer will be restricted to a certain extent or alternatively, incredibly expensive, but do you, the reader, think we're getting best value for our money from Stanley Services, Standard Chartered Bank and Sure? Personally I'm not always convinced by arguments that increased competition, certainly in these specific cases, would reduce costs. After all, there's always the worry that the size of our population wouldn't be able to support, for example two, communications companies or even two banks, but that shouldn't mean the organisations be allowed to rest on their laurels (as they assure us they do not) knowing no one is going to undercut them. Drop us a line at Penguin News; we're interested in your opinion on the matter, and the up and coming Legislative candidates can, at the very least, form an idea of the questions and arguments they may face over coming months on this particular debate.

ALSO on the matter of 'good' service, earlier this week a very annoyed mum informed Penguin News that the toddler pool at the Leisure Centre had been filled in and replaced with spa facilities. A call to the Director of Central Services led to a press release explaining that the pool had been declared unsafe and that "the new spa facilities offer added health benefits". I entirely accept that an unsafe pool should be disposed of immediately, but it still seemed a little out of balance to replace one of the few facilities available to small children with one primarily aimed at adults, and not only that, but one that has produced (contrary to the claim in the press release) "little evidence," that it has any health benefits, "above and beyond relaxation and a feeling of well-being." (Dr. Harvey Simon, editor-in-chief of Harvard Men's Health Watch.)

It was fascinating to hear news of a Falklands lady and her husband producing quality wine in New Zealand, not only that but you can buy it in Stanley. This gave PN staff the perfect opportunity to test it out and we have since declared the Sauvignon Blanc a pretty superb 'breakfast wine'...

Hand over your blood and help the community

WOULD you like to be a member of the Emergency Blood Donor Panel?

Speaking to Penguin News this week Locum Biomedical Scientist Neil Smith explained that the KEMH receives a small number of donated blood units every month supplied by National Health Service Blood & Transplant (NHSBT) from the UK. This is delivered by the MoD air-bridge.

He said: "In normal circumstances these donated units are sufficient to meet the needs of the KEMH in serving the Islanders, MoD and visitors. However there are circumstances where extra units would be required at short notice."

On these occasions selected members of the Emergency Donor Panel will be asked to attend hospital to donate a unit (around 400 ml) of blood for immediate clinical use.

To ensure the safety of the patient receiving a blood donation and the donor donating the blood, before being included on that panel each volunteer is of course required to complete a short medical questionnaire and provide a small sample of blood for screening.

Mr Smith said: "The questionnaire is very similar to the one completed by all donors in the UK before donating blood."

Some of the tests are carried out by the Pathology Department at the hospital in the Falklands and the rest are carried out by the NHSBT testing labs in the UK.

Here the blood is tested for ABO and RhD blood group and red cell antibody screen and in the UK the blood is tested for Hepatitis B, Hepatitis C, HIV I, HIV II, Syphilis and Human T-cell leukaemia virus (HTLV).

If everything is satisfactory the volunteer's details are added to the current Emergency Donor Panel list. He added: "The regulations covering the supply of donated blood to patients are very strict and occasionally volunteers might not be allowed to be on the panel. Occasionally volunteers are deferred for a short period or in rare occasions deferred permanently."

However if a volunteer is deferred from the register the medical staff at KEMH will write to the volunteer to explain the reasons for the deferment. Mr Smith said: "This is no reflection on the volunteer it is just that the requirements are designed to be as strict as possible to ensure the safety of both the patient and volunteer in donating and receiving blood. Members of the panel will be asked to provide a sample for screening once a year and fill out the medical questionnaire."

In emergency situations the staff in the pathology department will select donors from the Emergency Donor Panel to donate a unit of blood. This is done on the basis of the information received from the screening process and the requirements of the patient in need of blood.

When the term blood group is used it normally refers to a person's ABO blood group: "There are in fact hundreds of different blood groups, normally these other blood groups only become important on rare occasions if a patient receives a lot of blood over a period of time or in some pregnancies," said Mr Smith.

For the purpose of the Emergency Donor Panel the most important blood group system is the ABO group system.

He added: "Thankfully the volunteers on the Emergency Donor Panel rarely have to be called in but the very fact that they are available at short notice and have been tested and screened in advance allows KEMH to provide a safe and effective transfusion service for the people of the Falkland Islands and any visitors to the Islands."

"The members of the Emergency Donor Panel provide a useful service to the community. New members to the panel are always welcome."

The next routine screening session is due in November 2013. Anybody wishing to become a member of the panel or requiring more information can contact Rachel Berntsen in the Pathology Department at KEMH on 28071.

Low scores raise funds for Stephen Jaffray Fund

THE Stephen Jaffray Memorial fund has been boosted by £730 as a result of darts teams fund raising efforts throughout the season.

Deanos based dart team Spaz Ninjas has raised £430 for the Stephen Jaffray Fund by charging their players 50p for any score under 21 and £1 for any score under 10. Proving the charity is close to her heart (or that her darts still haven't improved), Jody Poole raised the most money with her low scores, with a total of £72.

Other team members Stephen Aldridge, Fudge Smith, Karl Nightingale, Chris Poole, Marvyn Ford, Jay Gamble, Ryan Poole and Sara Molkenbuhr-Smith also gave a helping hand in raising money. The Spaz Ninjas thanked Deano's staff for keeping them topped up with drinks, and also everyone else who kindly put their hands into their pockets and donated any spare cash they had. Special thanks go to the Pale Maidens who played with mini darts in the final game and increased the total significantly. A repeat match is anticipated for next season.

Impressed at the Ninjas efforts the Rose Bar ladies team the Rosellas also donated their season's savings of £300 to the fund. A slightly different form of fund raising was used in that any score of three or seven cost the player £1 and the left over from each week's 'kitty' was carried forward. Each team member and their merry band of supporters put £10 in each week for refreshments with what wasn't consumed carried forward. The weighty purse could be considered proof that the noisy team were mostly fuelled on high spirits and not alcohol. Thanks to Rosellas Teresa Clifton, Nats Smith, Nats Lloyd, Lisa and Sharon Jaffray, Tracey Macaskill, Sarah Cooper, Carli Sudder and not forgetting the groupies Violet Clarke and Iris Dickson for their continued support.

Major incident exercise Wednesday

THE Falkland Islands Government will be carrying out a major incident exercise on Wednesday September 18, during normal working hours in the Stanley area. The exercise will involve the emergency services and other agencies and there may be temporary traffic restrictions in some areas to allow the safe execution of exercise scenarios.

The exercise will involve some explosive and pyrotechnic effects to add realism. Any inconvenience to members of the public is regretted. Any queries or concerns regarding the exercise should be directed to Maj Peter Biggs FIDF on tel 55477.

Summer cruise season looking good

Sullivan Shipping Cruise Coordinator Samantha Marsh

LOOKING ahead to the cruise ship tourist season Sullivan Shipping's Tourism Coordinator Samantha Marsh said the upcoming season was looking pretty good, with approximately 45,000 visitors expected if all the vessels make their calls.

Last season was a very bad season, with 21 cancellations that resulted in a loss of just over 23,000 cruise ship visitors, said Miss Marsh.

"Roughly half of those cancellations were due to bad weather conditions, and the rest were due to political pressure. I am remaining optimistic that the political climate in the Southern Cone remains reasonably stable for the upcoming season so that our cruise ship arrivals are not affected this season," she said.

Last season approximately 30,000 tourists visited the Islands.

Stanley is forecast to receive 79 cruise ship visits this season, and the outer islands are forecast to have 99 calls.

Miss Marsh said she was also really pleased that Sullivan Shipping will be operating seven passenger exchanges this season, involving four different expedition companies which is an increase from the five which took place last season.

"This year we will be operating a new excursion to Elephant Beach farm, which is very exciting; it's always fantastic to add another excursion to our products," she told Penguin News, adding: "We have some really fantastic tours, everyone involved works very hard to create a great experience and our tours always get very good feedback from the guests."

Stanley also features high in the port ratings feedback, which is based on how passengers enjoyed that port of call in general, she said and concluded, "we are looking forward to another busy season."

Busy cruise days

Boxing day could be busy with a visit from Silver Cloud, Crystal Symphony and Zaandam, with a total capacity of 1,715 passengers. Also on the same day Ortelius with a capacity of 12 will call in to Sealion Island.

Christmas Day itself will be fairly quiet with only the Silver Explorer visiting Stanley with a capacity of 130. Ortelius will call in to Steeple Jason.

Golden Princess with her potential 2,500 tourists will hopefully fill the streets and the gift shops and cafes on December 28.

Other potentially busy days in the season include February 11 when Celebrity Infinity and Seabourn Quest call in with a possible 1,800 and 450 respectively and March 7 when the Golden Princess (2,500), Zaandam (1,400) and Sea Explorer (114) pay a visit.

March 11 is also busy with a visit from the Crown Princess. She has the capacity of 3,000 passengers.

MPA chefs wed in Stanley

CHEFS Matthew Locke and Evelyn Fieire, of Sodexo Defence Services at Mt Pleasant, were married at Stanley Registry Office on July 30. They were attended by close friends who witnessed the ceremony.

Following the service they held a reception at Mt Pleasant, prepared by Brian Harris, who also made the cake.

The happy couple will spend a month in Chile when they plan to hold a second service with the bride's family and, in November, have a well-earned honeymoon in Brazil.

"We would like to thank everybody who helped and supported us, especially Brian and Kamella for their work," said Evelyn, "and a special thank you to all the people who shared a special day with us."

Matthew and Evelyn Locke

New Zealand wine with a Falklands connection

WINE buffs will be pleased to try a new wine in the West Store with Falkland Islands' connections.

Lynfer Estate wines are the product of a New Zealand vineyard owned and operated by Islander Coleen Boyd and her husband Dave from Northern Island. Coleen is the daughter of Tony and Gladys Carey of Stanley.

Coleen and Dave immigrated to New Zealand in 1988 and set up the vineyard in 2000, initially supplying grapes to other wineries. They started having wine made under their own label in 2009. Coleen told Penguin News that the name Lynfer was derived from their two daughters, Lyndsay and Jennifer's names.

The Celtic look to the label reflects Dave's Irish heritage while Coleen said she was hoping to develop a penguin label to reflect her Falklands heritage and she was on the lookout for a suitable name.

Islanders may also remember Dave who was a Royal Marine with NP8901 on detachment in the Falklands prior to 1982 and returned during the war with the Special Boat Services (SBS).

Currently on sale is the Lynfer Estate Pinot Noir 2010 (£9.99) which is described as having a perfumed nose of subtle oak, lifted fruit characters of dark cherry and plums with a hint of herbal spiciness. The Sauvignon Blanc 2011 (£7.99) which is fast becoming a firm favourite with Penguin News staff is a crisp, clean wine with floral aromas of honeysuckle and lime, and a Rose 2012 (£8.99).

Raymond Chan, a highly respected wine advisor in the New Zealand wine scene with over two decades of wine judging, retailing and writing experience said the Lynfer Estate was, "a label worth following."

Legislative Assembly Diary

WITH the final weeks in the life of this Assembly flashing by, it is time to reflect on how much has happened since those early days when the eight new members sat down to decide on priorities. As is so often the case events intervened when the new round of oil exploration began, soon accompanied by a ratcheting up of Argentine pressure in an attempt to discourage the oil companies and stifle our economy. Much had to be done to work around the various hindrances they attempted to put in place. We should be grateful that the oil companies resisted those bullying tactics. We should also be thankful that Argentine diplomatic and practical ineptitude gave us and the British government opportunities to make valuable political and factual capital out of their hostile behaviour.

IT also became clear that the work of Assembly members could no longer be part time and those attempting to juggle it with another role undoubtedly struggle. In future eight full time members will be better able to cover the work that needs to be done, here and overseas and serve the community better. As our democracy develops more oversight by members is needed, as is more active involvement in ensuring that policies evolve after careful consideration and not, as has occasionally happened, a last minute knee jerk.

THERE is no doubt that we have some tumultuous times ahead as the economy develops fast. While I welcome change, it should be managed carefully. I have enjoyed seeing all the activity in the harbour and all that went with it. For me it was a welcome contrast to the economic stagnation we lived through in the 1970s. However, I do understand those for whom the extra activity and noise became a nuisance. We can learn from other countries where people realized that their quality of life could be preserved by strict planning based on a real vision of a future where people can enjoy the space and freedom valued so highly. It is easy to criticise increased regulation but it may be worth the price we have to pay.

Phone Sure doesn't work in France

WELL the old enemy may have changed its name but it hasn't changed its quality of service! If you happen to be travelling in France, do not expect your very expensive C&W oops SURE mobile phone to work because it SURE as hell doesn't.

It is unbelievable that they do not have a roaming agreement with one of the major European countries.

Ah well, soon be down to earth with a bump, from having an unlimited internet and phone connection for 27 Euros per month to whatever slightly increased miserable allowance SURE now provides in The Falklands at about four times the cost.

and we work continuously to increase this on a monthly basis.

Mr Luxton is correct that we don't currently have an agreement with any French mobile operators at this stage.

The setting up and testing of roaming is a complex and time consuming activity and many of the larger mobile operators expect a certain level of activity before they will agree to undertaking the work needed to establish these connections.

To date none of the French mobile companies have agreed to roaming with our network given the low levels of traffic expected and Mr Luxton is the first local Sure customer who has enquired about roaming service in France.

We will continue to expand our roaming operations and we would like to be able to offer roaming services in all countries, but this is dependent on other operators agreeing to connect our network which is beyond our control.

A full list of roaming partners is available on our website www.sure.co.fk and this is regularly updated with new countries and operators.

Sure has also made significant changes and price reductions to the internet services and will continue to add value and improve services under the agreement we have with the Falkland Islands Government.

I note Mr Luxton's comparison with the service he receives in France, but there will always be a difference when comparing the Falklands with a population of 3,000 in a remote, satellite connected location and a European country of over 65 million people as the costs of delivering services in each are significantly different.

No solution

THERE still has been no solution regarding my work accident and no pay since. My medical records disappeared from the KEMH after my claim and on August 14, 2013, the lawyer told me it was too late to take the situation to court for justice. This is the second time something has been 'robbed' since the beginning of my case. This has happened to an old age pensioner.

Your questions answered

Q Has the land to the west of the Murray Heights mobile home park which is currently being excavated for the new park always belonged to Government or was it acquired for the project? If it was acquired, was it purchased (at what cost) or was land exchanged?

Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher provided the following response:

A The land to the west of the existing Murray Heights mobile home park which is being excavated as part of the works to form an access road to the new site is FIG land and was not acquired for the project.

For completeness; the land on which the new mobile home park itself is being developed is also FIG land and was also not acquired for the project, although part of that site was in private ownership some years ago but had been the subject of a land swap so as to consolidate two separate areas into one.

CPA recognise referendum as 'free and fair'

THE Commonwealth Parliamentary Association during its conference in Johannesburg noted a motion recognising the Falkland Islands Referendum as a free and fair expression of the Falkland Islanders wishes and their right to self-determination, confirmed Gilbert House last week.

The motion, proposed by Member of Legislative Assembly Dr Barry Elsby, read: "This Association recognises the internationally observed Referendum held in the Falkland Islands over the period 10 and 11 March 2013, which sought the electorate's views on their Political status, as a free and fair expression of Falkland Islanders wishes and their right to self-determination".

MLA Elsby and MLA Roger Edwards represented the Falkland Islands at the 59th Commonwealth Parliament Conference in Johannesburg, South Africa and also represented the Islands at the preceding 33rd Small Branches Conference last week.

At the Small Branches meeting on Saturday August 31 MLA Roger Edwards made a speech and then acted as one of the discussion leaders on the subject of 'Self Determination, Self Sufficiency and Self Governance'.

Over 600 delegates representing all Commonwealth member states attended the first day of the Conference.

In a keynote speech the Secretary General of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Dr William Shija, called for large countries to stop bullying smaller ones.

His Excellency Kamallesh Sharma, Secretary General of the Commonwealth, called for countries to respect the Charter of the CPA and allow people to develop peacefully.

In the debate that followed, MLA Elsby was invited to speak. He said: "The Falkland Islands are being constantly bullied by Argentina, they are attempting to blockade the Islands, destroy fish stocks and obstruct the development of the Islands oil industry."

He also said that he was aware that many Commonwealth States supported the Falkland Islands position, but asked if it was unreasonable to ask that all Commonwealth States supported the Falkland Islanders.

Tom and Dylan, new crew member David and Arombai

Two becomes three on Arombai with next stop Sal Cape Verdes

TWO intrepid young Falklands' sailors embarked on the longest leg of their journey home from UK on Tuesday.

Dylan Stephenson and Tom Elsby on Dylan's yacht Arombai left Gran Canaria in the morning and are currently heading to Cape Verdes. This part of the trip should take between seven or eight days and covers a distance of around 800 miles.

Penguin News last reported on their travels on August 16 on their way to Porto Santo and Madeira, during which time they were concerned the rudder may have been loose. Happily the fault turned out to be only the tiller and all was fine.

Next on the route was Las Palmas, Gran Canaria and Dylan's Dad Zach reported: "Just had a call from Dylan, they had plotter problems just as they were about to transit through two small islands Selvegem Grande and Selvegem Peguenta I have been helping him plot his way through and they have a clear run at 141 degrees."

"Typical when things fail at a time when you don't want them to, they are sailing along at about 5kts, they should arrive Las Palmas, Gran Canaria tomorrow night 28th around 03:00 UTC give or take a bit."

In Las Palmas they were joined by Swiss yachtsman David Vidrequin, "a friend of a friend," reported Zachary. David is to sail all the way to the Falklands and hopes to pick up some work here.

On September 7, they moved to Mas Palomas to the south of Gran Canaria to await good weather before setting off for Sal in Cape Verdes. Tom may or may not leave the yacht in Cape Verdes and fly to UK, "he hasn't quite made up his mind," Zachary told Penguin News, but if he does he would be likely to rejoin the crew elsewhere on the journey.

The island of Sal belongs to the northern group of Cape Verdes islands, called Barlavento, and comprises a single administrative division, the Sal municipality.

Although the Arombai crew are visiting during the rainy season they are likely to maintain the tans they've acquired so far. The Islands have 350 days of sunshine and rainfall is low.

Diverse life forms

EVIDENCE of diverse life forms dating back nearly a hundred thousand years have been found in sub-glacial lake sediments by a group of British scientists.

The possibility that extreme life forms might exist in the cold and dark lakes hidden kilometres beneath the Antarctic ice sheet has fascinated scientists for decades. Lead author David Pearce, who was with British Antarctic Survey and is now at the University of Northumbria, said: "What was surprising was the high biomass and diversity we found. This is the first time microbes have been identified living in the sediments of a sub-glacial Antarctic lake and indicates that life can exist and potentially thrive in environments we would consider too extreme." The group targeted Lake Hodgson on the Antarctic Peninsula

Premier black list

PREMIER Oil PLC has been entered in the 'black list' of companies banned by the Argentine government from operating in the country due to Premiers' "illegal and clandestine," hydrocarbons activities in Falklands waters, according to an Argentine government resolution.

Premier Oil joins four other oil companies carrying out exploration work in the Falklands which in August were also barred from operating in Argentina. Premier was originally notified on August 2, 2012 that they should cease the work or face sanctions but the company chose to ignore the threats. In July last year Premier Oil announced a one billion dollar deal to farm in and develop Rockhopper Exploration's oil and gas discoveries in the Falkland Islands.

1. What is your most prized possession?

It has to be my iPhone. Much that I am not a techno person I do enjoy keeping in touch with family and friends and being able to use my phone on the go.

2. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with?

There are a few. As a true Lancashire lad I do enjoy a cuppa or three in a day! It would have to be afternoon tea with the Queen. If unavailable, then John Simpson from the BBC news team.

3. What was your happiest moment?

Being a father is my greatest achievement and the happiest.

4. If you could set up a business in the Falklands what would it be?

I am missing my Indian food. So, it would have to be to open a restaurant serving authentic Indian cuisine.

5. What in your everyday life drives you crazy?

Being late! I am not too good at tolerating people who don't keep to time. Also, I have an issue with coloured drawing pins. There has to be a colour theme or else!

6. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be?

It would have to be the Northern Lights or New England, USA.

7. What is your favourite TV programme (and why)?

Coronation Street. I was weaned on it.

8. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it?

Romeo and Juliet by Dire Straits is a song that makes me feel happy.

9. What would people be surprised to learn about you?

My first proper job was as a sewing machinist and pattern cutter in Bolton, Lancashire.

10. What's the best book or movie you have read/watched recently?

Best book recently is one written by Kate Humble; see Coleen as I recently returned it to the library.

11. What would your 'Mastermind' specialist subject be?

Biblical Theology

Headteacher at FICS Martin is Married to Natalie and they have three children, Eva 8, Vienne 6 and Ted 5. The family arrived in the Falklands on the August 1, and say they are settling in well.

OIL licence operator Amerada Hess signs a three year contract with Norwegian based Dolphin Drilling Ltd for the rig Borgny Dolphin which will drill the first well in the Falklands in 1988. Amerada Hess and three other operators in the Falklands sign the Falklands Offshore Sharing Agreement (FOSA) which sets out the principles of co-operation in the planning and operating of all drilling and activities.

The final report on the Socio Economic Study of the Falklands by Coopers and Lybrand becomes available to the public. The report is divided into two main parts looking at the current situation and future prospects without oil and policy and prospect issues arising from oil development. The report goes on sale at the Secretariat costing £5.

Celebrated local artist Mike Peake exhibits a series of paintings. "If my paintings have a message it's nothing more than a request that people take a moment to observe just how beautiful the Falklands really are," is how he describes his paintings. Colour, space and attention to detail are all key elements in his work which makes no attempt to enhance the subject. "I don't need to improve on what we have in the Islands," he says.

Falklands law should stand alone

Former Senior Magistrate and more recently heading up law firm Pinsent Masons' Stanley office, Keith Watson takes a look at his time in the Islands

LOOKING back on his 16 years in the Falklands as both the Senior Magistrate and more recently on the other side of the bench as a defence lawyer, Keith Watson conceded that the legal system had developed and become more sophisticated, but there was still a lot of work to be done before Falklands law could stand alone.

"I'm a great advocate of the fact there should only be reference to Falklands law," said Mr Watson, adding that this would hopefully be the outcome of the current law revision project. "I don't want to see the word 'act' it should be ordinance. It should be stand alone Falklands law. It might be based on English, Australian or even Scottish law if it is better, but we shouldn't now be pulling in English stuff," he said.

Mr Watson arrived in the Islands to take up the position of Senior Magistrate in 1997, prompted to make the move after sitting as deputy district judge in the UK for some six years with no guarantee of it being made a full time position.

The first round of oil exploration kicked off soon after and with the arrival of the Borgny Dolphin oil rig Stanley became quite a hive of activity. It was interesting to see it all come together, he said adding that although there was a lot of extra people around they must have been a well behaved lot as it did not seem to cause an increase in the work load at the Court.

Probably just as well, as getting to grips with Falklands law required both hands on the steering wheel. "It was a mess," said Mr Watson. "It was an uphill battle when I was Senior Magistrate as well as in the subsequent years I have been solicitor. Some is pure Falklands, some is pure English, some is a little bit of both and trying to work out what the law is even now can be an absolute minefield." He added that there had however been some big strides in the last year to try and put things right.

Meanwhile a few of Stanley's residents were struggling with the idea of the Geordie judge who on a Friday evening donned his battered leather jacket and headed to the Vic to have a chin wag around the fire with his mates. The regulars and on occasion those who had had the misfortune of being sentenced by him happily joined in the football banter and putting the world in general to rights.

"I went to the pub which disgusted some people I am sure, but tough luck, it didn't make me a better or worse Senior Magistrate or solicitor, it's what I choose to do. I didn't go to mix in on an artificial type basis, it was what I did before I come here and I saw no reason to change," said Mr Watson.

One lady chose to take his wife Val to task in the Post Office one day. "I've heard that your husband goes to the pub and that's up to him, but I'm shocked that a lady of your status should go too," she was soundly berated. "Val was gobsmacked," said Mr Watson.

He concluded his stint on the bench in 2001 and returned in 2006 as a solicitor for Ledingham Chalmers. He described himself as "generalist" when it comes to law. "I can do crime, matrimonial, personal injury, domestic and commercial conveyance but a specialist on any one of those subjects could take me out on an intricate point. But there again, there's not much use being a top conveyancer and having people twirling in for matrimonials."

Clare Faulds, who Mr Watson described as a very capable judge as well as being a nice person, was Senior Magistrate at the time and there was no discomfort between him coming back as an advocate and addressing someone who was doing the job he had done a few years earlier.

Inevitably he found himself on occasion representing a defendant he had previously sentenced. "It's a good place here, people don't hold grudges and what is work is work. I did my job as a judge to the best of my ability and I've hopefully been a solicitor to the best of my ability," said Mr Watson.

Crime in the Islands had been steady throughout his time, although it was recognised that when a big trial takes place it knocked things out of kilter because specialists are brought to the Islands, but it was generally "run of the mill."

Mr Watson said he was a big supporter of the long serving officers in the local force even bearing in mind he is a defence solicitor and as such, against them. But whether there was a need for hi-tech policing equipment such as body cameras he was less sure. "You prevent the crime here, you don't go out and react to something that has happened, you defuse it before it gets there. It's a small enough community where we know most people and can do just that. Its community policing, more Dixon of Dockgreen than the Sweeney."

A regular face at public meetings he took a keen interest in local politics and is not shy about making his views known publicly.

"I don't have a vote, because it involved jumping through too many hoops to even obtain PRP let alone status, but I pay my taxes so I can have my say."

"You've got to try and make the place friendly to foreigners coming in. My family and I liked it here so I wanted to come back. Returning on a work permit was no problem, but trying to get on the next rung of the ladder is quite difficult, so I thought, sod it."

Given Keith's attention to local politics, I wondered if the immigration system had been easier could his interest have expanded into a political career given the pending election?

There was no hesitation in his response. "No. To be a politician and to get the votes you have to go for the middle ground. If you are an extremist you might think you have got very good ideas, but you're only going to pull 10 per cent of the vote at either end of the extremities or compromise your principals and go for the big chunk in the middle. I couldn't do that. I've got my views and I'll stick with them thank you very much."

That said, if he was able to change something in the Islands what would he chose, I asked.

Not surprisingly the infamous Stanley to Mount Pleasant road sprung to mind, which Mr Watson said would not be change so much as progress.

"I've heard all the arguments, the costs etc, but they were talking about it when I first come down here 16 years ago. They could have had it built three times over and the capital debt would have been paid off, but instead we are still fannying around. It's a really bad advert to tourists and business people coming into MPA to see the major artery between the airport and the capital is a track. I've seen better forestry tracks in Northumberland."

There was a need for a maintenance programme for all Government assets to be kept up to scratch, he said. "There's plenty of capital works going on but little maintenance work being done.

The Leisure Centre is a disgrace. If money is going to be thrown at capital projects then maintain them, but it doesn't happen."

With the possible extraction of hydrocarbons looming further development was inevitable and I asked Mr Watson what his main concerns for this period might be.

It was his belief he said that there was currently too much talking and not enough action.

"It's all very well having consultation, but consultation after consultation stops you having to make difficult decisions. It's about time some difficult decisions were taken and hopefully taken correctly with those with a vested interest being part of the decision making process," he said.

While a decision on where the port was going had now been made, it would be very interesting to see how it was now going to be implemented. The idea of a temporary port with a three year time frame prior to development in Port William seemed "singularly strange" to him he said. "They really have to crack on and I think the time has slipped quite frankly."

Mr Watson left the Islands on Friday, but plans to return if not to work in some area other than the law then certainly for a holiday.

The Falklands had been very good to his family both financially, for which he was grateful and socially, he said. "We have some very good friends down here and I probably have closer friends here than in Tynemouth where I've lived all my life."

I was promptly told to "sod off" when I cheekily asked if his famous leather jacket was going with him or was it to become an exhibit in the museum.

This is son of leather jacket, "me posh one" he declared. The original resides as a memento in the Victory Bar with Ali Jacobsen.

Open letter to Standard Chartered Bank

Banking at the Stanley branch of Standard Chartered Bank I wanted to write to express my frustration with the banking facilities at your branch to yourself and through the Penguin News to your other customers.

As customers who are currently in the process of building a home we have found the options open to us to be extremely limited.

Please correct me if I'm wrong but after many emails and a meeting in July my understanding is that we have only two options, as detailed below:

1. The Joint scheme with FIG – fixed at 7%, max £95K plus top up loan for balance
2. Pay a 25% deposit to get a flexible rate mortgage 4% above base

As a customer I feel that Standard Chartered could offer more options and probably would if there was a competing bank in the Islands.

We have been offered absolutely no flexibility and I left the branch feeling that, really our two options were take it or leave it!

Things I think that the bank could be more helpful with:

1. Repayments relevant to capital draw down during build. Helping customers with the difficult financial time during draw down and moving in, when having to make both rent and mortgage repayments.
2. Review options. So you can reduce your monthly outgoings if you happen to receive a lump sum or your finances change. A charge to review would be better than no choice.
3. Staggered flexible rate mortgage, i.e. offer 5% above base rate if you can pay 15% deposit
4. Incentive savings options. With the base rate being so low and the joint mortgage scheme rate being so high why can't the bank give something back?

These are all things that seem to be standard practice in most UK high street banks.

On more general banking facilities:

1. Online banking – SCB offer internet banking in 31 different countries – why not Stanley?
2. Charging customers to use cheques without giving an alternate form of payment. This might be classed as a business charge but how often are customers in shops asked to add 10 pence when opening their cheque books (cheques are after all due to be phased out in the UK by October 2018).
3. ATM – No access to cash outside of banking hours. Should the banking hours be more flexible if ATM facilities are not possible?

4. Why is it possible to get cash from a Santander credit/debit card in the local supermarket but not in the bank?

There are other details that frustrate me but I won't go on.

If I'm alone with these frustrations then I will put up and shut up. However if publishing this letter in the local paper finds other equally unsatisfied customers I would encourage them to make their feelings known.

SCB responds

Chief Executive Officer Binoy Karia provided the following response and gave permission to Penguin News to publish in full.

Dear Mrs Jamieson

Thank you for your letter dated 3 September 2013 and I am sorry to hear of your frustrations.

I would like to respond in turn to the points raised in your email as follows:

1. Your letter correctly sets out details of the mortgage products that we offer customers. Whilst these options may appear limited, Standard Chartered does offer two mortgage products that assist with the finance needs of the majority of the community. Through the Joint General Mortgage Scheme, we, together with FIG, have endeavoured to provide a mortgage finance solution to make home ownership possible for first-time buyers and those with smaller deposits and we are proud to be one of the few markets in the world that offer the opportunity to own a home with a 5% deposit.

Unfortunately we are not able to tailor the terms of our mortgages for each individual customer, but Standard Chartered is always looking at ways to improve our products and services and your feedback on our mortgages is very welcome. We are currently in the process of reviewing our mortgage products, together with FIG, with a view to improving the options available to our customers.

We are always available to speak to customers about their options —

I was very happy to discuss the mortgage options when we met last month and would be delighted to do so again. We encourage customers to discuss their options if their circumstances or finances change. In relation to lump sums, I would refer you to the Guidance Notes for the Joint General Mortgage Scheme, which does state that prepayments may be made at any time without charge.

2. As you know, the Falkland Islands faces unique challenges given the remoteness of the Islands and the size of the community. Unfortunately, this also impacts the range of banking services that we are able to offer.

We have looked very hard at ATM's over the years. One of the major challenges relates to the servicing and repair of an ATM as well as availability of parts and spares. We do however continue to explore the options. In addition, I should mention that we are currently reviewing our branch opening hours.

We remain committed to improving our products and services and earlier this year, we introduced eStatements which has been very well received. This is the first in what we hope is a series of technology solutions to improve banking services in the community.

3. I am afraid that I am not able to comment on whether and how local businesses pass on business banking charges as this is a decision that businesses will take individually. We have worked with businesses to provide alternatives and as a result, many of the larger businesses provide Funds Transfer Slips in place of remittance advices to avoid the charges associated with cheques. Several businesses also accept payment by card and do not charge for these transactions.

4. Within the branch, we do offer cash withdrawal facilities using overseas cards. I apologise if you were not aware of this previously.

Murray Heights madness

I AM entitling this letter Murray Heights Madness simply because I believe that's what it is. I am of course referring to the excavation of the peat bogs on the western side of the Murray Heights mobile home park. I understand that this is to provide road access to an additional accommodation development to the south and west of the existing mobile home park. What I do not understand though is why are we the taxpayer paying a great deal of money to have all this material removed, and during its haulage to the dumping site north of Stanley Airport an amount of the peat is falling off the back of the PWD trucks making the airport road very messy and indeed dangerous for motorcyclists etc. Surely it would be far cheaper to extend the existing road on the southern side of the existing accommodation.

I have already raised this subject with MLAs and together with this letter I, together with several members of the general public are anxious to learn why we are apparently and blatantly wasting money in this manner.

TV short changed pensioners

HOW surprised I was this week to hear about a pensioned couple who after 12 years or more of watching a well-known provider of TV in the community, decide that they were not watching it enough to warrant the cost any longer. So, they asked for the system to be removed at the end of the month.

On Friday of last week during the afternoon (one day before the end of the month) the man turned up with his ladder and removed the box and then proceeded to cut off their aerial leaving just enough coax through the wall, but not enough to reach a new aerial even if they could get up there to fix it themselves!

Had they realised that this meant they would have no TV at all they would have willingly paid for it to be left there bearing in mind it was at least 12 years old.

But, they were not given the opportunity just told it is ours goodbye. Is this any way for our pensioners to be treated? No, I don't think so.

Stanley darts says thanks

I WOULD like to take this opportunity to thank everybody who took part in, sponsored or helped out in some way to make this darts season a success. This has been my first season as chairman and I have been fortunate enough to be surrounded by a fantastic committee. Too many people have been involved to thank individually in this letter. This season has been a lot of work for me, however it has also been very rewarding. Thank you once again and I look forward to playing you all again next season.

Oil Industry Readiness Seminar

ADDRESSING THE CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

Interested in how the forthcoming oil activity could enhance your business?

Keen to understand the opportunities arising from this burgeoning industry?

Want to link with UK based offshore support businesses with established track records?

You are invited to an information seminar to be held at the Chamber of Commerce on Thursday 31st October 2013

An event sponsored by

Falkland Islands Chamber of Commerce

in association with

FalkLink

Invenio Falkland Islands Ltd has teamed up with business consultants based in the North East of Scotland to develop the Falklink Project. Their purpose is to raise awareness of the opportunities that lie ahead with the growth of forthcoming oil and gas production.

This is one of two seminars. The first will comprise a series of informal informational events aimed at assessing readiness in key areas of service and management. You are also encouraged to register your interest in a one-to-one session with the FalkLink consultants, who will assist you in assessing the scale of opportunity that may be open to your business.

The second seminar will be based in Aberdeen and will specifically target oil related businesses based in Scotland who are interested in supporting the Falkland's Oil opportunity. This may lead to the creation of partnerships.

This project is an important stage in FIG's oil readiness work, in association with the Chamber of Commerce and FalkLink. As funding has been provided by FIG, there will be no charge to participants for the first seminar and one to one consultation sessions.

A sealing voyage to the Falklands

DANIEL Wightman Lamb (1809-1903) wrote the following account of a sealing voyage to the Falkland Islands.

Lee Hartman of Carbondale Illinois, great great grandson of Daniel, writes that a note at the end of the manuscript indicates it was written in 1896 and "Copied by Mrs Julia [Maxfield] Lamb", which may mean Daniel dictated it to his wife. Lee has preserved the original spelling and punctuation and Daniel's page numbers are shown in square brackets.

History of A Sealing Voyage

On board the Schooner

Breakwater of Stonington

Connecticut in the year AD

1830 and 31: by Daniel W Lamb

On the 5th day of February AD 1830, In the town of Groton (now Ledyard) in New London County Connecticut, I became 21 years of age and having fulfilled my legal obligations of service to my parents I began to look for employment away from home. Accordingly in June of that year I went to Stonington Point about ten miles from home and engaged to work for Capt Charles Smith for $12 per month and board work on the Breakwater which he was building for the improvement of the harbour at Stonington Point. While there at work I noticed some vessels in the harbour which I learned were being fitted out for a sealing voige along the coast of Patagonia there to spend two sealing seasons and then return which would occupy about 18 months. Accordingly, having a curiosity to see some of the world and possibly to get a little money I concluded to venture a voyage. So having obtained a release from Capt Smith and pay for work I had done for him up to the latter part of July I shipped on board the schooner Breakwater a fore and aft schooner of about 90 tons, manned by the following named crew: Capt Daniel Carew of Stonington, First Mate Oliver York of Stonington Second Mate, Mr Coffin, of Stonington Third Mate Robert Sutton of Stonington, Steward, Matthew Flores a portuguese of the Western Islands. These were a family by themselves on board the vessel and lived in the cabin. The following were the crew they lived in the forecstle. Cook Solomon Heding a negro, hands before the mast Robbert Allison of New York, Alexander Pollins New York, Thomas Canada New York, Duryea Carpenter New York, Edmund T Irvin New York, Daniel O' Brian New York, Moses Brushell of Groton a Pequot Indian, James Freman of Groton a negro, Frank Joseph a Portuguese of Western Islands,[2] Horrace Robberts Rhode Island, Edward Gardner of Rhode Island a negro. These names together with my own show a crew of thirteen men before the mast and four in the cabin in all seventeen. The owners of the vessel put on board provisions for the voige and the earnings were to be counted at 200 shares the owners of the vessel to have 100 shares and the other 100 to be divided among the crew as agreed upon at the time of shipping. I shipped for two and a half shares but some shipped for one and a half shares. After making due preparations we took in water and on Thursday Aug 12: AD 1830, we weighed anchor and set sail and shaped our course for Bonavista one of the Cape Verd Isalands to get salt to salt seal skins. Three other vessels in the same buisness and owned by the same company sailed with us at the same time. They were the Brig William Capt Wilbur the Schooner Harriet Capt Davidson and the Schooner Free Gift Capt Hall. We Sailed Eastward between Montauk Point, and Block Island, near sundown and the last land in sight to us was Lantern Hill, in the North East part of Groton (now Ledyard) and I saw no more land for forty days but every morning the sun in the East appeared to rise out of the ocean and every evening the sun appeared to go down in the ocean in the west. How it could do this without extinguishing its fire I leave to the reader to judge.

A personal history written in 1896

I was sea sick about three weeks and did not enjoy sailors fare very well but I gradually recovered and could relish my fare very well. During the voige to Bonavista the officers of the William and the Harriet and the Freegift and the Breakwater had jovial times visiting each other and the men had easy times. During the first day out Capt Carew invited all hands aft to splice the mainbrace which means an invitation to all hands to come aft and take a drink of rum [3] of cours I went aft with the rest but choose to be excused from taking a drink. The supply of New England rum which belonged to the officers exclusively was soon exhausted but while it lasted our chief mate Mr. York indulged very freely and at one time had a spell of Delerium Tremans but when he got sober he was a first rate officer.

We arrived at Bonavista Sept 22 forty-one days from Stonington, where we staid a few days took in salt to salt seal skins and got some refreshments from on shore and those who liked it got a drink of Agua Dent, the Portuguese name for whiskey some dranked a little to much. The people here are Portuguese and more blacks than whites. I saw one black man I think seven feet tall. There were some English vessels in the harbour preparing to go to the coast of Africa to get slaves and they offered $45 per month for men to go with them but they got none of our men.

I sold them some tobacco which I had taken as a venture to make some money on, they gave me one dollar per pound for four or five pounds. The land seems to be poor and sandy. I saw some donkeys and some goats but I think these Islands are not very productive. While at Bonavista I wrote a letter home to my parents the only one I wrote home while on this voige. The followin is a copy of it

Bonavista Sept 26 AD 1830, Arrived 22.

Dear Parents

I now embrace an opportunity of writing to you of after A lang passage across the Atlantic. We Sailed from stoneington on Thursday at 4 Oclock P.M. Aug 12th and shaped our course for Cape De Verd Isalands to get a supply of salt. For the first ten days we had fair wind and got along well but from that [4] time till the time we made the harbour we had fair wind but a little while at a time but contrary wind and squally weather A great part of the time we were 40 days with without seeing land and on the forty first day we anchored on in the Bay of Bonavista.

The officers have treated us very kindly but the hands I am sorry to say are some of them quarrelsome and it is hard to get allong with them. I have enjoyed very good health since I left you although it was hard for me at first to fare as a seaman. But I feel that the hardest fare is from the hands on board who scorn morality in principle and practice and who count nothing valuable but seamanship and immorality and who have no patience to let a person learn. I think now as I have often read that it is wrong to trust in the friendship of man I find them to be as unstable as the wind there is no one on board that is stable enough to continue long in good humor with any one and but one that I dare trust at all. This seems hard as we are bound on a voige of such length together. But I will put my trust in him who made me and who is able to protect me in the wisest maner hoping that it will please him to bring me safe and sound once more to my native land. I desire your prayers dear parents that I may be guided by a merciful God in the way I should go and that he may be with me through all the affairs of life. We expect to sail tomorrow morning for the Falkland Isalands where we expect to stay three or four months and then we are to proceed to the western coast of Patagonia through the straits of Magellan are there we are to spend the winter season then return to the Isalands again and stay until the season for Sealing is over and then return home which I have reason to hope will not be more than eighteen months from the time we sailed from home.

Hannah Lamb I remain your affectionate son

Daniel W Lamb

P.S I wish you to write me the first opportunity you have please excuse my writing as I write in haste and with poor accomodations.

[5] The above is a copy of the letter which I sent home from Bonavista but the plan of the voyge as therin stated was not followed as I will show. Accordingly on the 27th of September after completing our buisnefs at Bonavista and taking on a couple of goats to make us some fresh meat we weighed anchor and in company with the brig William and the schooners Harriet and Free Gift, we put to sea and shaped our course for Patagonia.

Continued next week. Our thanks to the Falkland Islands Museum and National Trust for providing the manuscript.

Tooty and Julie defeat the competition at Victory Bar/Bonner's Haulage darts JOINTLY sponsored by Ally and Cathy Jacobsen of the Victory Bar, and Paul and Bunny Bonner of Bonner's Haulage, the Victory Bar Bonner's Haulage darts tournament was held in the Town Hall on Saturday.

Prior to 2002 two separate tournaments were held, thereafter the sponsors joined forces but the tournament was played to Victory Bar rules (a seeded competition) in the 'odd' years and Bonner's Haulage rules in 'even' years.

The tournament did not take place in 2012 so its return with universal rules was welcomed this year.

56 men entered the competition so a maximum of four wins was required for a place in the semi-finals. Those who succeeded were Toot Ford (who defeated Boy Miranda, John Smith, Kevin Clapp and Darren Plato), Alan Bonner (Robin Smith, Andrew Murphy and Andy Pollard), Roy Shepherd (Liam Short, Chris Lloyd, Colin Smith and James Lang) and Jonny Ford (Ally Jacobsen, Steve John, Phil Kearney and Michael Goss).

The first semi-final saw Toot Ford beat Ali Bonner, while Jonny Ford defeated Roy Shepherd. Toot won the best of 9 leg final 5-1 to take first place for the seventh time since the joint trophy was first presented in 2004.

There were 33 entries in the ladies competition. Given the lack of predictability in the playing of many of the female dart players there did not appear to be many 'easy' games.

I doubt I was the only one to lose due to inconsistent scoring and double-trouble.

Making their way to the semi-finals this year were Jackie Thomas, Julie Clarke, Lizzy Bonner and Cathy Jacobsen Snr. Julie beat Cathy 3-0 in the final.

Many thanks to the sponsors and to the Darts Committee, and helpers for their organisation of a successful tournament.

OTTO'S Outlaws steamed to victory in the Team Knockout against the Misfits on Monday night, making it a team double as the League Champions.

Otto's won the match 9-6.

On checking available records darts historian Natalie Smith reported that this was in fact the first time since 1970 a team had managed the double and it was on that occasion also a Victory Bar team in the form of the Victory A who achieved it.

The Team Knockout having been played annually for 60 years began in 1953 while the League Championship/Kendall Cup has been competed for since 1951.

The teams

Temporary port would meet all Noble's exploration needs

NOBLE Energy Falkland Islands Ltd continue to negotiate with the Falkland Islands Government on the construction of a temporary port to the east of FIPASS prior to progressing the application for planning permission. The company's representative in the Falkland Islands told Penguin News this week.

Richard Winkelman said it was too early to anticipate how many jobs the construction of the 400x100 foot dock with a floating causeway would create, however if the project received all approvals and a suitable local company was selected to carry out the work, Noble would encourage the use of local craftsmen. "There appears to be some qualified folk here who have the construction capabilities," the oil man from Houston, Texas, said.

The plan would be to tow the barge complete with all the components for installing the port on board from New Orleans to the Falkland Islands, departing December 1 and arriving on February 1, 2014.

Fit for major incident

THE Falklands emergency services are "match-fit" to deal with a major incident said Director of Emergency Services Barry Marsden following Wednesday's exercise. The theme of the exercise, planned by the military, in order to test the civil authorities involved a cruise vessel hitting FIPASS resulting in fatalities and various injuries. He said the feeling from "the military and ourselves," was the civil authorities came out of the test positively, but a number of areas for development were identified such as the passing of information between command levels when mass fatalities were involved.

Construction is anticipated to take five months with a projected completion date of July 1.

Once in place Mr Winkelman said it would meet all their shipping demands for the next exploration phase. "That's the design. A simplistic, movable temporary dock," he said.

The dock has an estimated life-span of 10 years and he recognised the Falkland Islands Government's policy regarding the removal of any temporary dock. "The agreement we are working on with FIG is for absolute use for three years from the date of first usage," he said.

If Noble FI were to progress to the extraction stage would the temporary dock meet the shipping needs of that phase? Mr Winkelman said that as it was backed right now, he did not know if it was specifically ready for the heavier lifts of a development project.

It was too early to say whether investment in a permanent port at the end of the three year period would be an option for the company, said Mr Winkelman. "Our plan is to drill some exploration wells and hopefully we'll find some hydrocarbons."

Industry commentators have suggested that Noble who operate in several politically sensitive areas around the world, could land in hot water due to their exploration bravado. Did Mr Winkelman consider this a fair assessment of the company?

"We have a sustainable, industry leading exploration programme to yield significant discovery resources – so we have a robust exploration programme. I wouldn't use the word bravado, it's not in my dictionary," he replied.

Referring to the political issues surrounding exploration in Falklands waters, Mr Winkelman said, "We're here, we made an agreement with the FIG for exploring for oil and our remit is with FIG for off shore exploration. We're planning to drill ahead."

He explained that Noble Energy incorporated had five core areas in the world: The DJ Basin in Colorado, the Marcellus Shale project in Pennsylvania, heavy involvement in the Gulf of Mexico, Eastern Mediterranean and West Africa. "We also have international frontier ventures one of which is the Falkland Islands, Nicaragua, an emerging venture in Sierra Leone and a new venture in the States in Nevada. We are busy at this time," said Mr Winkelman.

Noble has enjoyed a decade of growth and are poised for another decade of growth because of its diversified and focused asset portfolio which offers shareholders stability and superior returns, he said.

"We have a sustainable industry leading exploration programmes which lends itself to finding new discoveries and resources, one of the things we believe is very important to our message and relevant to the Falkland Islands. We have a competitive advantage in delivering large scale major projects and we have a track record of outstanding execution of those major projects."

THE Falklands' Chilean community enjoyed a warm welcome at Government House reception from HE the Governor Nigel Haywood, on the occasion of Chilean Independence Day on Wednesday evening.

Mr Haywood said it was, "great to be able to recognise the strong role the Chilean community plays in Falkland Islands life," adding that a Chilean consulate had first been established in the Falklands in 1877 and continued well into the last century so links had been, "strong and long lasting."

He also referred to the Falklands' strong commercial and also interpersonal links with Chile and Punta Arenas in particular. Left: HE the Governor and Chilean guests on Wednesday.

Penguin News

Comment by Deputy Editor Sharon Jaffray

WELL that was a strange moment! Editing the story on page 3 about Sam Cockwell earning his masters with a merit, I realised that in accordance with Penguin News house style, there was a need to refer to 'young Sam' as he has mostly been known to me, as Mr Cockwell.

Slightly bizarre when you consider I taught him to dance the quick-step standing on my feet when he was a scrawny kid; persuaded him that pondering the existence of another universe over breakfast when an impatient farmer was waiting to go gathering wasn't a smart idea; turned him into a rather handy extra in the shearing shed by the time he was 14, and in 2004 yelled encouragement as he marched into town with the FIDF team who were hot on the heels of the Royal Marine teams who were determined to stop our local lads constantly beating all the RIC teams in the march and shoot competitions.

As far as I am aware Sam is the first Islander to become a Chevening Scholar as well as to qualify as a petroleum engineer, although I stand to be corrected if my slightly territorial pride has taken over. (I should maybe explain that Sam attended Fox Bay School with my daughter, in fact at one point they were the only pupils). Either way, his achievements are proof that opportunities exist for young Islanders within the oil industry as we progress, hopefully, towards commercial extraction.

If the temporary port is approved, and why wouldn't it be, there will be further opportunities for those with the required skills to become involved and while it is a short term operation, Noble, Premier et al, actively encourage interest from people wanting to make a career in the industry; not only at the technical level but also finance, health and safety, IT, legal, marketing and a whole host of other areas.

As for Government's three year rule on a temporary port, I can't help but recall that FIPASS was also supposed to be temporary, with a projected life span of 15 years, and 30 years on we haven't got an alternative. Oh, and didn't ExCo initially rule that the West ferry terminal would be at Second Creek, not Port Howard? Nothing is set in stone.

My singular piece of advice to Noble should their port be approved would be to get their own survey done before they drive any piles, you don't want a fiasco like our public jetty on your hands.

Inshore fishery research creates lively debate at environmental meeting

A CONCEPT paper that suggests research in to possible inshore fisheries not yet exploited in the Islands caused some debate at the Environmental Committee on Wednesday.

The research would be funded by Government to see whether prospective fisheries are sustainable and economically and environmentally viable before opening them as commercial concepts, suggested Dr Paul Brickell of SA-FRI.

The paper was generally supported by the committee, but Chief Executive of Falklands Conservation Dr David Doxford said the money could be best used elsewhere and companies should invest privately in research if they wish to exploit a certain fishery opportunity.

FIFCA representative Michael Poole said the market carried risks which discouraged private investment and agreed it was beneficial for the Falkland Islands Government to identify fisheries that companies could exploit in the future. He added that research would be supported by FIFCA who would be happy to offer assistance such as vessels.

Dr Brickell said fisheries development, "was going to happen," and that a proactive approach to gathering data on potential areas of impact was vital before development. It could also identify areas of potential economic viability that could be promoted to companies for development. He said new fisheries have been identified already and have potential for being farmed in the Falklands.

Historically in the Falklands, with the exception of some research in the 1980s, most fishery has resumed with little prior research on ecosystem impact, said Dr Brickell, adding that the concept paper's suggestions were a "pragmatic approach to a sustainable fishery," and should be encouraged.

Earwig research

Also reported to the committee was that research into earwig eradication project had begun in the UK.

Environmental Officer Nick Rendell said the tachinid flies that feed on the earwig species currently invading the Falklands are in the pupae stage and they hope to begin trials in the UK before their winter. "There is still a lot of analysis to do after the research has concluded so it is looking like the next season," said Mr Rendell on when the fly could be introduced to the Falklands.

National Nature Reserves

Dr Doxford gave a presentation on behalf of Clare Cockwell that explained the importance of National Nature Reserves and the need for them to be more comprehensively regulated. Mrs Cockwell suggested there should be basic stringent rules attached to all NNRs alongside regulations for the individual needs of each one and is currently undertaking a survey to gather landowner's opinions. Though she is still collecting results the responses show support for NNRs to continue to be voluntary with the landowner's needs represented. Feedback from landowners was that more information should be provided and that FIG should, "lead by example with the land that they own."

Temporary port would meet all Noble's exploration needs

He concluded: "One of our key points is we have a fully integrated financial risk strategy that ensures our ability to support business value creation and finally we have a core divisional capacity to deliver results. That's Noble core and of course Noble Energy Falklands Ltd falls under that umbrella and we are going to exercise those same values here in the Falkland Islands."

Sharon Jaffray

Background information

Noble Energy Falkland Islands farmed in with Falkland Oil and Gas (FOGL) on their northern area licence for a 35 per cent interest in August 2012, with the same deal taking place on the Southern licences in 2013. Operatorship of the northern licence was transferred to Noble earlier this year.

They will become the operator for the Southern licences early next year.

Putting the fun in fundraising

THE Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund is £717.59 richer since the weekend thanks to a cake sale and a party in the FIDF Hall.

Vicky Collier told Penguin News she was overwhelmed by the generosity of people, donating cakes and cookies to the sale held in the Chandlery on Saturday. Miss Collier said: "Many thanks to the Chandlery for letting us invade and also to everyone who contributed cakes." They raised an amazing £300.59.

Tanya and Jimmy Curtis were also able to add to the total with £417 following a 'party after the pubs' on Saturday night.

Mrs Curtis said: "We had DJ Andreas playing a range of disco and country. We hope to do another one next month. We were pleased with the amount we managed to raise considering there were other events on that same night. Everyone who came danced the night away and happily paid their £4 entrance fee when they knew it was going to such a good cause."

A 'show your status' traffic light party held at the Globe Tavern also on Saturday night has boosted ongoing fund raising aimed at sending a shearing team to the World Championships in Ireland next year. Those attending displayed colours indicating who was single and who was not.

One of the organisers Vikki Lee said: "There was a fantastic atmosphere. We didn't start charging on the door until 9pm and had an extension until 12.30 and around 220 people were in and out throughout the night. A lot of people made an effort with the colour codes, lots of red 'taken' people, green single people and yellow 'anything goes'."

"Huge well done to the organisers, the Falkland Islands Shearing Association, and a massive thank you to the Globe for letting us have the party there, and to all who helped out on the night and everyone who made the effort to come down and support the Falklands' shearers and wool handlers. We have a few ideas for more fund raising, and of course are hoping to have a speed shear and shearing competition at Christmas time."

The evening raised £656.37 which is enough to pay for half a flight for one team member.

Richard Biggs

IT is with sadness we report the death of Falkland Islander Richard Biggs in New Zealand on September 12. Richard, his wife Marian and their children spent time back in the Falklands after Richard took early retirement.

Penguin News intend to publish an obituary next week courtesy of his son Patrick.

Masters with merit for Sam

LAST year Sam Cockwell became the first Falkland Islander to receive the coveted Chevening Scholarship and is now the proud recipient of a Masters degree with merit in Petroleum Engineering from Imperial College in London.

The result was announced last week and Mr Cockwell was very pleased to have gained such an excellent pass when it was, "the most difficult thing I have ever tried to do," he said.

Mr Cockwell had achieved his Environmental Science Bachelors degree from the University of Manchester but decided to pursue a change to his career path while working as Projects Officer at the Department of Mineral Resources. After a year of hard work he is now a Petroleum Engineer, and is thought to be the first Islander to obtain this qualification.

Director of Mineral Resources Stephen Luxton congratulated Mr Cockwell saying his efforts, "represented aspirations for young people from the Falkland Islands to position themselves to take advantage of the best opportunities available."

Mr Cockwell said for him, the most useful part of the course was the course work, which involved multi-disciplinary teams building a field development plan from the first principles. "It really showed me how much work goes into these plans and how crucial they are to get right."

The final assessment for the course was a thesis which he worked on with Premier Oil.

But there is no time to be resting on his laurels as he plunges straight into field work with Premier taking up a graduate role as a drilling engineer, spending 12 to 18 months working offshore from October.

Mr Cockwell has persevered to achieve his goal, but says there are still countless people to thank for their support. "Specifically the Chevening Scholarship for their funding, all my family, friends and colleagues for supporting me through this tough year and putting up with my moaning and absence, and Ken [Humphrey] for putting the idea in my head in the first place," he said, adding he hoped to be back home in the Falklands soon to play his part in the development of the industry.

Panamanian parliamentarians in Stanley this week

Referendum gave 'credibility' says Panama

THE referendum gave credibility to the Islanders' position in their political cause say visiting Panamanian parliamentarians.

At a press conference on Wednesday, Diputada (Panamanian MP) Dalia Bernal leading the group, said Panama also believed in democracy and the government consulted with the people before taking action.

She said the Falklands' referendum was the same thing and, "therefore it should be taken very seriously because it gives sensibility and responsibility," to the people in the matter.

Following the visit they intend to file a report to the Panamanian Foreign Secretary and President and then, "Panama will adopt a position," on the Falkland Islands political status.

She said the role of the delegation was not to adopt a position or determine it, "but simply inform of the facts and then the country will make an official position."

Mrs Bernal also commented that she had been impressed with how the Falklands was run, saying it was, "amazing," how the government planned for the future:

"The savings approach that the government has with their finances is extraordinary," she said.

She was also impressed with the investment in education, "and how the young people are sent out free of charge for university."

She felt with the development of the oil industry the resulting professions would be vital as the industry developed.

The visit has been crucial, she said, to the group being able to view the reality of the Islands. It had been recommended to them by the two Falklands' MLAs who visited Panama recently that they talk to Islanders with regard to their political status and situation.

Making up the group were Jorge Gantes of Partido Revolucionario Democrático, (Panama's biggest opposition party and clear contenders in the upcoming 2014 elections) the current legal advisor for the Foreign Affairs Commission and National Assembly, Yanibel Arago for Cambio Democrático, the current incumbent government party of President Martinelli and Renaul Dominguez also a member of the opposition party.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THE Lib Dem Conference in Glasgow has, up to Tuesday, been fairly sparsely attended, ironic in that it is also the longest starting a day earlier; but we have had some interesting visitors to the stand including the party leader Nick Clegg. We have been made very welcome and had visits from a number of new and old friends including our former minister Jeremy Browne and several other MPs who have visited the Falklands. Others included tabloid journalist Kevin Maguire, often seen reviewing newspapers on Sky News, and former VSO travelling teacher Graham Cooper (1969/70).

Ian and I did an interview for Radio Dart on life in the Falklands. It is common to be interviewed by local radio at the conferences but rare by one almost from the other end of the UK. We've not seen much of our outside surroundings as there is a walkway from our hotel through to the conference centre and most fringe events are also in the same area. We will be blinking in the sunlight when we leave for the railway station on Wednesday afternoon.

Opposite our stand is that of the Gibraltar Government. We are often neighbours at the conferences and can compare notes at quiet times. Their reception on Sunday night was well attended with excellent speeches by Simon Hughes, by their MEP Graham Watson and their Chief Minister Fabian Picardo. Some will also remember Steven Linares, now a minister in the Gibraltar government, who visited the Islands some years ago and we have also renewed acquaintance with the Deputy Chief Minister and the Minister for Tourism whom we met at last year's conferences. We have also had pleasant reunions with some of our Channel Island colleagues and I was interested to learn that Jersey will soon be setting up their own London office, as have several of the other territories, following our example and drawing on our experience and advice from our representative. They are also interested in learning from our fisheries regime. Most Overseas Territories and the Crown Colonies can learn much from one another's experiences, not least in how best to manage the relationship with the UK.

We finish on Wednesday afternoon and then have a short respite to refresh feet, brains and voices before doing it all again in Brighton with Labour starting this weekend. Finally we head for Manchester the following weekend for the Conservative Conference which is likely to be the busiest.

Would I volunteer for the conferences again if re-elected? Probably!

Fleeced with a Sure WiFi card

SURE put it in black and white in PN: "Sure has made significant changes and price reductions to the internet services."

This may be the case for broadband packages, but as visitors, we are subjected to Sure's WiFi cards. Not only are they in the order of being 10x more expensive than your already expensive broadband packages, they are without doubt the worst service we have come across in our travels; outdoing even remote and poor islands like the Cape Verdes.

Sure's WiFi cards, being time-charged, are a race against the clock for every pricey second on the internet. Sure tell us time-based is better value as the cards have unlimited megabytes, but the public WiFi hotspots have limited bandwidths and compounded with multiple users any MB hungry activity simply does not work.

We certainly cannot video Skype or even upload system updates. There's no free MB lunch with Sure's WiFi cards and no midnight snack after 12am. In our three months in Stanley we've parted with over £250 for WiFi cards – money we would have much preferred to spend in local businesses rather than pour it down an internet hole that comes out somewhere in Bahrain.

And for every tourist that uses a wifi card in the Tourist Centre, how reluctant are they to spend more in cafes and gift shops after their Sure WiFi experience? And then there's the poor fisherman who comes ashore after weeks of hard work out at sea. He's desperate to contact his family and thanks to Skype he can phone home at an affordable price... but no, he gets fleeced with a Sure wifi card to access Skype.

A competitive market approach

I READ with much interest the open letter to SCB from Trish Jamieson and your editorial comment with regard to 'Monopolies' in the Falklands Vol 25 No 14. In my opinion I think all the three monopolies offer a good service to the residents of the Falklands, but behind them all there seems to be certain issues which concern not only the public but the Government too. The conclusion of the public report on the Falklands Islands Fuel Supply Licence – Part A says that the final analysis points, overall, to a continuation of the existing licence structure and that the analysis suggests there are elements of the existing fuel arrangements that require review, the lack of transparency and clarity over pricing formulas, lack of regulation and controls and the structure of the sub-contract, but that it has guaranteed supply of fuels to the Falkland Islands since 1987 and furthermore FIG's role with the licensee has ensured controls on pricing and significant re-investment of profits in the Islands.

Well, the above is all up for public consultation and a final decision on the structure of the fuel supply to the Falkland Islands in the future should be the subject of a further Executive Council decision, ideally before the end of the current Assembly.

We talk about ourselves as a modern economy and democratic Government but the above really contradicts this statement. I truly believe that 30 years ago we needed to guarantee exclusive licences to these three service suppliers, but nowadays we should opt for a different approach and go for a competitive market. The rest of us have to compete and more businesses have been created over the past few years offering a wide selection of products and services to the community without an exclusive licence. A Government-granted monopoly also creates unfair competition when you have limited resources to reinvest or initiate a new business in comparison to a company which has guaranteed profits and large sums of money to invest and expand into open market businesses.

I think the whole 'monopoly' issue should be one of the main topics for any of the up and coming Legislative candidates, but utmost I think this is for the public to question and debate the pros and cons of the current structure.

Another very important subject is the Immigration Report: an immigration system fit for the future of the Falkland Islands. Hopefully the conclusions will be made public before a final decision is taken, this way we can ensure that we do not have another 'Toddlers Pool' controversy.

Spray away danger

WITH the introduction of incapacitating spray more commonly known as 'pepper spray' to the kit of Royal Falkland Islands Police, visiting trainers from the UK Dom Pearson and Barry Hunter were in the Islands this week to train officers in its correct use.

Training involved a presentation on the guidelines and affect of its use, what aftercare guidance should be given to those sprayed and a demonstration putting the theory into practice.

Mr Pearson explained that police officers look to diffuse a situation by using the minimal amount of force necessary and will follow a series of risk assessment guidelines when they are called to deal with a situation. "Sometimes police presence may be enough to calm a situation, then they would try communication or if that failed they would try physically restraining the offender. However, if the offender is a large strong man who can't be reasoned with or is carrying a weapon then using the spray may be the next option."

Pepper spray demonstration

he said.

Mr Hunter explained that police constabularies in UK have been using the incapacitating spray for several years and it has proven to reduce risk of injury to officers and the offenders.

The spray causes a burning like sensation on the eyes that can last for up to 45 minutes.

In a demonstration of when and how the spray should be used the aggressor is given appropriate aftercare and his head aimed into the wind to help clear the spray from his eyes by encouraging them to water. The pepper spray is ideal for a range of four to six feet, though aided by Falkland wind the spray has the potential to disperse much further.

Before the introduction of the spray to RFIP kit an officer under threat from an offender would potentially have to use a baton. Baton use is more harmful to the offender than the incapacitating spray as it can break bones said Director of Emergency Services and Chief Constable of RFIP Barry Marsden.

Mr Marsden says new equipment was introduced to their kit as a direct result of an increase of public disorder last year that caused injury to officers. "I'm constantly looking at new equipment and ways to reduce risk," he said adding that it was wholly the officer's decision whether it is appropriate to use the spray in a situation.

Breach of bail lands man in jail

MOUNT Pleasant man Rick Marc Thomas (20) has been remanded in custody following a breach of bail conditions.

Mr Thomas first appeared in Court on August 28 when he pleaded guilty to two charges of assault by beating and one of obstructing a police officer in his duties. He was released on conditional bail which included not contacting the victim.

Mr Thomas appeared in the Summary Court before Justices of the Peace on Saturday September 7, for the first breach after it was reported he had been seen entering and leaving the building where the victim lives. He was released with further conditions, but was brought back before the Summary Court on Tuesday September 10, when he was remanded in custody until October 2 when his case will be heard before the Senior Magistrate.

In court on Wednesday, Rene Saldivia had his application for his driving licence to be reinstated refused.

Mr Saldivia was disqualified from driving in February this year when he was convicted of driving over the prescribed limit (41mg per 100mls of breath).

He was disqualified from driving for 12 months.

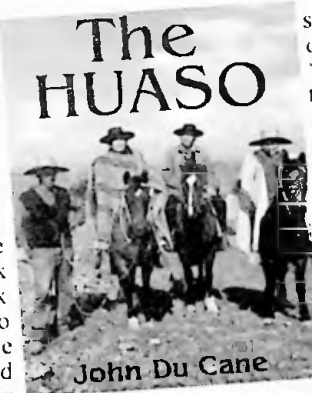

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said that he couldn't see a reason in this case to remove the disqualification.

New novel with a hint of Falklands intrigue

A NOVEL of adventure, intrigue and romance about an imagined crisis over the Falklands Islands, written by Isle of Man resident John Du Cane is available on amazon.co.uk as well as UK book shops. The scenario is based on how the UK might respond if Argentina again laid claim to the Falkland Islands.

Mr Du Cane (his pen name, real name John Du Cane Wilkinson) has drawn on his own experience to write the book. After winning a scholarship to Eton, he went on to the Royal Air Force College, Cranwell and Churchill College, Cambridge. He was a pilot in the RAF and worked for many years in aviation. He was an MP for Bradford West and Ruislip-Northwood. He was also Parliamentary Private Secretary to the defence secretary, John Nott, during the Falklands War.

It is, "intensely realistic based on the fact the UK has not got the military resources to do what we did in 1982," he said.

"They would have to think of other ways of solving the problem of an aggressive president of Argentina, such as kidnap."

In the book, an ex-Ghurka officer, Peter Robbins, has retired to the family farm in Chile and he leads a band of huasos (countrymen in Chilean Spanish) to take action against the Argentinian president.

Throughout his professional life Mr Du Cane said he was entirely focused on the job at hand, rather than looking for story lines to inspire a future novel. He has always written professional books and reports and he wrote two books on international affairs in the 1980s.

He has intimate knowledge of South America and his wife, Cecilia is Chilean. The couple has a farm in Chile and split their time between the Isle of Man and there. His first novel, The Cry of the Jets, was an historical work set in the Cold War.

Participation for Desire?

UP and coming drilling activity may enable Desire Petroleum plc to participate in a drilling campaign, "that should unlock more of the potential of our exciting prospect inventory," said Desire Chair Stephen Phipps this week.

On Monday Desire announced its interim results for the six months ended June 30, 2013.

Highlights included the data room opening in February 2013 and the ongoing farm-out process. The report noted also that: "Premier Oil and Rockhopper Exploration expect one exploration well to be drilled on licence PL004b (Desire: 40%)."

Desire also announced a loss for the period of $1.6 million and cash of $9.1 million at June 30, 2013.

Mr Phipps added: "We are now entering an exciting period in the North Falkland Basin," saying the Board was pleased to note the statements from both Premier and Rockhopper that a new exploration programme could, subject to rig availability, start as early as the final quarter of 2014.

He said: "Our current focus has been to attract investment into our North Falkland Basin licences by conducting a farmout process. A data room was opened in February of this year and a number of companies have analysed the information with a smaller number still engaged in this process."

Oil impact analysed in Gap report

A REPORT summarising the work of an analysis group formed to address the knowledge gaps in the impact of oil industry developments on the Falklands environment was presented at the Mineral Resources Committee on October 12 by Environmental Officer Nick Rendell and Director of SAERI Paul Brickie.

The report summarised the work of the Gap analysis group so far and offered proposals to achieve the aims that need to be met before oil development is approved explained Mr Rendell.

The group has identified marine and shoreline ecosystems that would be affected by development and projected the affects of the worst case scenario of an oil spill. Seabirds were identified as the most vulnerable as population levels are directly impacted through spill events.

The paper also proposed the employment of two Project Officers. One officer would be recruited to monitor affects on seabirds and pinnipeds. The other officer would be responsible for collating benthic studies and oceanography data as well as collecting data that has already been researched by the industry and compiling it into a useful tool for research.

Indicative Letter of Interest – Temporary Dock Facility

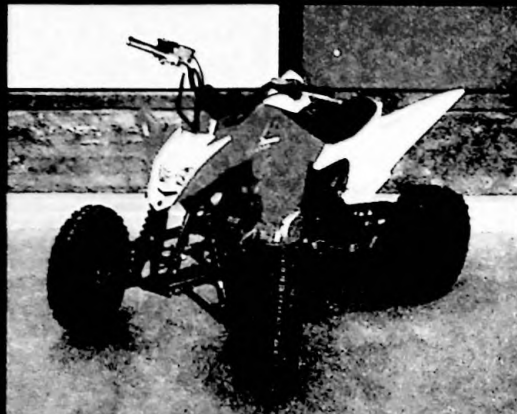

Noble Energy Falklands Limited (Noble) has submitted a Formal Proposal to the Falkland Islands Government (FIG) for the construction of a Temporary Dock Facility (TDF) and has received word of an Agreement in Principle to the application. Due to the timelines for installation of the TDF Noble has purchased a floating barge and is currently having it shipped to the Gulf Coast of the United States for equipping with necessary components of the TDF. Following that work the barge will be towed to the Falkland Islands for installation provided that all required FIG approvals are granted, including those for the "Application for Planning Permission or a Building Permit".

Noble's current plan would initiate installation of the facility in the early January 2014 timeframe in Stanley Harbor east of FIPASS. For the performance of those construction activities, Noble is interested in sending "Invitations to Bid" to those companies which demonstrate interest in performing the service and ability to perform the work, while meeting the code of practice for local content in the Falkland Islands. Companies which feel capable of meeting the requirements for this project should submit an indicative letter of interest to Noble's Country Representative, Richard Winkelman, at Argos House, H Jones Road, Stanley. The letter should be accompanied by the company's curriculum vitae illustrating the company's capabilities to perform the work. Please note that this advertisement is only soliciting interested bidders for the work and should not be construed as solicitation of bid proposals.

The scope of work activities are as follows:

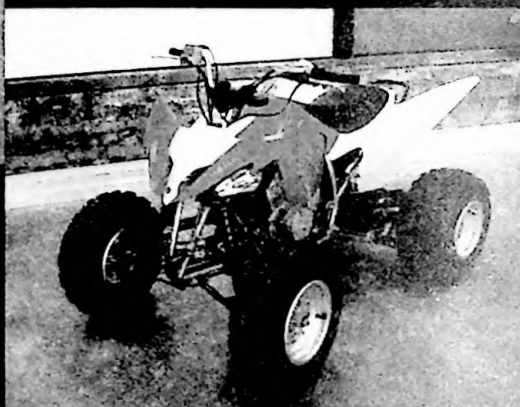

- Provide construction management and supervision
- Provide labor, including but not limited to, welders, fitters, riggers, operators and painters
- Provide a floating crane, capable of lifting two (2) dolphins (60 short tons) from a supply vessel and on to the sea bed at the FIPASS location. Stab and drive 42" diameter piles (4 per dolphin) of 40' length through the dolphins
- Furnish pile hammer and drive piles to refusal
- Furnish a pile top rock drill and drill up to 16" diameter bore holes for installation of rock anchors
- Furnish grout and perform grouting of rock anchors
- From floating platform, lift modular barges (17 short tons each) from Noble's barge (18' of freeboard) and set in water for assembly of approximately 50 modular barges
- Perform miscellaneous welding works
- Touch-up painting
- Supply all necessary compressors, generators, small tools, equipment and consumables to perform the work

All fabricated items will be furnished and delivered by Noble. The indicative letter of interest should be received by Noble's Country Representative no later than two weeks after the initial placement date of the advertisement in the Penguin News.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

AM I the only one finding this particular winter longer and more dreary than normal? I usually quite enjoy a covering of snow, it can go on for a few days or, as it has in some winters, for a few weeks and that is just fine and what can be expected at the time of year. But this winter has gone on and on and on, the odd reasonable day followed by three or four cold, wet and miserable ones.

Yesterday was beautiful and it reached 14 degrees according to our own little 'weather station', and it must have been all of that for I spent most of the day weeding and felt comfortably warm.

Today we have barely risen above three degrees and rain or even a smattering of snow threaten once again. Bill has taken to draining the outside taps (although they are lagged) every evening, as a safety precaution. I grew so bored with outdoor conditions that I actually didn't just dust, I polished as well.

The cabbage seeds, and all the other brassicas are up, as are the leeks, onions and lettuces. The tomatoes are just starting to germinate, but, this is all on the windowsills in the kitchen. I shall be putting the pots with the cabbages and other greens out into the cold greenhouse as soon as it is warm enough for them to make the short journey to get there. They need as much light as possible if they are not to get too leggy.

The windowsill will then contain not just the seed tray with the tomato, peppers and pumpkin seeds (I did not bother with cucumbers this year) but also more trays with masses of little pots full of all sorts of flowering plants and shrub seeds. It's probably a little early in the season and I will have my hands full (if they all germinate) when it is time to prick them out but I just couldn't wait any longer. Maybe I've mentioned before, patience isn't my thing?

Tomorrow I hope to get to my fridge in the peat-shed and find my pea seed which I will soak overnight. I will then put a long thin strip of plastic in the bottom of a length of guttering, fill it with garden soil and sit it inside one of the tunnels. The peas will then go in it the next day in staggered rows two inches each way and all will be watered well. They don't take long to germinate.

All the old, tired cabbages and other greens have now been lifted. All the leaves and any soft green parts will be put on the compost bin and all woody bits thrown on the trailer. This means that I can clean that bit of ground and feed it. This year it will carry potatoes.

The ventilation of greenhouses and tunnels seems a little crazy in this weather, but, as growth begins under cover it does need fresh air to circulate around it, and it does get surprisingly warm and airless in those places. I've been putting down some homemade compost on the beds in our tunnels now that they are weed free.

A little dig over and that soil will be ready for some seeds and small plants, but I am probably letting my enthusiasm run away with me.

Next time we have a little sun, (or I have a little courage) I shall go out to the vegetable garden with some sheets of plastic. These I will use to cover the area I want to use for seeds, in our case a couple of the raised beds. Doing this not only helps to warm the soil but also makes weed seeds germinate. By being able to clear them off before putting the seeds I want in there, the vegetable seeds will stand a better chance to grow weed free for a little while.

Last season's potatoes seem to be lasting quite well, and so far in good condition too. Desiree, which seemed so mushy last year is, so far not causing any problems and is waxy enough to suit our needs. I guess that type is all right as long as we don't use them too late in the year. We have plenty of the variety called Cara which keeps very well and even have two rows left in the ground which despite all my best intentions, I did not get to dig up before the winter. At least that saved some storage space I suppose but it is yet another job that will need doing as soon as decent weather gets under way.

Perhaps I should simply dig a plant or two each time I need some instead of heading for the cosier potato locker? Meanwhile, and really soon, I must once again, tidy up in the peat shed and make enough space to set out all the different varieties of seed potatoes and ensure they are still in good condition and not showing signs of rot or disease. I normally keep them in those plastic trays that fruit and sometimes cartons of milk come in. They are great for the job, nice size so they don't get too heavy and it's possible to stack them and save a bit of space. Perfect!

The flower beds, even those bits I've managed to weed are not making much headway at the moment, the small bulbs continue to give masses of flowers, and the paeonies are sending up their lovely red shoots, but most of the shrubs are still 'hibernating', and who can blame them?

There are enough small lettuces up to begin pricking some out, maybe a granddaughter will help?

Talent on show at Craft Fair 2013

OUTSTANDING entries and winners at this year's Craft Fair were praised by organisers and the public at the event's prize giving ceremony on Sunday.

The annual celebration of creativity gives the community a chance to show their talent in various artistic mediums. Many viewers commented on the woolen art in particular as it included some extraordinarily skilful pieces.

Organiser Natalie Smith commented: "Although entry numbers were down on last year the standard was as high as ever and displayed some of the amazing talent we have here in the Falklands and also South Georgia.

"On behalf of the Falkland Craft Fair I would like to thank our sponsors, the judges and those who kindly helped to display the entries and clean up afterwards. Thank you to Richard Cockwell for presenting the prizes. Also thank you to everyone who came to view the show and bought raffle tickets - we rely on the proceeds from admission fees and the raffle to cover the children's prizes and other running costs."

She reminded potential entrants for next year's show that it is never too early to start preparing your entries.

The show is usually held during September and you can find more information and a collection of photographs from Craft Fairs over the years on the group's Facebook page - Falkland Craft Fair.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Circuit sessions at FIDF

TAPOUT XT describes itself as "an extreme mixed martial arts fitness program" that promises incredible results without the need to join a gym.

The programme was designed by professional trainer and mixed martial arts coach Mike Karpenko and promises to build lean muscle, boost metabolism and generally improve the health of those who take part in the challenge by increasing fitness and weight loss.

Reviews from people joining the challenge at the FIDF hall have been positive. The sessions vary each weekday to work different muscle groups at varying intensity but taking the classes at your own pace is advisable.

The programme suggests workouts should be done five days a week with two days of rest for 90 days.

The 90 day commitment isn't essential and anyone is welcome to join in the FIDF sessions if they are medically fit enough to take part.

If you want to join in a session to try it out they are held at the FIDF Hall Monday - Friday at 5.30pm.

There is no cost to join in but please bring a towel and a drink to keep hydrated. Rubber exercise bands used in the workout are provided.

Tapout XT Circuit schedule

WEEK 6: Recovery Week

Monday 23 September - Sprawl and Brawl - 46mins

Tuesday 24 September - Ripped Conditioning & Ultimate Abs - 41mins & 16mins

Wednesday 25 September - Cross Core Combat - 46mins

Thursday 26 September - Yoga XT - 51mins

Friday 27 September - Buns and Guns XT & Ultimate Abs - 31mins & 16mins

Adam scoops the monthly Décor medal

THE September Medal sponsored by Décor Services attracted a field of 27 golfers.

In the near ideal winter conditions of very light winds and with the occasional glimpse of the sun, most players scored freely.

Adam Glanville played exactly to his handicap and scored 36 points to edge out Declan Bonner on 35 points and collect his first win of the season.

Adam also collects ten valuable points towards automatically qualifying for the Presidents XI in this seasons Falklands Cup.

Competition for places will hot up as the season progresses, so points gained early can often prove priceless.

There are eight automatic places up for grabs in each team and these are secured by picking up points in the League Competitions.

Team Captains this year are Ian Stewart for the Presidents XI and Roy Smith leads the Kelpers XI, they will later in the year face the unenviable task of choosing three wildcards apiece to make up the final elevens.

This Sunday, in advance of the start of the weekly competition schedule, the club is hosting the first of two whisky stablefords.

These competitions serve as a useful warm up for the club regulars and are also an ideal opportunity for new and joining members to complete scorecards for eventual handicap award.

All golfers are welcome, if you fancy playing golf this season then this is the perfect time to start, the green fee is £2.

Please sign in by 10:00 for a 10:15 AM tee-off.

Memberships range from £90 to £10 for Juniors and subscriptions are due from October 1.

Public jetty works to go ahead Funding now at £1.78 million

ADDITIONAL funding of £491,060 to complete a project which MLA Roger Edwards described as an "eyesore" and an "embarrassment" was approved at Wednesday's Standing Finance Committee.

Funding for the public jetty project for which Morrison (Falklands) Ltd has the construction contract has escalated over the last six months from £1.3 million in April to £1.49 million in July (including 33 per cent contingency) to £1.78 million with the latest additional funding.

Chairing the meeting MLA Edwards said the funding of £1.49 million had never been approved to his knowledge, adding that some of the figures within the paper put to the committee by the Director of Public Works Manfred Keenleyside, "were quite disturbing," particularly charges of £10,000 each for the demobilisation and remobilisation of the site.

Spend to date had been £400,000, "and all we have is a short stretch of armoured rock," he said.

Works were suspended on the project in early May when the first pile driven went deeper than expected.

At the time Mr Keenleyside said he did not anticipate a delay and if additional materials were needed it should be possible to obtain them within the allocated £1.3 million budget.

The final design by Arch Henderson is for a concrete topped stone infill to the equivalent distance of the existing jetty, with steel piles with a concrete deck forming the outer length. The refurbishment of an equivalent length of the original timber section is also to be carried out

Mr Keenleyside explained that the survey work carried out in the jetty area before work commenced consisted of driving a steel tube into the seabed at various points using a drop hammer, until refusal was reached. This was carried out on both the west and east side of the jetty at two different stages. The point at which refusal was reached reasonably matched the depth at which rock was shown on the section drawings produced for the public jetty when it was originally built, said Mr Keenleyside, "so although it was not possible to determine with certainty that rock had been reached this appeared a reasonable conclusion."

MLA Mike Summers commented that similar methods of surveying had been successfully used prior to the construction of the New Haven and Port Howard ferry terminals and could be considered good practice if equipment to obtain more detailed surveys was not available.

While consideration was given to the options available, MLA Summers stressed the importance of the project to the tourism industry and pointed out that the tee-end of the old jetty was in fact floating on the high tide. "We can't sit and do nothing at this point," he said.

Mr Keenleyside said access to a barge and drilling rig may become available in the near future and it would be possible to undertake a survey for future reference should additional work be carried out in order to take the jetty up to the required specification for small cruise ships to berth.

Chairman MLA Edwards proposed three options for the committee to consider: approve additional funding and continue the project; approve funding, but see if savings could be made in the design or not approve funding and come up with another design. He pointed out that there were five months before any further work would happen.

The committee agreed that funding be approved with work to get underway again as soon as possible.

A further £150,000 was approved for a drilling rig to conduct surveys in the public jetty and possibly dockyard area for future reference, to be dispensed with the agreement of the Financial Secretary and the Director of Public Works.

Celebrity buzz at Falklands stand

ACTOR Larry Lamb (second from left) of Eastenders (Archie Mitchell) and Gavin and Stacey fame calls in to the Falklands' stand at the Labour Party Conference and chats to Member of Legislative Assembly Ian Hansen, Falkland Islands Representative in London Sukey Cameron and Member of Legislative Assembly Jan Cheek. The stand was also visited by a number of parliamentarians including Jim Murphy MP, Shadow Secretary of State for Defence, who will visit the Islands in November.

Falkland House reports that Ms Cameron was presented with a bouquet of flowers and also chocolates at the Labour Party Conference in honour of the 25th anniversary of the Falklands' attendance at the conferences, "making us one of the long-

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

PRESUMABLY if one were planning to stage a coup, today would be the day - no deposing required.

With the Assembly dissolved and prospective candidates loitering in the wings waiting for others to discharge their campaign themes first (something I've never understood - normally in a short race a quick start is contributive to a win right?) the revolutionaries could take to the streets virtually unimpeded.

Led perhaps by the indomitable Marilyn and Stella - a sort of Thelma and Louise for the Falklands - and flanked by a unit comprising fellow public meeting stalwarts Gerald, Ginge, Phil and Tim, a relatively deserted Gilbert House might easily fall to such a determined and mutinous crew.

Sweeping aside bureaucratic processes, drawn out meetings and trips to South America, in the short time between uprising and arrest the activists might overrule penny pinchers and procrastinators, offer FIG salaries worth claiming, release the cash to seal the MPA road, force HR to hire people, turn some 'bennytech' loose on the public jetty, pay a person to tidy up the war memorials and pass an emergency law that proclaims convicted criminals must daily clean goose poop off the sea wall and repair the properties of pensioners.

That done and with our mature heroes presumably pepper sprayed into submission and harried off to clink, the new government could begin afresh: a whole bunch of contentious issues removed from their path and the first public meeting of their new term an awfully quiet affair.

Well one can dream: in fact in the event of an emergency the Governor can recall the dissolved Assembly (although whether he'd consider interrupting such a pragmatic activity who can be sure) and the next flurry of activity will be leaflets in our post office boxes promising honesty, action and assurances aimed at eliciting a neat little cross next to their names on November 7.

My sincere good luck to the spirited individuals hopeful of leading this small community with a potentially big future. Throw your hat in please: I only used three of my votes last time and I'm truly hopeful of a greater choice next month.

Host of changes will make Leisure Centre 'vibrant'

NUMEROUS changes planned for the Leisure Centre will make it, "vibrant and fit for purpose," Director of Central Services Simon Fletcher told Penguin News yesterday.

On Wednesday £190,000 was approved at Standing Finance Committee for the project. Gym-goers frustrated by old cardio equipment and poor ventilation will benefit from a new cardio room and brand new equipment.

The room will be in place of the current dry side shower and changing rooms, however the wet side rooms by the pool will be completely transformed. Separated into dry and wet areas, the walls will be fibre glass for easy cleaning, there will be a new ceiling, lighting and equipment including shoe racks, coat hangars, baby changing facilities and play pens.

The new cardio room will be larger than the old at approximately 9.5 x 9 metres. The lower ceiling will be lifted and a new ventilation system installed. Mr Fletcher said the decision regarding the dry side changing rooms was put to customers in a questionnaire and 80 per cent of the 76 replies noted it would cause little or no inconvenience.

A decision has yet to be made whether the old cardio room will become the new squash court, but the other of the adjacent rooms will become a space for group classes.

The pool itself has now been fully fibre glassed and the next step is to fibre glass the walls. The viewing area will include sofas, chairs and tables, however during galas they will be replaced with normal seating. There will be new equipment for children's play and an area of the pool will be cordoned off for toddler activities at certain times.

Leisure Centre Manager Abbie Heathman explained that a maintenance programme for the centre was being planned adding, "we intend to be more pro-active in this area rather than reactive."

Mr Fletcher was confident the pool would open early in the New Year and said the pool would also be open while other construction was ongoing.

Your questions answered

Q What are the current parking restrictions on John Street?

Chief Inspector Len McGill provided responses to this and the following questions...

A The current parking restrictions on John Street are prescribed by the Crozier Place, John Street and Reservoir Road No Waiting Regulations Order which came into force on May 3, 2000 as amended by the Crozier Place, John Street and Reservoir Road No Waiting Regulations (Amendment) Order 2000 and the Crozier Place, John Street and Reservoir Road No Waiting Regulations (Amendment) Order 2003.

There is a restriction on waiting/parking on both sides of John Street from the Falkland Islands Radio Service building to the Infant Junior School (Original footprint) during school hours. School hours are defined as the period 9am to 4pm in the afternoon on days when the Infant and Junior School is used for education of pupils of that school.

Wait is defined in respect of a motor vehicle as to mean to cause it to stop, stand or park for any reason and for any period of time, however short. There are exceptions in relation to persons who live in the dwellings on the restricted section of John Street and a vehicle may wait in certain other circumstances including, "with the permission of a police officer in uniform".

The other restrictions on John Street relate to the controlled area of the pedestrian crossings. These restrictions apply at all times.

Q Are there plans to make John Street a non parking zone (ie all hours) if so was there public consultation prior to the decision being made?

A There are no plans to make John Street a no parking zone.

Q Are spot fines for parking offences either in force now or planned to come into force?

A Parking offences are included in the offences for which a Fixed Penalty Notice may be issued by a police officer when they come into force. At present a Police Officer may report for summons any person found to be contravening the above regulations.

Slicker recruiting needed says Director of Health

DIRECTOR of Health and Social Services Hilary Rowland expressed her dissatisfaction with the current budget allocations for staffing in a paper to Standing Finance Committee on Wednesday.

The budget for locum staffing had been set at just £20,000 for the year, despite expenditure in the previous two years exceeding £300,000.

The situation was very poor and should not have been allowed to get to this point, said Mrs Rowland.

Current locum positions included two locum midwife posts which cost approximately £4,000 each per week, although a paper had gone to ExCo which should enable the situation to be remedied when the approval is given for the midwife posts to be released, it was unlikely that substantive appointments would be made before February, 2014, she explained.

There was one locum doctor in post with a poor response to the recent recruitment round, which may require a second doctor locum post and the vacant lab manager post had not been advertised as swiftly as it should have been, Mrs Rowland stated in the paper.

It would take considerable time to improve the situation which required considerable planning ahead, wages that will attract staff to come to the Islands, "and a recruitment system that is slicker and more creative than it is now," she said. As an example she cited the suggested need for the midwife posts to be job evaluated. "This could delay the advertisements until the new year and would not be satisfactory," said Mrs Rowland. "Clearly the medical budget was not appropriate for the situation."

She said it was also worth noting, for the record, that the locum line for social services had no provision and yet prior to the previous year end, there was a locum team leader in post, a locum social worker and a locum probation worker.

Mrs Rowland said the current situation was that there were two locum social workers in post and one locum probation worker.

"This situation is likely to prevail until at least Christmas and probably beyond. The weekly cost is approximately £6,500. It is estimated that at least a further £84,500 will be required to cover the situation up to December, 2013. The social worker post is being recruited to currently but the probation post has yet to be approved," she said.

"In summary the budget was far from realistic but has been exacerbated by some delays in decision making and delays in recruiting. Securing sustainable staffing arrangements will be the priority in the coming 12 months," she concluded.

Standing Finance Committee recognised the problem the recently appointed Director of Health and Social Services had inherited and noted that additional funds were not being requested at this point, therefore it would be a matter for the next Legislative Assembly.

Assembly dissolved

IN advance of the General Election to be held on November 7, the Legislative Assembly was dissolved yesterday by the Governor.

At this stage, there is no longer a Legislative Assembly and the former Members' status reverts to "ordinary persons," although this is subject to a number of statutory exceptions.

In the event of an emergency the Governor can recall the dissolved Assembly, and Membership of Executive Council does not automatically end on dissolution.

A Member of the former Legislative Assembly usually remains a member of Executive Council until the new Legislative Assembly first meets.

Individuals requiring nomination papers can obtain them from the office of the Returning Officer at the Secretariat on any weekday from Thursday September 26 until Thursday October 17 between 8.15am and 11.45am; and 1.15pm and 4.15pm.

The last day for completed nomination papers to be delivered to the Returning Officer, Keith Padgett, is Thursday October 17, 2013.

Is Concordia Baby man enough for the job?

WORKBOAT Services Manager Adam Cockwell confirmed this week that problems were being experienced with the new sea truck Concordia Baby.

"We have been having some issues with the sea truck specifications, at the moment all I can really say is that we are seeking clarification on some of the operational parameters which the manufacturers supplied," said Mr Cockwell.

He added that it was not a satisfactory situation, "but we are working to get a resolution as soon as possible."

Workboat Services took delivery of the £205,851 (before freight and associated costs) sea truck which was designed to meet the requirements of delivering cargo to places which do not have a suitable berth for the Concordia Bay, in August.

Mr Cockwell said a number of suppliers had been looked at and Alnmaritec, a UK based company which specialises in the design and build of aluminium alloy workboats for operators across a wide range of industries, had been chosen.

Alnmaritec were selected, said Mr Cockwell, because of the excellent reputation the company had, "their experience, and the confidence we had that they would be able to provide us a design solution to meet our needs."

"We had to ensure that we achieved the highest possible payload whilst keeping the overall weight and size to a minimum," he said in June while awaiting the arrival of the vessel.

MLA Sharon Halford said the last Assembly had started with a sea truck not fit for purpose, and added, "I'm hopeful that after the procurement of a new sea truck we're not going to end in the same manner."

FIG continuous service award extended

A CONTINUOUS service award which was given to FIG employees who had been in the civil service for 10, 20 or 30 years has been extended to include those who had earlier missed out because they were "in between the decades."

MLA Gavin Short had urged his colleagues at the final Legislative Assembly meeting in August to help him "right a wrong" before the Assembly was dissolved.

The funding of up to £266,000 was approved at Wednesday's Standing Finance Committee and will be paid to employees in December.

£1,000 will be paid for 10 years continuous service, £2,000 for 20 and £3,000 for 30 years.

MLA Short said that anyone who chose to leave government employment after July 1, would still receive the bonus.

End of journey for Arombai

FINANCIAL constraints mean local lads Dylan Stephenson and Tom Elsby, sailing south to the Falklands from the UK, have had to leave Dylan's yacht Arombai in the Cape Verde Islands until they can earn enough to finish the voyage.

The pair are heading to the UK via Amsterdam and Dylan will reach the Falklands on October 7 and Tom on October 16.

Dylan told Penguin News: "I am leaving the boat in a secure marina in Mindelo, Sao Vicente."

Penguin News has been following the pair's adventures from when they began in the UK. We hope to see them back on the ocean in the future so that they can complete the journey.

Voyager flights begin October

THE Airbus A330 Voyager passenger aircraft will replace the current Hi Fly Falklands/UK airbridge charter service in October.

The Voyager is commercially owned and registered and operates under contract to the Ministry of Defence under a private finance initiative with Air Tanker Ltd.

Free pepper spray training

PROVIDING training for Police Officers to use pepper spray (CapTor Incapacitant) cost nothing as it was included in the officer safety training conducted on a regular basis, said MLA Sharon Halford in response to a question at Monday's public meeting.

Your questions answered

The following four questions were answered by FLH General Manager Owen Summers...

Q Why is there a difference in the price per unit for electricity between Falkland Landholdings settlements/generators?

A When FLH agreed to sell surplus properties to sitting tenants in Fitzroy, FLH directors had to decide whether to continue supplying electricity to the whole settlement or down size the generators to only meet its own needs. In taking the decision to supply all of Fitzroy it was on the basis of full cost recovery and a decision which was ratified by Executive Council in February 2010.

Q Fitzroy residents not employed on the farm pay an additional £54.19 per month surcharge for maintenance etc. What is the cost per unit and surcharge on other FLH farms for electricity supplied to residents not employed by FLH?

A When the electricity tariff was being calculated, the flat charge plus a per unit rate on electricity consumed was added for those that leave Fitzroy for considerable periods throughout the year to make a contribution towards maintaining the generators for their return. This was discussed with residents in October 2011 before the new charges were introduced and subsequently the flat rate charge of £54.19 was introduced to cover spares, oil, daily maintenance and depreciation and 43p per unit for electricity.

The situation in Goose Green and North Arm is quite different. If non-FLH personnel were cut off, FLH would have to retain the same size generators to cope with peak loads. FLH has kept tariffs at Stanley rates for residential and 50p per unit for commercial.

Q What evidence can be produced to show that maintenance to the tune of £3901.68 (six residential properties at £54.19 over a 12 month period) has been carried out at Fitzroy?

A FLH has kept a detailed record of units consumed, income and expenditure and for the period Dec 11 to Dec 12 inclusive which shows income at £20,341 and expenditure at £25,783. For the period Jan to Aug 2013 it shows income at £12,232 and expenditure at £15,346. It can be seen that FLH is still subsidising electricity but it has decided not to change charges until the 24 hour power is introduced around the end of this month, when tariffs will also be reviewed.

Q Why the disparity in delivery between farms (15 or 16 hours against 24 hours)?

A An extension in hours of running would only serve to increase the price of electricity.

Fitzroy residents only consume 17 per cent of the total units produced. Running the generator for a further eight hours will cost a further £7,000 in fuel alone. During that eight hour period it is estimated, from measurements done on all three farms, the increased consumption is unlikely to be much more than ten per cent, which would bring less than £1,000 additional revenue.

Penguin News asked MLA Mike Summers who has portfolio responsibility for the Rural Development Strategy if the concept of assistance with electricity had been considered.

MLA Summers said power in Camp was essential to all those living there.

"Anything we can do to make it technically more feasible or more cost effective we will endeavour to do. To that end the RDS Steering Group will have a discussion at their next meeting on the best way to provide the necessary technical assistance to those living in Camp to have affordable electricity, and to support those people who are already providing renewable power systems.

"There have been no discussions at this stage on subsidies or financial assistance schemes, though it is not impossible that these will emerge from our considerations," he said.

Short memories

I WAS amazed to hear responses from a few of our MLAs on Monday evening, concerning the MPA road.

I do believe that 90 per cent of our MLAs are the best group we've ever had and I've messaged them a few times on their performances. However, I do think they either have very short memories, or think us Kelpers are plain ignorant.

The ditches on the MPA road, were a red hot topic many years ago. Our councillors even got a quote from the PSA, of £7m to fill the ditches. Five of us wrote to the Governor criticising the councillors and the quote and offered to do the job for £1m EACH. The Governor replied, but the subject was forgotten.

I often visited the two managers of Wimpey's [one of the firms involved in the building of the MPA road] when in the Leeds area. (Regrettably one has now passed on.) They told me that the road was constructed to take 40 tonne loads. Some years later, this increased to nearer 90 tonne, and the road was breaking up.

Their answer was to fill the ditches, there was plenty of rock in the stone runs which stretched almost the length of the road. Then to widen the road by about four metres on either side, thus creating stabilisers on either side, for big loads passing each other.

To hear some people go on about the road and the cost involved to black top it, you would think it had to be imported from Down Under or somewhere.

We often hear of 'new posts being created'. Why? If we can do without someone, then let's do it, and put the money into a road kitty, so in maybe two or three years we could start at the Port Harriet gate and work towards MPA, and do the complete job.

Why not contract a Chilean company, close to home, to undertake the work, say in 15 mile stretches. Or get a retired COLAS engineer to oversee the work. The job could cost the tax payer far less than we are being made to believe.

Stump up for decent roads

THANK you MLAs and especially Sharon Halford for suggesting that if we want good roads, we should stump up and pay towards them.

What the hell are you getting at, we already pay an extortionate road tax for guts rattling, vehicle wrecking, bomb cratered dirt tracks. May I suggest that all vehicle owners refuse to pay any more tax until the roads are put in a SAFE, drivable condition.

You say you haven't enough money. Why then are you proposing to build a road to a deep water port in Port William that is going to wander around the camp and meet up with Sapper Hill? What is going to be the total expenditure of that?

Curry for charity

STANDARD Chartered Bank staff swapped their calculators for aprons on Saturday night raising £4,000 for the charity Seeing is Believing by opening an Indian takeaway in the Town Hall refreshment room.

The tasty takeaways were hot property as the team sold out of all four delicious dishes as fast as they could answer the phones to take orders.

SCB Manager Binoy Karia thanked the public for their incredible reaction to the fund-raising effort. "It was something different and we're thrilled it was such a success."

"I'm always surprised by the generosity and response of the community to good causes. It's an amazing community."

The Stanley branch has two main fund-raisers each year in the marathon and the Christmas raffle, but the team is always looking at ways to boost money raised.

The inspiration for their curry venture was a team effort said Mr Karia and it proved to be one decorated with gusto by the public.

The group aimed to cater for 400 portions and worked at full capacity from their 6pm opening time. In under 90 minutes they had sold nearly everything.

On the menu was a North Indian mutton karahi cooked by Binoy, his wife Purvi cooked the vegetarian biryani, Bonita Goodwin cooked a spicy beef curry, and Danielle Gordan and grandmother Carole Lee cooked the chicken tikka masala.

The entire bank staff were involved. Barbara Keenleyside was on poppadums and the rice was a real team effort with Julie Ford taking the lead said Mr Karia. Taking orders was phone team Bianca Caswell, Megan Middleton and Helena Whitney, but all the staff were involved delivering or helping coordinate the effort.

"We had a lot of fun and it was a fantastic response from the public with lots of happy customers. We were just sorry we couldn't meet all the demand," said Mr Karia.

£2,000 was raised from selling the dishes and the total was matched pound for pound by Standard Chartered Bank.

Registered charity Seeing is Believing is dedicated to providing affordable eye treatment to those most in need around the world since 2003.

Standard Chartered is committed to raising £100 million for the charity by 2020 and pledged to match every donation made by the public.

So far the bank has raised £50 million which has benefitted around 40 million people.

13,000km for SG bottled message

A MESSAGE in a bottle dropped off the north western end of South Georgia three years ago travelled more than 13,000km before washing up on New Zealand's Stewart Island, the South Georgia Newsletter says. The bottle was found at Masons Bay by Simon Taylor, who was beachcombing with family and friends. "It was only when I saw the screw cap was intact and there was something inside that I went for a closer look," said Mr Taylor.

Inside the bottle was a two-page letter from fishery researcher Luke Kenny. Mr Kenny had been working on a fishery research vessel, doing a fishery science cruise, when he launched the bottle in May 2010. The bottle was one of five he released with messages from various locations around South Georgia, while he was travelling to the Falkland Islands.

Cathedral compassion for child poverty

CHRISTCHURCH Cathedral is partnering with Child Development Charity 'Compassion' this month to help some of the world's poorest children. The church is inviting the congregation to sponsor individual children.

Nearly half the world's children still live without basic healthcare or education. Through the annual Compassion Sunday campaign, hundreds of churches across the UK and beyond are uniting to raise awareness of child poverty and offer a practical, personal and highly effective way for individuals to respond.

Children's Sunday Club at the Cathedral has been sponsoring Eider Romero Gabancho in Tablada de Lurin, Peru for over four years.

"The Cathedral Council loved the idea of doing more than just giving money," said Sunday Club co-ordinator Alison Inglis.

"They wanted children here in Stanley to be able to make a real connection with a sponsored child." Children at the Cathedral regularly exchange short letters and colourful pictures with Eider, now eight, and enjoy telling him their news and learning about life in Peru.

The Reverend Richard Hines added: "Poverty is about more than just lacking things, it's about lacking hope for the future, which is why we are encouraging people to give both financial assistance and also to write letters to their children and pray for them."

The Cathedral devoted their service on Sunday, September 1, to raising awareness of the plight of children around the world and encouraging individuals to get involved. They will be joining with hundreds of other churches across the world to help find sponsors for thousands of children.

1. What is your most prized possession?

Photos of my friends and family are my most prized possession, followed closely by my handbag collection

2. Who would you most like to have a tot with?

I'd love to share a bottle of bubbly with Edwina and Patsy from the TV series Absolutely Fabulous

3. If you could set up a business in the Falklands what would it be?

I recently completed a flower arranging course before moving to the Falklands so I would love to open a florists. The lack of flowers and wind might pose a slight problem though

4. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it?

I went to see Kasabian with a group of friends and every time I hear 'Fire' it takes me straight back there

5. What would people be surprised to learn about you?

I once sailed as a total novice in an international regatta around the Great Barrier Reef. We came in the top 10 but I don't think that was down to my sheer 'talent'

6. What is your happiest childhood memory?

My grandma and granddad secretly used to plant loose change in their garden and it used to keep my sister and I busy for hours. We genuinely thought 'money did grow on trees'

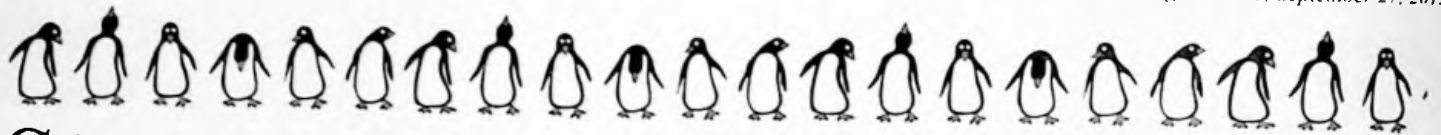

7. Where did you meet your partner?

We initially met in a lift (awkward silence). I then saw him in a pub that I used to work in. I took his number and let him wait for a few weeks before calling him out of the blue

8. What did you want to be when you were a child?

A dinner lady, an astronaut, an archaeologist, a Blue Peter Presenter. You name it, I wanted to be it Charlie moved to the Falkland Islands with her partner Jay in January 2013. She works as PA to the Director of Central Services and is organising this year's Conservation Charity Ball. She is thoroughly enjoying her time in the Falklands and is looking forward to visiting the West and some of the smaller islands in the summer.

Strategy, Travel Mart and all you need to know in a tourism update

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board has been busy over the past few months. They sponsored Bird Fair in Oakham UK and are now preparing for the much anticipated World Travel Mart which takes place at the Exhibition Centre London (ExCeL) November 4 - 7, 2013.

Speaking to Penguin News this week Managing Director of FITB Tony Mason gave an update on the organisation's activities in past months and looked forward to up and coming events.

Mr Mason explained he has 11 interviews with both print and radio as well as three speaking engagements planned for Travel Mart and FITB is sponsoring an agents' reception during the event and a proper Falkland Islands smoko on the stand on the first day of the show.

Mr Mason said he was, "excited about taking the Falkland Islands to the world again this year by attending the World Travel Mart," and believes the long term lasting effects from attending large scale shows will see the tourism industry continue to grow in the coming years, adding, "I am really pleased Sally Ellis will be joining us again this year representing ITT at the event."

"Others we have invited to join us this year are FIDC and UK representatives of Falkland Islands Conservation."

World Travel Market, the leading global event for the travel industry, is a four-day business-to-business exhibition for the worldwide travel and tourism industry.

Almost 48,000 senior travel industry professionals, government ministers and international press, embark on ExCeL - London every November in order to network, negotiate and discover the latest industry opinion and trends at WTM, now in its 34th year.

WTM 2012 generated £1,860 million of travel industry contracts, revealed independent research by Fusion Communications.

WTM is owned by the world's leading events organiser Reed Exhibitions (RE), which organises a portfolio of other travel industry events including Arabian Travel Market and International Luxury Travel Market.

In 2012, RE held more than 460 events in 36 countries bringing together more than seven million people from around the world and generating billions of dollars in business.

'Stanley' on tour

World Travel Market will feature a programme of conferences, seminars and events across all four days of the show and Mr Mason will be one of the keynote speakers.

He said: "when hydro carbons are gone, tourism will be the leading industry for the Falkland Islands, so we must press forward with our promotions taking this beautiful destination to the world. We have been given this opportunity, to do something big, so we can't afford to miss it. At last years event Ministers of Tourism from around the world came by our booth to say hello and welcome us, we were there alongside Chile and other South American Countries."

A solid relationship has now been forged with, "our friends in Chile," said Mr Mason.

FITB has been working on developing relations with Tourism Chile and has engaged in its first joint venture bringing a world renowned journalist from Conde Nast to the Falkland Islands in October.

"This joint venture will see the North American arm of Tourism Chile and the Falkland Islands Tourist Board working together as a team to make the two destinations marketable as one and reducing costs for both countries as well," said Mr Mason, adding, "This partnership is the beginning of a beautiful relationship and I am highly encouraged by the successful partnership. The partnership is in line with the Falkland Islands Tourism Development Strategy."

Mr Mason will attend meetings at the United States Tour Operators Association (USTOA) in December and will meet with key partners in the new programme, as well as engaging communications with Tourism Chile representative (and other small to medium sized tourism destinations) Spring O'Brien in New York.

Pre Season meetings are also scheduled at WTM and USTOA with Holland America, Princess Cruises and Crystal Cruises.

Jetty Visitor Centre

The Jetty Visitor Centre renovations are close to completion and everyone will enjoy the new look, said Mr Mason.

The Visitor Centre in the past has primarily acted as an information only operation for tourists. However, this year will be different FITB will be increasing the offering to tourists by introducing 'Stanley' the FITB penguin mascot custom designed in the UK. The Tourist Board plans to have Stanley out and about on busy cruise days during the season. The Visitor Centre will also have an improved range of gifts and souvenirs for tourists including souvenirs of 'Stanley' himself. "The Jetty Centre Toilets are nearly finished and will benefit not only tourists, but also the community at large," said Mr Mason.

"All of the construction will be completed ahead of schedule and this is down to the commitment of PWD and their project managers. The Tourist Board appreciates their hard work and dedication to completing the project."

As for the car park, the tourist board is looking at ways of increasing the size and have several proposals which are being considered to ease pressure during the tourist season.

Tourism awards

Nomination forms for the 2014 Tourism Awards will be available from the beginning of the season this year. Nomination forms will be available for operators and businesses from October 15 at the Jetty Visitors Centre. There will be a display in the Centre where forms can be dropped off throughout the entire season.

Staff

Mr Mason welcomed Kyle Biggs to the Tourist Board's team and said he, "looks forward to Kyle being part of the team for many years to come."

Social Media

Mr Mason commented: "The Tourist Board continues to focus and grow our social media presence under the direction of Layla Crowie, who is doing a fantastic job. 2011/12 season we had 4,000 followers on Facebook and we are happy to report our following has increased this year to 69,273 followers."

"We are also engaging in other social media arenas, but the numbers from Facebook are astounding and worthy of noting."

Tourism Strategy

The National Tourism Strategy is still moving forward and the Falkland Islands Tourist Board is taking the lead in moving tourism developments and projects forward for the next few years, said Mr Mason.

This is supported by an increase in funding over the next year with strong support from the Falkland Islands Government to support infrastructure incentives.

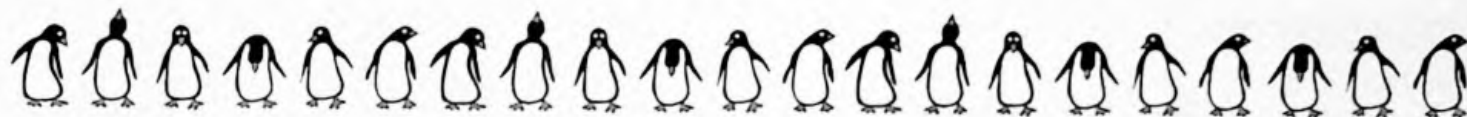

Overall the Board is pleased with the statistics and is now preparing for the upcoming season. "The staff at FITB are excited about the new look and feel of the offices, store, the long awaited toilet block and are ready to welcome guests in the new season," said Mr Mason.

Quality in tourism accommodation

The Board will begin, "rolling out and implementing its 'Quality in Tourism Accommodation Accreditation Scheme' during October," said Mr Mason.

The scheme, which was developed in consultation with the industry last year, will be implemented by Acorn Tourism, who have been working with FITB for the last five years on monitoring and measuring tourism in the Islands.

In common with most destinations around the world, the Falkland Islands has many different types and standards of accommodation, from very basic traditional houses with no mains water or electricity, to very well appointed hotels and self-catering houses. They all play an important part in the tourist experience when travelling around the Islands, said Mr Mason. "Different tourists look for different standards, prices and types of accommodation, and it is one of FITB's tasks to ensure they find the type of accommodation that suits them the best."

Tourism statistics

What the numbers say - Tony Mason reviews 2012/2013 statistics

"That is the main reason why this scheme has been developed. It will provide tourists with a better guide to what they are buying, which in turn should lead to more satisfied visitors, who are more likely to return to the Falklands and recommend the Islands to their friends or family."

Kevin Millington will be in the Islands for two weeks from October 5, visiting all the serviced and self-catering accommodation establishments that have signed up for the scheme.

These include:

Serviced Accommodation:
Lafone House, Malvina House Hotel, Shorty's Motel, Waterfront Hotel, Wirebird Hotel

Self-Catering Accommodation: Head Shepherd's House - Port Howard, Osborne Cottage - Goose Green, Race Point Farm - Port San Carlos, The Cottage - Port Stephens, Various properties in North Arm, Bleaker Island, Pebble Island.

Mr Millington feels this is not a scheme designed to tell accommodation owners what to do," explained Mr Mason. "It is purely voluntary and is intended to provide guidelines and suggested improvements that might be welcomed by future guests. When running a hotel, guesthouse, or self-catering property, it is all too easy to overlook some of smaller details that are important for visitors."

"Mr Millington is a long trusted friend of FITB and well-known in the tourism industry. We are lucky to have him on board leading this initiative for us."

"I am personally looking forward to our upcoming meetings October 5-19, and moving this programme forward. I also want everyone in the community to know the tourism grant is available to properties who choose to improve their accommodation offering and this grant is tied to the 'Accommodation Accreditation' programme and is relatively easy to obtain."

The scheme, while based on the accreditation scheme used in England, has been adapted specifically for the Falklands and takes into consideration local conditions and the demands of tourists visiting the Islands.

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board has released the following statistics from last season and Managing Director Tony Mason explained that the seasonality of tourism in the Falkland Islands is quite significant, with 65.5 per cent (nearly two-thirds) of all arrivals visiting in the first and last three months of the year (Jan-Mar and Oct-Dec) in 2012.

The seasonality pattern of leisure tourist arrivals is even more significant with 84.4 per cent of all arrivals visiting over this six-month period.

The seasonality of visiting friends and relatives (VFR) travel is shaped by the Christmas holidays, with 29.5 per cent of all trips occurring in December.

Seasonality patterns for business and transit tourism are less obvious; however, there are still significant differences between the months. In 2012, over two-thirds (67.8 per cent) of all business tourists visited the Falklands during the first six months (Jan-Jun) of the year.

The average spend per tourist per night in the Falklands in 2012 was £62.78, up £14.58 (or 30.3 per cent) on 2011. Just over one-half of daily spend was on accommodation (£31.61).

Over the period 2012 to 2013 there were 7,791 land based tourist arrivals in the Falkland Islands, of which 1,937 were travelling for leisure. This is the second largest number of leisure arrivals ever recorded in the Islands (the highest being 2,338 in 2007). Overall, tourist arrivals grew by 17.2 per cent in 2012 compared to the previous year.

Leisure tourism was the big winner in 2012, with a 51.8 per cent growth rate over 2011. However, business tourism also grew considerably (30.9 per cent) as did VFR (19.7 per cent).

The UK is the most significant market for tourist arrivals in the Falkland Islands, with 4,234 visitors in 2012. The second largest market in 2012 was Norway, with 482 visitors, although this is not traditionally a significant market for the Falklands (there were only 29 visitors in 2011, with most arrivals working on oil exploration. Argentina generated the third highest number of arrivals (and is usually the second largest generating market) with 374 visitors in 2012.

Tony Mason

In 2012, over 54 per cent of all arrivals were residents of the United Kingdom; however this represents a considerable fall in market share compared to over 68 per cent in 2000. Over the period 2000-2012, British visitors increased by an average of 5.0 per cent per annum, however they have lost market share due to higher growth rates from other countries.

Whilst, arrivals from the USA have barely changed over the same period, there has been a significant growth in arrivals from Canada, France and Argentina in the last five years.

There were 2,512 tourist arrivals on the Air Bridge in 2012, although this mode of transport was just edged into second place by Other Air carriers (mainly the Gatwick oil flight). There were 1,703 arrivals on LAN and almost 1,000 arrivals by sea.

Arrivals via the air bridge accounted for 32.2 per cent of all tourist arrivals in 2012, compared to almost 60 per cent twelve years ago. During the 12 years since 2000, arrivals via the air bridge have grown at an average rate of 1.7 per cent per annum, compared with 5.6 per cent on LAN and 22.8 per cent on 'other air'.

Despite the dominance of air, 12.5 per cent of all tourists arrived by sea in 2012, with the number of sea arrivals increasing by an average of 11.1 per cent per annum over the period 2000-2012.

The average length of stay of all tourists in 2012 was 15.9 nights (or just over two weeks), leisure tourists stay for the shortest length of time (9.4 nights), with transit (mainly oil and fisheries workers) staying the longest (23.7 nights).

Whilst the length of stay of tourists was around one week longer in 2010 and 2011, the figures recorded in 2012 show a return to levels seen in 2009. However, leisure tourists are staying for less time than ever before.

In 2012/2013, there were a total of 29,553 cruise passenger visits to the Falkland Islands. Cancellations accounted for a loss of around 23,053 passengers over the season.

The average spend per cruise passenger increased by £6.52 (12.8 per cent) in 2012/13 to £57.27. Expenditure on food and drink and shopping decreased, however, spend on tours was up on that measured in the 2011/12 season.

Despite a 15.9 per cent decline in the number of cruise passenger arrivals in the 2012/13 season, the fall in total expenditure was only 5.1 per cent. Overall, during the 2012/13 season, cruise passengers spent an estimated £1.7 million.

Overall, cruise passenger arrivals have grown at an average annual rate of 12.6% over the period 1995/06 to 2012/13, despite a decline in visits over the last four seasons.

The tourism industry suffered severely from pressure put on cruise lines, by not only the on-going issues with Argentina, but also bad weather in the Falkland Islands making it impossible for the ships to tender.

The 2012/13 cruise season experienced 21 cancellations, which reduced the total number of visitors by 23,053 and revenues from passenger tax alone cost the economy £413,502.

Mr Mason said: "When the cancellations began, we quickly realised adequate contacts were not in place for such a situation. A heavy focus on networking and developing key relationship was engaged which has resulted in a cruise line directory now residing in the tourist office."

Most visitors describe their trip to the Falklands as "excellent" or "good." In the 2012/2013 season there was a small increase in the number of visitors describing it as "fair."

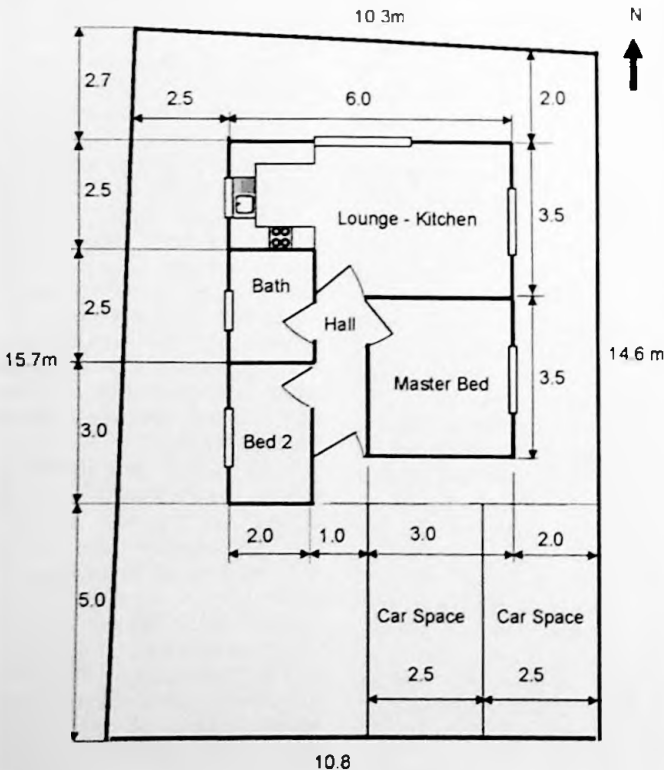

In 2012/13, 14.5 per cent of all cruise visitors (around 4,300 arrivals) stated they would like to visit the Falklands on a land-based holiday. Despite there being an apparent decline in the number of cruise tourists who think they will visit the Falklands again by boat, there has been an increase in the proportion who have a desire to visit as a land-based tourist.

Remembering Richard Biggs

RICHARD John Biggs (68) passed away on September 12 at Waikato Hospital in Hamilton, New Zealand. He died of lung cancer.

A sixth-generation Falkland Islander, Richard was born in Stanley on February 10, 1945, the youngest child of Isabella (née Middleton) and Hubert Biggs.

Upon the completion of his schooling in Stanley, Richard worked briefly in the FIG offices, and then for several years as a customs officer in South Georgia. After the South Georgia station closed down around 1967, he toured extensively through South America and Europe. At length his wanderings led him to New Zealand, where the majority of his adult life was spent.

During the seventies he travelled between Auckland and the South Pacific Islands, handling the accounts of a firm contracted to build airports in Fiji and Rarotonga. He moved to Taranaki in the 1980s to manage the office of a company responsible for the construction of a synthetic fuel plant. He then secured a position at the Inland Revenue, where he remained for a decade.

In 2000, he accepted voluntary redundancy in order to return to the Falklands.

Despite his period of absence, his affinity with his homeland had never waned, and he prided himself on possessing nearly every Falkland Islands Journal ever published.

Once back on his native soil, he relished the opportunity to reacquaint himself with those people and places he had left behind more than thirty years earlier. He found employment at the Taxation Office, at FIG, and at Island Shipping, before retiring to New Zealand in 2009.

Richard was an amateur radio enthusiast, and would communicate for hours together with other hobbyists. He also harboured a keen interest in all things Antarctic, collecting and reading books about the continent and her famous explorers. He himself liked to travel, and saw much of the world in his 68 years. He was a kind, generous man, who will be missed by all who knew him.

Richard is survived by his wife, Marian, to whom he was married for twenty-eight years. He is also survived by his brother, Adrian, and his sons, Patrick, and Stephen. He is predeceased by his siblings, Hubert Biggs, Alice Etheridge, Joyce Field, and Joan Bound.

A funeral service was held for Richard on September 17, in New Plymouth.

On behalf of my family, I would like to thank the many members of the Falklands community who, over the last fortnight, have extended to us their condolences.

Town Hall design reviewed before lift installed

AT a public meeting on Monday Members of the Legislative Assembly were invited to explain why the installation of the lift in the Town Hall which was in the budget for the financial year 2012/2013 has failed to progress.

They were also asked, "Is the new lift actually in the Islands?"

"What are the reasons for the delay and what is the timetable for this project?"

Answering on behalf of the Director of Public Works the response was given that "The lift installation has not failed to progress.

"When the lift was originally planned, pressure on space in the lower floor of the Town Hall was rather less than is now the case and it was necessary for that to be addressed, which it has been, with a revised layout having been agreed with the Registry and with a view to improving access to the Courts area, both potentially during the works and for the longer term it has been agreed that a door will be placed on the northern side of the courts offices.

"The size of the lift itself had also changed over time which necessitated the lift shaft also being re-designed.

"Design work for the above has been completed and the door obtained ready for installation.

"It is however now the case that some further, albeit apparently small, further changes are now needed in the Courts and Registry entrance due to the need to accommodate a receptionist and it is suggested that these works would best be done concurrently with the installation of the new door, which may also now need to be in a new location.

"As the timing for the lift installation works was far from clear, and may necessitate the relocation of at least some of the current building users, the lift has not been ordered and is not intended to be until it is certain that no further changes will be needed and that the timing for the installation works is clear.

"Due to the increased numbers of FIG staff already agreed and with further increases looking likely due to oil related activity, and also to accommodate the move to full time of MLAs with the next election, a review of office space requirements has been commenced, both short and longer term.

"This could result in at least one of the users of the ground floor being relocated permanently which could lead to other layout changes and as it would appear sensible to do as much of the work as possible at one time, so as to minimise disruption, particularly to the courts, it is not possible to provide a meaningful timetable at this stage."

Premier conservation donation

PREMIER Oil made a £5,000 contribution to Falklands Conservation's Watch Group on Friday.

The donation was accepted on the Watch group's behalf by FC Trustee Hay Miller who said they were very appreciative of the generous donation which will kick start a huge fund raising drive.

The money will be used to boost funding for their dream of a purpose built club house for the young conservationist group, to be located behind the main FC office at Jubilee Villas.

"We're still a long way off our £96,000 fund target to complete the build," said Mrs Miller but she is hopeful that other businesses will consider the opportunity to invest in the cause too.

Premier Oil representative Ken Humphrey said the Watch Group concept is one which is very much in line with the company's philosophy to support education and care for the environment. "Watch Group combines both in a way which reflects the closeness of the Falkland Islands community and its relationship with the unique Falkland Islands environment.

"The education of children is always important and to foster their education of the Falkland Islands and its environment through Watch Group is a fantastic initiative and one which lasts a lifetime," he said.

A sealing voyage to the Falklands

THE exciting conclusion to Daniel Wightman Lamb's account of a sealing voyage to the Falkland Islands in 1830/31, including the taking of their vessels near Port Louis in the Falkland Islands by Louis Vernet's agent Matthew Brisbane and his men, and Breakwater's escape. For readers' information it was the taking of these American vessels that resulted in the USA sending the USS Lexington to the Falkland Islands to put an end to what was regarded by the US as a 'nest of pirates'. On December 31, 1831, the Lexington came to anchor off Port Louis, Brisbane and six others were arrested on charges of piracy, the guns of the settlement spiked and the powder magazine blown. The ship's commander offered passage to any from the settlement that wished to leave and the majority of the population took up this opportunity to leave the islands. They were delivered to Montevideo, Uruguay.

[9] So all hands that could be spared went to gathering salt and soon had about 300 bushels piled up on the beach this was soon taken on board and we then had a good supply of salt for another sealing season which it so happened we never had occasion to use. Our method of gathering it was by putting it into sacks made of skins of the young hair seal and carrying it on our shoulders to the beach. A short distance South West of Cape Blanco we visited the ruins of an old town now deserted only the foundations of former habitations remaining and an old canon one horn broken off and the road was still visible from this place to the salt pond which was doubtless used by the former inhabitants. The Eastern coast of Patagonia is a barren rocky desert uninhabited but by the Gunaco the Ostrich the Wolf the Hare and some other animals.

We visited Port Desire at the mouth of the river of that name which must receive its water from the west as it did not rain there while we were on the coast. In May we bid adieu to the coast of Patagonia and sailed for the Falkland Islands so as to have the benefit of the great abundance of game on those Islands Wild Hogs and Rabbits, Ducks and Geese and wood and plenty of water but wood rather scarce. We went to the East Island around which are some small Islands and many good harbors and on which was Port Lewis the only settlement on the Islands. We found our dog to be very useful in catching hogs which were quite numerous on one of the Islands.

They were about as lean as a Rabbit but made us some meat and we also killed a great many wild Geese so we had a good supply of Game while we stayed there. One day we left the Harbor to go to one on the other side of the Island and forgot to take our dog on board.

[10] So the next day I and Ed Gardner were appointed to go across the Island about 15 miles to where we left the dog to have him come with us so we went as directed and near sundown came to the place we had left the day before and the dog was greatly rejoiced to see us but it was too late to return that day so we looked for a place to sleep. We found a place where a hold in A bet of Peat had been burned out about four feet deep and several feet in circuit here we made a bed of Grass cut with our knives and turned in and slept over night and the next day returned with the dog.

We visited several Islands while we stayed there and was intending to return to Patagonia and spend the next sealing season. We visited several harbors among the Islands generally finding plenty of game, Hogs Geese, Rabbits and Ducks of several kinds we also killed some Foxes for their skins which were good for Caps. Thousands of Rooks fly in the air. They are very much like a crow. On the hill we found a great many berries similar to Cranberries and a kind of herb called Matla which made excellent tea. On the tops of the hills there we could see Whales in the ocean some times near the land.

The latter part of August AD 1831, we went into a harbor near Port Lewis but on the opposite side of the Island and the harbor in which we lay was separated from the town by a narrow strip of land a mile or two wide, so one day Capt Carew thought he would make Port Louis a visit. He selected his company the boat was lowered and he went with the following company Mr Coffin second mate Capt Hall Alonzo and Pharoah Hedding and William Hennedy. They landed on the south side of the Harbor and there left the boat and went on foot to Port Lewis. This was intended to be a friendly visit and we thought they would soon return.

[11] So as I was on deck a little afternoon I saw the boat returning and I went below into the fore-castle and said to them that were there the boat came along side and then one of our men came down and in a low tone almost a whisper he said there is some strangers come on board but not the captain and they have guns.

Tom Canada says let us make a rush for them and throw them overboard. No says I, keep still we have no arms and they have and if we undertake that we will some of us get hurt.

So we kept quiet and went on deck and found they had possession of the vessel. Their leader was an English man Capt Brisbane and his men was Spaniards and Portuguese and English and I saw one American he was one of the crew of the William. He told me that the William and the Harriet were both taken at Port Lewis. And now Capt Brisbane demands of Mr York our vessels papers and all our arms and commands the crew of the Breakwater to be put onto a small Island which was in the Harbor where we were and there to await further orders. Of course we had to obey. So we made preparation to leave the vessel and go on shore with bedding camp equipage, and cooking utensils and Provisions to live in camp we knew not how long. But we could not take our chests of clothing so Capt Brisbane consented to let us leave them and said they should not be disturbed.

So we asked him to let us leave one man on board and take care of our chests. He consented and we chose Tom Canada to care of our chests. So Mr York and the steward Mathew Flores and Tom Canada, were left on board and the rest had to leave the vessel and go on to a small Island to stay we immediately went to work [12] to pitch our tent so that we could have a comfortable shelter which we finished in good time and made ourselves a comfortable shelter for the night and we turned in and rested well till about midnight when we heard the voice of Mathew the steward calling out, Hallo Mr Sutton, we have taken the damed Spaniards and fastened them below and Mr York wants you all to pack up and come aboard as quick as you can all of you. He and Tom Canada had come on the boat for us it was dark they could not see us from where they landed so Mathew turned to the right to look for us and Tom to the left Mathew found us soon after he landed and we hurried and got our things into the boat before Thomas got around the Island and Mr Sutton Says Boys shove off no says I, dont leave Canada here on the Island, so Mr Sutton concluded to wait awhile for Tom. we waited a few minutes and we heard his voice and he came and we soon pulled along side the vessel and found Mr York in Supreme Command of the vessel and alone on deck. But how did he get it? During the night Thomas Canada was placed in the Fore-castle where four of the guards slept while but one was on deck, pretended to be sick and went aft to get medicine of Mr York who had found a musket which was not given up to Capt Brisbane. So Canada says to Mr York now is your time. So Mr York and the steward captured and disarmed the sentinel and Tom Canada went to the fore-castle and said the first one that puts up his head I will knock out his brains with a hand spike

The sentinel was made to go below and the hatch put over them and the chain cable piled on to it and so we found it when we got on board.

[13] Well what shall we do next and what shall we do with our prisoners? We concluded to put them ashore and get out to sea and stear for home. So we called them up one by one and tied their hands so that they should not get the advantage of us. When the last one a Portuguese came up he trembled like a leaf and cried out no Agwa No Agwa, he thought we were going to throw them overboard but we told him he should not be hurt. We helped them into the boat pulled to the shore helped them on shore throwed them A chunk of pork untied one of them and left him to untie the rest and left them and went on board hoisted the boat on deck weighed anchor and sailed out to sea and to avoid being captured from a pursuing vessel from Port Lewis we steered North Easterly, but we were not molested by a pursuer. We had a scant supply of wood and water so we had fire to cook but once a day and to be economical in the use of water till we could reach some port where we could get a supply. Thus we left the Falkland Islands and left our Captain and boats crew prisoners at Port Lewis the authorities there claiming that we were trespassers on their grounds and to show their great authority they made prizes of the Harriet the William and the Breakwater but the Breakwater escaped as I have shown but what was done with the other two vessels I know not. We continued our course and in a few days passed close by the Island of little Trinidad but did not land.

This Island is not inhabited but is said to have Goats upon it. We then steered for Pernambuco, where we might get wood and water. While on our way there we were overtaken with a gale off the coast of Brazil and our vessel was struck by a heavy sea which lad her on her beam ends on her larboard side so that her topmast almost touched the water.

[14] We then thought we all would soon go to the bottom. But she gradually righted but the salt in the hold caved to the larboard side which gave the vessel a list that way So we took off the after hatch returned the salt to its place and got her again in trim. In this lurch of the vessel the tar barrel which was lashed to the foremast broke its fastenings and hit Daniel OBryen and broke his leg.

Mr York bandaged it and cared for him as well as he could but it is a bad place on board a vessel all the time in motion to have a broken limb. Well we met with no other accident and in due time we made the Harbor of Pernambuco. The Harbor was rather difficult to enter and rather small but safe and we entered safely and came to anchor and lowered a boat and pulled toward a landing place. There a man stood on shore and cried out to us with a loud voice Make fast to that buoy. Aye. Aye, sir we answered and obeyed. An then looking toward shore we saw that we were not far from a muzzle of a canon pointing toward us which signified that we were then under the Sovereign jurisdiction of the Empryre of Brazil.

We soon went ashore and were treated very kindly and soon got a supply of wood and water looked around the city some visited the American Consuls office and soon prepared to leave for Stonington. It so happened the day before we got to Pernambuco there was a riot in the city and the jail was broken open and the prisoners let loose. Two of them came on board of our vessel to get a passage home with us they were Captains Adams and Foster of Rhode Island who had been imprisoned on the charge of smuggling of course we took them and also a man by the name of Benson. Mr York made the hands a present of some Oranges to take to their friends when they should get home.

[15] Pernambuco is about 8 degrees South latitude a climate where there is no winter the land of sugar cane and coffee we were there in September and the smoke from their Sugar Camps could be seen in many places around in the country.

The city of Olinda is in sight a few miles back of this city. The People are Portuguese and we saw more blacks than whites mostly slaves. Well having thus replenished our stores and taken all hands and passengers on board we left Pernambuco and shaped our course for Stonington and it was some time in september I think the latter part and in about forty days we passed between Montauk point and Block Island into Long Island Sound and into the Harbor of Stonnington Point from whence we sailed about fourteen months before. I got my chest and things ashore and bid adieu to the Breakwater; and her crew and have seen none of them since except Mr York and Mr Sutton. I went to the bank in stonington and got my share of the skins that had been sent home which was seventy dollars, About five dollars per month for the time I was gone, rather small wages but I was glad to get home at any price. Then I went home to my Father ten miles afoot got there in the night to their great surprise as they did not expect me for three or four months.

The next day got my chest home and so my sealing voyage was ended. A few days after I had a call to teach the school at Quimbaug the district joining that at Stonington which invitation I accepted and so instead of spending the winter of AD 1831 and 32, catching seal on the coast of Patagonia I spent it in the school room and with the good people of Quimbaug.

The end

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800...Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800...Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system.

Telephone: 28100, E-mail: inspector@police.gov.fk or fax: 28110.

Returning Home to St Helena?

With the Airport on schedule to open in 30 months' time we are busy training and up -skilling anyone who wishes to work in hospitality.

2onMain Training Restaurant has been set up to provide up-skilling and accredited training in Professional Cookery, Food and Beverage Service and Customer Service to Saints of all ages.

We would like to hear from Saints living and working away from St Helena who are already skilled and working in the Hospitality Industry. Future vacancies will include (full time) trainer/NVQ assessor in Front and Back of house and (Short term secondment) guest trainers/speakers who are experts in their field.

If you think that you have the necessary ingredients to support us here whilst enriching the island's skill base - we would love to hear from you !

Please Send your CV's to:

Did you know....

AN early form of measuring a ship's progress was by casting overboard a wooden board (the log) with a string attached. The rate at which the string was paid out as the ship moved away from the stationary log was measured by counting how long it took between knots in the string. These measurements were later transcribed into a book. Hence we get the term 'log-book' and also the name 'knot' as the unit of speed at sea.

HADRIAN'S Wall, built to guard the Romans northern England border against the marauding Scots, had forts situated at regular intervals along its length. Every two weeks the soldiers got to sleep inside them and this is where our term for two weeks, 'fortnight' comes from.

Junior archers show their skill

FOURTEEN pupils took part in the Infant and Junior School and Camp Education Archery Club over July and August.

Boosting the solid core of archers from Years 5 and 6 was the welcome addition of a lot of newcomers to the sport.

For many in Year 6 it was their last chance to shoot at the club as they are now progressing on to Falkland Islands Community School as Year 7 students; we wish them well in their endeavours.

The increase in numbers required a rethink of how the sessions are run, but by splitting it into two groups of seven and allotting an hour to each, we were able to devote coaching to each archer as required.

The club ran right through into the very last week of the school holiday with hardly anyone missing out on the chance to take part; their dedication to the sport is impressive.

Top archer on the day was Connor McLeod who was only 15 points off a Gold Certificate. He

| Name | Score | Certificate | Name | Score | Certificate |
|-----------------|-------|-------------|------------------|-------|-------------|
| Connor McLeod | 255 | Red | Lachlan Crowie | 161 | Blue* |
| Caitlin Fowler | 246 | Red | Molly Jaffray | 121 | Black* |
| Thomas Watson | 234 | Red | Shaleena Roberts | 80 | Black* |
| Jack Cartwright | 227 | Red | Skye Trevaskis | 76 | Black* |
| Tiphanie Reid | 182 | Blue | Demi-Lou Stevens | 69 | Black* |
| Jordan Francis | 179 | Blue | Jordan Betts | 58 | White* |

* First time archers was pushed all the way by Caitlin Fowler who managed to get all six arrows in the gold in a single end of the 30 arrow shoot.

Certificates and the target faces shot on by each archer were presented at FICS by Jo Lazo, Secretary of the Falklands Archery Association and Head Teacher Mr Winward.

Steve Gill, committee member of the FAA, presented the certificates and targets to the new Year 6 students of IJS&CE, a big thank you to you all.

All the first time archers did very well indeed and show much promise. Tiphanie Reid put in a very strong showing having not shot for nearly a year.

Lachlan and Molly showed natural talent with Shaleena, Skye, Demi-Lou and Jordan putting in very strong scores for their first competition and a credit to them for their efforts.

Five of the above young archers have joined the Falklands Archery Association and are a most welcome addition to the club. They make the club shoots quite a buzzing experience and have moved up the distances to almost full indoor ranges at alarming speed building on their experience gained in the IJS&CE hall.

Thank you to all that helped run the club. Jason Lewis, Mark Lewis, Kathryn McGeachie and Len McGill of the FAA, Steve Dent, Alan Fowler and Steve Cartwright parents of the young archers that came in and help setup and pack up. Tamsin McLeod, the official scorer.

Without your help it would not be possible.

Sunday match scores

Blackhawks 8 : 12 Coyotes

Blackhawks: Frank O'Sullivan - 4 goals, Karl Nightingale - 3 goals 1 assist, Sam Miller - 1 goal

Coyotes: Arturo Tellez - 6 goals, Nick Rendell - 2 goals 1 assist, Clayton March - 2 goals, Teslyn Barkman - 1 assist COYOTES Arturo Tellez is the current record holder of most goals scored in a game for the Stanley Cup after scoring six goals against Blackhawks on Sunday.

Coyotes now move on to face Panthers to decide who will claim third place in the Stanley Cup competition. This will also be their last match of the season.

The Penguins v Flyers game due to be played last Sunday was cancelled. As the top two teams they will face each other this Sunday in a warm up game before three final matches to decide who will be the winner of the Stanley Cup. The finals will be played over three consecutive Sundays.

Be a loser for charity

A group of motivated ladies and lads are losing weight to raise money for the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund.

Hoping to raise money through pound for pound sponsorship or fixed donations the 'losers' start their challenge on 1 October with a weigh-in and have nearly two months to lose as much as possible before the final weigh-in on 20 December.

There will be a donation from Malvina House Hotel for the biggest 'loser' and Stanley Leisure Centre are helping out by reducing rates said organiser Carmen Miranda.

If you want to take part or for more information contact Carmen on Facebook, mobile: 55972 or email: owls@horizon.co.fk

Increase in sex offenders sparks child safety review

A CHILD Safety Review sparked by acute concerns in respect of the management of a small number of social welfare cases and by the increase in the detection and imprisonment of sexual offenders, has been released to the public.

The lengthy review also made reference to "preliminary disclosures" to authorities in respect of children's experiences during their time boarding at Stanley House (in the 1980s/90s) and indicated that allegations including those of sexual abuse may surface.

The report further highlighted inadequacies in the social welfare system.

In an Executive Council paper provided by the Director of Health and Social Services Hilary Rowland, government fully accepted the 15 recommendations made in the review and recognised the crucial importance of good recruitment practices for the development of an effective social work team.

Last week Standing Finance Committee in response to the report agreed £46,000 recurring funding for an additional child-care social worker and £46,000 recurring funding for an additional probation officer post from 2014/15.

Michael Sheath of the Lucy Faithfull Foundation undertook the review visiting the Islands between July 8 and 19, a period which he described as a time of, "high anxiety and expressed concerns," about the safety of children which in part related to the mismanagement of a number of cases by the Social Services.

He met with some 34 individuals from relevant departments and studied historic, current and impending sexual abuse cases.

Mr Sheath said that at the time, police investigation into relevant recent cases appeared to be "bearing fruit," but there may well be connections to the more distant past.

Historic events at Stanley House were being referred to, "and it may well be that a raft of allegations about abuses there, including sexual abuse, are about to surface," he said.

"These appear to centre round poor or indifferent adult supervision, leading to a culture of brutality and bullying between the children, elements of which may be sexual. More sinister were suggestions, so far not expanded upon, that adult men had been allowed to take female children out of Stanley House for purposes which were assumed to include sexual contact and thereby abuse."

Mr Sheath said any investigation into these matters would have to be handled subtly and skilfully if evidence was not to be lost or suppressed, and equal care would have to be taken that an atmosphere of hysteria did not become embedded in any investigation which might bring the authorities and the Islands into disrepute.

From the Falkland Islands perspective these matters offer significant challenges from the point of view of the Islands' reputation and image, he said. "If the various suggestions are true they reveal a dark side to Falklands' life, hitherto partly unacknowledged, which may have an impact at both a local and international level, given the symbolic and strategic importance of the Islands and their association with the UK," said Mr Sheath.

However, the Falklands is not facing a Pitcairn Islands scandal, and nor are they likely to, stressed Mr Sheath who has visited Pitcairn on two occasions. If that were the case 40 per cent of the adult male population (600 people) would be in jail.

A careful management of matters as they arise and are investigated could demonstrate that the Falklands has experienced and can address these issues in the same way many other communities in the United Kingdom have, he said. "This may be a painful process, but it cannot realistically be avoided. The greater danger would be to attempt to suppress any enquiries or offer flat denials that anything is amiss, thereby risking greater scrutiny, scepticism and speculation which would create a greater crisis than a controlled strategy of self disclosure," said Mr Sheath.

He drew attention to the practice of 'spinning' where young men meet and engage with girls on the street and go out of town for drives to talk, drink alcohol, smoke and so forth. These are meetings between people who know each other and from which sexual crimes have originated and dispel the notion that everyone knowing each other keeps children safe on the street.

The impact of technology on children's safety also needed to be considered said Mr Sheath. Children carrying mobile phones are able to summon help or contact their parents easily however the negative aspect was that they can be contacted by others who may have "ill intent." Relationships conducted through mobile phone or the internet often become more intense and uninhibited than those conducted face to face and have been cited as being the root of a number of cases of sexual grooming in the United Kingdom.

Penguin News open invitation to candidates

CANDIDATES for the General Election to be held on Thursday November 7 are invited to submit election manifestos of 500 words or less for inclusion in the October 25 edition of Penguin News.

Those who wish to include their manifesto should ensure it is delivered to the Editor by 4pm on Thursday October 17.

Penguin News reserves the right to refuse to print manifestos submitted after that deadline.

Should manifestos exceed 500 words Penguin News retains the right to remove words from the end of the manifesto before including it in the newspaper.

Manifestos should be typewritten, although an electronic copy would be preferred. Manifestos will not be edited in any way by the newspaper, thus authors should check their submissions carefully as spelling mistakes or grammatical errors will not be corrected.

Candidates are also asked to include a photograph of themselves with their submission.

If candidates miss the deadline, they may elect to pay to have their manifestos printed as an advertisement, however, whether this will be possible will depend on available advertising space at the time the request is made.

All publications will be scrutinised for defamatory comments and the Editor reserves all of the usual rights concerning the publication of such material. All manifestos will be printed in the same edition for one edition only.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

HAVING grumbled in the past about self proclaimed experts examining and analysing the Falklands political situation, admittedly, and with regard to other issues that affect the community, particularly ones that provoke strong emotions, there are times when a perceptive and objective mind can throw helpful light on a subject.

Michael Sheath's (Lucy Faithfull Foundation) Child Safety Review of the Falkland Islands released to the public this week along with FIG's recommendations made distressing but, I suppose strangely enough, also hopeful reading.

Putting aside the more intricate analysis of the various institutions involved in child protection (it's a 50 page document) myself and other staff were either reduced to utter silence or roused to intense debate as a result of his reasoned dissection of our cultural norms - and ones often common in any small community. In one particularly insightful section he observes that yes, just as Falkland Islanders tend to believe, here and in any community children are largely 'safe in the streets' with most child sex offences and rape of women in any community anywhere, committed behind closed doors. However, he draws attention to the practice of 'spinning' where young guys meet and engage with girls, drive out of town, perhaps drink, smoke and so forth. Now I can't imagine there are many Falkland Islanders who in their youth haven't done exactly that, and I should emphasise Mr Sheath doesn't demand that youngsters shouldn't be allowed out on their own. What he does point out is that sexual crimes have flowed from this practice and children have been targeted in part because of being unsupervised in the community.

We know this is the case, and the majority of us know without any doubt that a man picking up an underage girl with the intention of persuading her to have sex at any point is contemptible, criminal and cannot be excused. Even if the girl has delusions of romance, or the boy too, ultimately it is a man grooming a child in order to commit a sexual crime. Sadly the truth is there will always be predators (and no, just being a few years older than the girl doesn't make them less likely to be convicted as a paedophile) but Mr Sheath's practical suggestions with regard to education in school on this matter, policing strategy and a public information campaign offers hope. It is heartening too that there has been success in recent years in terms of convictions obtained.

What he emphasises though, and who could not agree, is that the worst response would be denial that a problem exists.

FOGL and Desire combine in oil search

DEPENDENT on shareholder and relevant Falkland Islands Government approvals, Falkland Oil & Gas are to combine assets with Desire Petroleum to create a company with licences to explore for oil both to the north and south of the Islands.

FOGL whose licences are to the south of the Islands where oil is yet to be found will through its deal obtain a minority stake in the Sea Lion project.

The new group said it would have funds for its share of a drilling programme to include five wells across the Falklands.

FOGL also said it had signed a new partnership deal with Premier Oil and Rockhopper for two of Desire's exploration licences, exchanging a share in two areas for funding drilling.

"This combination is a compelling opportunity to consolidate the portfolios of FOGL and Desire, diversifying the risk profile for both companies' shareholders and enabling the combined group to move forward with an active, long-term programme for growth in the Falkland Islands," said FOGL's Chief Executive Tim Bushell.

Simon Lockett, Premier's Chief Executive, said: "We are delighted to increase our equity interests within these two licences which we believe have the potential to add significant value to our existing interests in the Falkland Islands."

"The revised equity interests and cost sharing agreements will ensure that these licences can be included in the next phase of the planned Falkland Islands exploration programme."

Your questions answered

Q I HAVE been given to understand that any member of staff at the KEMH can access all medical records. Please can I be assured that such a shocking breach of confidentiality cannot possibly be the case.

Answer provided by Director of Health and Social Services Hilary Rowland.

A The medical records held in the hospital are in both paper and electronic formats.

The paper notes are stored in the medical records room behind reception, which is kept locked out of normal hours. Clinical and admin staff have access to this room in order to obtain paper records for clinics and consultations. A tracking system is in place in order to ascertain the whereabouts of such records. No unauthorised personnel have access.

Electronic medical records can be accessed by all clinical staff as well Allied Health Professionals, but restrictions are in place as to the amount of personal data they can access depending on their role. Obviously all doctors have unlimited access in order to consult and treat patients. Our system has a 'confidentiality mode' which allows only specific members of staff to access sensitive personal information such as psychiatric consultations.

Access for all medical records is on a 'need to know' basis and we have a system in place to monitor who has accessed which patients and when.

Admin staff, including the receptionist, have basic access rights in order to arrange appointments and collect the necessary records for the doctors.

They also need access in order to maintain and up-date records such as adding referral letters, investigation results so that the doctors have a comprehensive overview of the condition they are dealing with and can plan further care.

Importantly all staff working within the Health and Social Services Department are bound by our specific Code of Confidentiality Policy which all staff have to sign as part of their induction. Any breaches of that code would be taken very seriously.

Rockhopper tax talks continue with FIG

THE Falkland Islands Government remains "confident that a mutually acceptable outcome can be reached with Rockhopper," on the matter of their tax bill from FIG, confirmed Financial Secretary Nicola Granger on Wednesday, and indicated the situation would have no impact on local tax laws.

The oil exploration company reported in August a full-year loss of $75 million (£48 million) due to a $122 million tax bill from the Falkland Islands Government.

FIG followed this up with an announcement at the time that in accordance with usual practice they were reviewing the tax return submitted by Rockhopper on May 17. They added however, that given the "extraordinary circumstances surrounding Rockhopper's application to the High Court to cancel its share premium account, an initial tax assessment was raised by the Falkland Islands Government Tax Office on June 11 prior to agreement of the tax liability." FIG announced they were working with an international specialist valuation advisor in order to achieve, "a mutually acceptable outcome."

When contacted by Penguin News this week, FIG Chief Executive Keith Padgett and Mrs Granger indicated it would not be appropriate for Government to make any comment on the tax affairs of any individual or company.

Asked whether the final deal would be made public and also, would it represent a change which requires amending tax law, Mrs Granger explained that even after the fact FIG could not disclose details about specific tax payers, but that government would, "continue to publish financial monitoring reports through Standing Finance Committee which would include any amounts paid."

She added: "The assessment is being undertaken under current Falkland's tax law and FIG have no intention of changing the fiscal regime relating to the oil and gas industry."

Good news for house buyers

PROSPECTIVE new home owners can look forward to more generous loans with now having access to four times the first salary rather than the current salary multiple of three.

Executive Council approved the increase last week as well as an extension to the joint Government and Standard Chartered Bank scheme to include the build of permanent unattached garages and in principle, guarantee support being extended to a variable scheme rate.

Former Assembly Member Dick Sawle commented last week that a variable rate mortgage could be a good idea when interest rates are low as they currently are, but it does mean that repayments can fluctuate with changes in interest rates. Full details of the scheme are to be worked through between the bank and FIG and more detail will become available in due course.

The government assistance programme was developed in 1996 in association with Standard Chartered Bank (SCB) and amended in 2001 and 2003 and was most recently updated as the Joint General Mortgage Scheme in 2007. Its objective was to provide financial assistance for the construction of new houses, the purchase of existing properties and the extension to, or major renovation of properties both in Stanley and Camp. Under the revised scheme FIG no longer made a separate loan, but instead, guaranteed up to 20 per cent or £19,000 of the SCB loan in Stanley and 50 per cent or £47,500 in Camp.

Tariff removed

THE ferry tariff for sheep and lambs shipped in Falkland Islands Meat Company trailers from West Falkland and the outer islands has been removed for a trial period of three years. Executive Council approved the scheme last week with Standing Finance Committee approving funding up to £32,500 to support the initiative. There was potential for an extension for a further two years, dependent on the outcome of a review of the success of the policy to be carried out by both FIMCO and the Department of Agriculture, said former MLA Dick Sawle last week.

New police staff

THE recruitment of two temporary detectives and a station enquiry officer has been approved for the Royal Falkland Islands Police. Chief Inspector Len McGill said the two detectives would assist with the current case load which included some serious offences, while the enquiry officer would allow patrol officers to conduct their regular duties.

Children from the age of 12 needed to be offered a repeated message about the potentially abusive use of mobile phones and the dangers of 'sexting' (sending text messages with sexual content or sexual images attached).

The RFIP were rightly proud of their record in terms of responding to reported sexual abuse in the last two or three years and the evidence of their success was to be found in HM Prison which held five men who had been convicted of sexual offences at the time of the review, said Mr Sheath. "The overall impression, albeit based upon a relatively brief engagement was that the RFIP dealt very effectively with crimes reported to them, but their engagement in prevention, public awareness and disruption was not so active and vigorous. In a police force which was too small to develop a wide range of specialities, this was not surprising," he added.

The Senior Magistrate had set a bench mark in terms of the imposition of prison sentences which could leave no doubt in the community that sexual abuse of children would not be tolerated and would be dealt with harshly, concluded Mr Sheath.

The primary focus of the review however was a "health check" of the Social Services Team and Mr Sheath said it was immediately evident that they had experienced something approaching a "collective nervous breakdown" in the months before the review commenced.

The roots of the collapse were long standing and embedded in the framework of the institution, he said, adding that his consideration of Social Services files revealed a, "disturbing pattern of poor engagement with clients and a series of management failures and conflicts."

It was apparent that an atmosphere of dissent, "bordering on mutiny," had affected the relationships between the social workers and their manager, with workers refusing to undertake work on certain cases because they felt it fell outside their competence or purview. There was little evidence of any disciplinary action being taken and there was a trend to await the arrival of a new worker, the assumption being that this person would effectively, "save the day," said Mr Sheath.

There was universally expressed sympathy and admiration for the one qualified social worker who had carried the bulk of the more difficult cases from 2012 and 2013 as well as managing the team when the manager left. However it was felt that he had "burnt out" with the strain of the roles and had in turn left the Islands.

Mr Sheath said a number of other social workers had been recruited to reinforce the team, but they had proved, "ineffective, or deficient," and one or two of them had, "caused more difficulties than they had resolved."

A recent arrival who was seen as an asset to the team, expressed his amazement that he had been recruited without being interviewed. "He had merely sent his CV and was offered the post thereafter," said Mr Sheath.

The potential solutions to the Social Service's difficulties in some respects were quite mundane and rest in conventional practice, he said. Salary needed to be at least equivalent to UK practitioners; workers need to be recruited by conventional means and the use of agency staff should be minimised because of the cost and the inability to embed with existing systems.

Mr Sheath said it struck him that the family court case which had caused so much controversy in terms of revealing deficient practice within Social Services was in reality, "quite unremarkable." The fact and issues of the case were dealt with on a daily basis by the English Family Court, with very little fanfare or drama, he said, adding that the case had highlighted the shortcomings of the local Social Services and criticisms of their performance appeared to have led to a, "very public collapse in morale, confidence and perceived competence."

He concluded that the 'higher' legislation in terms of the Children's Ordinance of 1994 was long overdue for revision and understood this would commence in September. There was also an urgent need for joint training for all bodies connected with the Safeguarding Children's board, adding that the recruitment of foster parents and the development of regulations to support that process was also in need of urgent attention.

The intention of his review was that it should provide, "food for thought, some comfort, some friendly criticism and some feasible solutions," said Mr Sheath.

FIDF recruits exercise

NEW Falkland Islands Defence Force recruits deployed on their first exercise on September 28/29. Major Peter Biggs said: "During the exercise the recruits learn basic fieldcraft and soldiering skills, including how to live outdoors, camouflage and concealment, patrolling, fire and movement and use of night vision equipment and pyrotechnic illumination."

The recruits will complete their initial training course in November.

Ever thought of standing for election?

Attorney General Mark Lewis offers answers to some of the questions you may have about standing for election and the role of being a Member of the Legislative Assembly....

Mark Lewis

HAVE you ever said to yourself that if you were a Member of the Legislative Assembly (MLA) then you would change things or decide things differently? Have you ever thought about standing for election as an MLA? Whether or not these thoughts have crossed your mind, the recent changes to the role and pay of an MLA have been made to encourage more people to stand for election and to recognise the time and effort that people commit as an MLA.

Q Do I need any qualifications to be an MLA?

A You do not need any formal qualifications to be an MLA but you do need energy, commitment and a desire to serve your community. To stand for election you need to be 18 years of age and registered as an elector. There are some things that would disqualify you from standing such as being in the regular armed forces, being an un-discharged bankrupt, or having served 12 months in prison in the last five years.

Q Do I get paid to be an MLA?

A Yes. Following this election MLAs will be paid £40,000 each year, paid in 12 monthly payments. You will continue to receive this pay when you are on approved holiday leave and if you are ill. You will also be paid expenses that you properly incur in carrying out the role of MLA. This would cover things like travel, accommodation and meals.

Q Will MLAs be taxed on their pay?

A Yes. MLAs although not employed by the Falkland Islands Government will be taxed on the pay of £40,000 as though they are an employee.

Q What about pension?

A MLAs will have the same pension arrangements as employees of the Falkland Islands Government.

Q What hours would I be expected to work?

A The role of an MLA is a full time job. MLAs will be expected to be available in Stanley for MLA business from midday Monday until 4.30pm Thursday. Fridays are set aside for MLAs to have constituency surgeries, meet and talk to constituents and for other MLA work.

Q Do I get any holiday?

A Yes. MLAs can take holidays when the Legislative Assembly breaks after Christmas and in the winter for 10 days each. In addition MLAs can take 10 days holiday at any time during the year.

Q Could I still work in my current job and also be an MLA?

A The role of MLA is a full time job. If you work for the Falkland Islands Government then you will have to resign to take up the role of MLA and you will have 100 days after being elected to do this. For other employees, if you are elected you cannot be forced to resign your current job, but if you cannot devote yourself full time to being an MLA then you should seriously consider whether you should stand for election. If a person is elected who then cannot or does not work full-time as an MLA, then the pay they receive could be reduced or they could receive no pay at all and there may be other consequences.

Q Do I get any financial help when my term as an MLA comes to an end?

A Each Legislative Assembly is elected for 4 years. At the end of the Assembly, if you decide not to stand for election again, or do stand but are not elected, you will be paid a sum equivalent to one twelfth of the annual payment made to MLAs. The purpose of this payment is to help give you time to find and take up a new job or re-adjust to no longer being an MLA.

Q Who decides what policy issues I would be responsible for?

A After the election the newly elected MLAs agree between themselves what policy areas (called 'portfolios') they will take responsibility for.

Q Who decides who sits on Executive Council?

A At the first meeting of the new Legislative Assembly there is a vote between the 8 MLAs who choose 3 MLAs to sit on Executive Council. When an MLA who sits on Executive Council is away the MLAs will decide who temporarily takes that place.

Q Will I be managing staff?

A No. MLAs work with the employees of the Falkland Islands Government to develop policy and to ensure that decisions are implemented and services are provided, but the employees are not managed by MLAs.

Q Do MLAs get any help?

A Yes. There are employees whose specific job is to support and assist MLAs to carry out their role. MLAs will also be provided with IT and office resources to help them do their jobs.

MLAs will work closely with the Chief Executive and the other Directors in developing ideas and policy, and implementing decisions. All employees in the Falkland Islands Government are there to help MLAs deliver the decisions that they make.

Q If I want to stand for election what do I need to do?

A There is a guide available which goes into the detail of what you need to do to stand for election.

You can get a copy of this guide from the Chief Executive's office in the Secretariat Building or from the Registry at the Town Hall or you can ask for a copy to be emailed to you - just email registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

You have until 4.30pm on October 17 to decide whether you want to stand and complete and submit the forms.

Representing the people of the Falkland Islands is a demanding, but rewarding and important role.

It's important that people exercise their democratic right to vote but also important that people put themselves forward to stand for election so that the Falklands continues to be a thriving democracy.

My Adventurous Uncle Richie

I LOVED all my uncles and aunts, but the youngest of them, my mother's brother Richard Biggs, was special, and when he died - by no means an old man - last month, I shed some tears. Richard, always 'Richie' to my family, had come along quite late in his parents' life, and when his mother died at a very young age, my mother and her sisters Alice and Joyce stepped in to help their father to raise the young boy. Consequently, my mum's relationship with Richie was slightly ambiguous: he was somewhere between a brother and a son. But however the family chose to classify him, Richie was greatly loved.

In early manhood, Richie was clever and, I think now, just a little dangerous. He drove a motorbike, seemed to be very popular with girls, enjoyed his pop just a bit more than he should have, and was always adventurous. To this day I remember refusing to go to school on my first day unless my glamorous uncle took me there on his motorbike. I doubt if Mum approved of Richie riding a bike, let alone her five-year-old son, but it was the price that had to be paid if I was to go to school. I continued to demand this service for a week or so, until, I assume, my uncle realised that he, more than I, was being taken for a ride.

He did not benefit from school overseas, but joined the civil service and did well for himself, becoming an auditor at a young age. Then the adventure of adventures, he went off to South Georgia, where he did various administrative jobs for the government and survived long cold winters in the company of whalers and scientists.

After returning to Stanley for a spell, and enjoying time with his doting sisters and his brother Adrian, Richie packed his bags again and headed for the UK and, eventually, the South Pacific. His administrative and financial skills stood him in good stead, and he worked around Polynesia. Eventually, he wound up in New Zealand, where, in his forties by this time, he settled, married Marian and had two boys, Patrick and Steven.

My parents visited the family in New Plymouth several times, and eventually, Richie came back to the Falklands with his family, delighting us all. However, Richie, Marian and the boys had to return to New Zealand eventually, and Richie died there after a short illness.

He left us too soon, of course, but it was a good life, and it was well spent. He had not settled for the cosy security of the Falklands, but had taken chances, and travelled the world adventurously. Half a century after he took me to school on his motorbike, I still find him an inspiration.

The Falklands Publishing Phenomenon Rolls On

Twelve years ago, I approached a publisher of military themed books with the suggestion that they release my book about the Falklands War as experienced by the Islanders themselves.

I was not counting my chickens, though. After all, almost two decades had passed since the task force steamed off to the South Atlantic and the UK was mobilising for the wars that were sparked by 9/11. Would people really still be interested in the Falklands?

The commissioning editor's answer came as a surprise: "There are," he said, "three subjects which will always sell books - Waterloo, Trafalgar and the Falklands. They were close run affairs, but we won them in style."

The key, he added, was to find new angles to explore. So my book was published.

I wonder if that commissioning editor would now add Afghanistan and Iraq to that shortlist of military publishing evergreens.

The answer must be no, because (whisper it) we didn't win in Iraq and Afghanistan. While Servicemen and women fought every bit as bravely as they did in the much shorter 1982 conflict, we, as a society, do not feel anything like as good about Afghanistan and Iraq. The price paid in the Falklands was heavy, but at least it was generally perceived as a just war, and we emerged unambiguously victorious. Afghanistan and Iraq were tainted from the start by disingenuous politics and, at times, downright lies. These campaigns went from bad to worse, and (very sadly and unfairly for those who made the ultimate sacrifice) memories of these conflicts will always trouble the British.

I started thinking about this because I was asked to review a new book about 1982 (you see - they're still coming). Jeremy Brown, a former wing commander and air attaché to Brazil, has published an interesting examination of the wider South American impact of the conflict, and in particular about the nervous political environment among Argentina's neighbours as the generals blundered stupidly into war.

Uruguay and Chile in particular were highly apprehensive. Each had to profess public support for their neighbour, but they had their own territorial disputes with Argentina, and their historic respect for Britain was such that neither could bring themselves to be seriously hostile to London.

The author's description of the political tightrope walked by Chile is particularly interesting. General Pinochet's government secretly supported the UK to an extent that I had not previously appreciated. Indeed, he speculates that had Buenos Aires been aware of the covert assistance Santiago was giving London, there might well have been a punitive attack across the Andes.

The RAF was secretly granted permission to base a single Nimrod intelligence gathering aircraft on a small Chilean island several hundred miles out into the Pacific.

From there the crew could approach the Argentine frontier from the west and use highly secret data and voice monitoring equipment to eavesdrop on the enemy. The Nimrod carried out just three very risky and very high altitude missions over the theatre of war, but there is little doubt that the data gathered assisted the task force.

I was unaware of this fascinating story, as well as other somewhat nefarious RAF activities in Chile, and I read the book greedily.

It proves that the Falklands publishing phenomenon is rolling on, continuing to help Brits feel good about themselves, their politicians and their military 31 years on from the actual conflict.

Officer of 905 Expeditionary Air Wing, further boosted the fundraising efforts by holding an auction of three paintings which raised over £350.

Sqn Ldr Bird said: "I hope the money helps the RAFBF continue its invaluable work and that the profile of the charity continues to be highlighted by personnel here in the Falkland Islands."

1. What is the best piece of advice you have ever been given?
Work hard and follow your dreams. Don't let anyone tell you, you can't do it. If they do, prove them wrong

2. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with?
My Grandpa. He is 95 and he will tell me amazing stories about growing up in the Gorbals in Glasgow, his time in the army, being deployed in Burma and Africa, and his work as a civil servant providing advice in the employment tribunal

3. What in your everyday life drives you crazy?
In the UK it was public transport which, luckily, is no longer an issue

4. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be?
I would explore the islands of the South Pacific on a sailboat

5. What is your favourite TV programme (and why)?
At this time of year it is a toss up between Strictly Come Dancing and the X-Factor. I love seeing those with talent and hearing the judge's comments and, of course, the sequins

6. What is your favourite song?
OutKast - Ms. Jackson and Gotye - Somebody that I used to know

7. What would people be surprised to learn about you?
I am a qualified PADI dive instructor

8. What's the best movie you have watched recently?
One of my all time favourite movies is Top Gun

9. What is the one, single food that you would never give up?
Margherita Pizza

10. What is your happiest childhood memory?
As a family we would go on holiday to Europe. In the car we would have a tape with all the James Bond theme tunes which we would sing along to as we drove from place to place

MPC raises impressive £2,000 for RAF Benevolent Fund

IN the run up to the Battle of Britain commemorations, personnel deployed at Mount Pleasant turned their attention to raising money for the RAF Benevolent Fund.

This first major Falkland Islands fund raising effort for the charity raised over £2,000.

Squadron Leaders Phil Bird and Fozzie Foster led the efforts with people from across Mount Pleasant helping them and also being incredibly generous in their donations. 905 Expeditionary Air Wing held an Air Power Day on the eve of the Battle of Britain celebrations which supported the Benevolent Fund. Money raised on the day added to the overall total.

You can't choose your family

THE main reason I am writing now and not earlier is because I have been under a lot of pressure and in a state of shock due to the incident caused by my twin sister, Veronica Mieres. This has caused considerable damage to my personal image and credibility within the community as well as to my business and the importance of the facility Stanley Cleaning Services provide.

I would like the community to understand that my business had operated successfully for almost four years and the reliability of the entire team should not be measured by the actions of one person.

I appreciate that several clients were deeply hurt and had their trust in the business destroyed for which I am truly sorry. For better or worse any business runs the risk of employing staff who are not as trustworthy as they claim and who could cause harm to a business.

I truly hope that the people here can accept that I am an individual who is serious about running a business and providing a service to the community. I am a totally different person to my sister and I have never been involved in a situation like this before. I hope you understand my position and especially that there are things in life, such as family that one cannot choose.

Disgraceful cost escalation

THE escalation of the costs for the Public Jetty is a disgrace. Where does the blame for this lay? Is it the design engineers, the contractors or FIG? Perhaps it is a combination of all three, but like a great many projects we will never be told the full truth.

I probably know more about the public jetty than most people, having carried out a number of inspections and major repair work on 16 of the old piles and replaced all the cross head timbers, decking and handrails in the winter of 1995. Three people carried out this work over a period of three months which was completed ahead of schedule and on budget.

In 2005 and at the request of the Tourism Manager I presented a design and cost for the complete refurbishment of the jetty structure for the sum of £475,000. It is interesting to note that they have already spent over £400,000 and there is virtually nothing to show for this expenditure.

I do hope things change for the better when we have full time councillors, when they can get to grips with more local issues and prevent things like this from getting out of control.

Interest high in Falklands' oil at Offshore Europe

INTEREST in Falklands oil was high at this year's Offshore Europe held in Aberdeen according to Byron Marine's Lewis Clifton. The company enjoyed full exhibitor status in September.

The 40th anniversary of the SPE (Society of Petroleum Engineers) Offshore Europe 2013 Conference and Exhibition was commemorated in Aberdeen from September 3-6.

Stalling at Offshore Europe was provided by the three directors of Byron Marine: Stephen Clifton, David Allan and Lewis Clifton and with communications support from Hayley Alexander of Robert Gordon University. Mr Clifton said: "Daily visitor attendance at the Byron Marine stand was consistent and at times numbers were quite overwhelming.

"Global business interest in the Falklands' emerging oil and gas provinces and future exploration and exploitation activities was high. Conversations with existing clients and associates sometimes had to be cut fleetingly short, given the high numbers and range of visitors who are busily eyeing up Falklands business potential, in the short, medium and longer term."

He said a consistently striking observation from conversations was the high number of former

Lewis Clifton, Hayley Alexander, Stephen Clifton

RAF, army and navy personnel who had been stationed on or offshore the Falklands during the 1980-1990s who are now formidable business leaders and marketers in the oil and gas industry. Mr Clifton said they view the Falklands, "as a new and exciting, if not a challenging, business opportunity."

Representatives from the FCO, Department of Environment and Climate Change, and the Health and Safety Executive, stopped by as did the Deputy to the Secretary of State's Representative who as a young seaman, visited on HMS Ashanti for the official opening of Stanley Airport by Sir Vivian Fuchs on May 1, 1979.

"It is always good to renew old acquaintances from yesteryear, and none more so than Simon Healy, now General Manager of Swire Pacific Offshore," commented Mr Clifton.

Camp readers of Penguin News might remember Simon as a young deck cadet serving on Tamar F1 who time-swapped out with Byron Marine's engineering cadet Ian Pole-Evans for Ian's second year of adventures in super-tankers across distant oceans.

Mr Clifton added "We were privileged to receive Neil Hawkins from Premier Oil and some of his SURF colleagues, also Paul Culpin from Rockhopper Exploration and senior executives of the service companies who worked in support of the 2010-2012 Falklands offshore drilling programmes. Islanders Sarah Rowland and Derek Donnelly who have struck out on oil and gas industry careers also stopped by.

Networking at the global level is an important key to developing future business opportunities and striking new business alliances as the oil and gas industry edges forward and gains a toehold on the Falklands, believes Mr Clifton. Byron Marine distributed flyers at Offshore Europe from a number of Falklands businesses.

Over 55,000 visitors and 1,500 exhibitors descended on Aberdeen for the massive conference which showcases the latest industry innovations and technologies and provides an opportunity for face-to-face networking and the delivery of technical papers by industry experts.

Promoting its marketing strategy of 'Making Oil and Gas Logistics Work in the Falklands: combined with seeking longer term company development objectives, Byron Marine presented its credentials at Offshore Europe in 2011.

The Company subsequently enjoyed exhibitor status at Offshore Northern Seas (Stavanger: 2012), followed by attendance at the Offshore Technology Conference (Houston: 2013).

A STANLEY voter complains to the Registrar General that Falkland Landholdings managers Eric Goss and Ron Binnie were technically employed by the Government and should not be eligible to stand for election. However, the Attorney General points out that FLH is a private company which the Government happens to own. A Government spokesperson adds: "All farms have been subsidised and have been spending Government money. Farmers are allowed to stand. Neither Ron Binnie or Eric Goss are government officers. So they can stand."

For the first time the youth of the Falklands will be able to voice their opinion as to who should represent them on Legislative Council. A dummy general Election is to be held at the Community School to coincide with the real thing on October 14, with pupils being split into Camp and Stanley constituents and casting their votes. "It's a good exercise in community education," commented teacher Phil Middleton. "We're using the election to make them more aware of what goes on outside the school world."

Standing for Camp are Eric Goss, Tony Blake, Ron Binnie, Norma Edwards, Neil Watson, Bill Luxton, Richard Stevens and Kevin Kilmarin. Stanley candidates are Terry Betts, Sharon Halford, John Halford, Wendy Teggart, John Pollard, Dave Eynon and Alex Smith.

The Director of Education Sylvia Cole reports that some pupils are missing up to 30 weeks of education during their school lives. The problem is caused by parents taking children on holiday during term-time, sometimes up to three weeks tagged on to the winter school holidays, she says. The department is looking into enforceable legislation that requires parents ensure the attendance of their child during term time. Councillor John Birmingham says he would have to be more convinced there was a real problem before a change of law was implemented.

Residents of Darwin and Goose Green are upgraded to the new telecommunications network being installed by Cable and Wireless with a number of residents in the Fitzroy Ridge area upgraded during the previous week. On the down side we lose our local operators who were equipped with a wealth of information and unfailingly friendly on directory enquiries which is handed over to the Saint Helena branch.

Some 28 tonnes of fuel is recovered from the trawler Ocean 8 which is lying on her port side in Berkeley Sound where she sank after going on fire six months ago, but Director of Fisheries John Barton warns that small quantities of oil will continue to leak from the wreck for some time.

Bikers roar across Lafonia

THE roar of 20 plus bikes and quads could be heard resonating around the flats and creeks of Lafonia last weekend as a bunch of intrepid biking enthusiasts took advantage of a two day bike event organised by Gary Clement, Keith Alazia and FIMA.

On day one, we travelled from the old Walker Creek road camp via Bull Pass to Arrow Harbour and rode down the north and south coast of Torcida Point. What would have been a bone-jarring drive on precipitous balsam bogs was made a pleasure to ride on recently rotovated tracks.

Arriving at Walker Creek mid afternoon, the sun shining and flat calm weather, a perfect recipe for a few beers and a barbecue. Keith had arranged with the Falkland Islands Meat Company a superb barbecue pack that consisted of racks of lamb chops, sausages,

Kia Alazia leads the pack and it's all good with Adam Dickson burgers and steaks, superbly butchered by Nigel Leach, expertly cooked by Jimmy Moffatt and Ding Dong.

Day two: It would have been nice to travel down to the outstandingly beautiful area of Motley Point, however as it was lambing season we had to make do wards the Trap House, however this is an area where you can pin the bike on the infinite flats of Lafonia. Almost without exception most riders attacked their throttles with gusto.

Having reached Bodie Creek at around 2.30pm for a photo shoot it was back to the road camp to pack up and head for home. One of the lessons learned over the weekend, was to never ever get stuck in a swamp if Ding Dong was close by. You will get sprayed with a ton of glop, get that Mark!

Still resonating from the snoring of a host of bad-ass bikers, the self catering cottage at Walker Creek has once again returned to a peaceful and tranquil state. Great location, great weekend, great company. Thanks to everyone who organised or took part; can't wait for the next one.

Rat eradication enhances island environments

BEAVER Island LandCare (BILC) comprising Sally Poncet and Ken Passfield, carry out environmental surveys and rat eradication around the Falklands.

Since 2007 they have surveyed over 200 islands and carried out roughly 40 rat eradication. Around half of the approximate 500 islands in the Falklands archipelago have brown rats (Rattus norvegicus), which have had a devastating effect on native songbirds.

Sally Poncet offers the following update:

Rat eradication can be carried out on an island in order to enhance the habitat and to enable native birds to re-establish. It involves spreading poison bait across the island by hand in a co-ordinated grid so that all rats on the island can access bait. Eradication is a completely different concept to control. Control as carried out around settlements or in Stanley involves repeated baiting to keep numbers down, but with no expectation of ever getting rid of rats completely as they are able to re-colonise from other areas. Eradication can only be carried out on an island that is far enough offshore to ensure that there is no risk of re-invasion by swimming.

It is a one-off affair with bait being spread once only on an island, and if carried out correctly there is a 100 per cent chance of success.

Non-target mortality in the Falklands appears to be very low: it seems that most poisoned rats die underground so are not available to scavengers, and few birds appear to show any interest in feeding on the bait directly.

An update from Beaver Island LandCare

Porvenir at anchor, Ken and Sally going ashore

The pace of rat eradication has slowed somewhat since BILC finished the 750ha First Passage operation in 2011. This is believed to be the largest island cleared of rats by hand-broadcasting bait anywhere in the world. Most other large island eradication involve spreading bait from bait spreaders underhung from helicopters. The main reason for the pace of things slowing down is that we are running out of islands. Between Falklands Conservation and BILC, 69 islands have been cleared of rats since 2001. Most of the remaining rat-infested islands lie too close to other islands with rats. The distance rats can swim seems to be much greater than the 350 metres that was first thought. It could be up to 800 metres or more.

In 2012, BILC baited Sea Dog

Island at the mouth of Smylie Channel with a team of four including Diane Towersey and Ann Robertson. This seldom visited island was a very spectacular place with high cliffs and deeply indented gulches; we intend to return soon to monitor post-baiting changes and see if the eradication has succeeded.

In September of this year we baited nine small tussac islands in River Harbour with a team of three, including Diane again (some people must like the challenge). The islands were Kent Island, Kent Knob, River Knob, Rabbit Island and the Top Island group. Diane drove up from Port Stephens to join us on Porvenir at Black Point on Main Point land. Staying on board the boat Porvenir makes logistics simple as you have all your bait, food, accommodation and communications in one place so you have the flexibility of being able to work around the weather. Returning to a warm cosy cabin, stoking the fire and warming up with a hot rum sure beats camping in my book.

The project was jointly funded by the UK's Joint Nature Conservation Committee and FIG's Environmental Studies Budget.

Many thanks to Nick Rendell for administering the funding, Ian and Susie Hansen for access to Black Point, Peter and Shelley Nightingale for transporting and storing bait, and to Tony and Susan Hirtle for showers on Golding (the female team members appeared not to appreciate Porvenir's open air showering facilities for some reason).

The Conservation Ball 2013

Copies of Penguin News' photographs can be obtained for a donation to Falklands Conservation. Contact: farrah.peak@conservation.org.fk

EVERYONE enjoyed delightful food, drinks and a bubbling atmosphere at the lavish annual event on Friday. The Ball is organised each year as a fund raiser for the registered charity, Falklands Conservation, and has become the height of the socialite calendar and those just looking to parade in their finery.

The live auction raised £16,000 this year with the sealed bids adding another £3,000 to the total raised. There is still money from ticket and bar sales to be added but Falklands Conservation is confident they have surpassed their target of £20,000.

"The night went exceedingly well and has had only positive feedback from those who attended. The compliments have been plentiful and a number have said that it was the best one ever," said Dr David Doxford Chief Executive of Falklands Conservation.

This was the first Conservation Ball the new CE had been involved in and he said he was taken aback at how much preparation and work went into organising it.

The event was co-ordinated by Charlie O'Horo, "she did a fantastic job," said Dr Doxford. The Town Hall was transformed with artwork by FICS students and the Watch Group with a spectacular jellyfish light fixture all made from recycled materials.

Every member of staff was involved with trustees Louise Taylor, Sally Blake and Hay Miller in particular lending invaluable assistance along the way.

"There are many to thank for helping make the night such a success. Consolidated Fisheries Ltd has sponsored the event year on year. The complimentary wine on the table was kindly donated by Seafish Chandlery and the champagne and canapés on arrival were donated by the Falkland Islands Company Ltd. Bitter-Sweet hosted an exhibition to showcase the artwork and Dick Sawle did a magnificent job as auctioneer on the night."

Wonderful and generous donations from the following made the auction such a gigantic success, said Dr Doxford Companies: One Ocean, UK Hydrographic Office, The Malvinas House Hotel, Government House, Noble, Sea Lion Island, Cassard House Bleaker Island, FIGAS, SMSG. Artists: Ben Cockwell, Mandy Shepherd, Gris Cockwell, Bill Chater, Vicky Chater, Jess McPhee, Paul Faria, Stacey McKay and Year 9 FICS children.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

CAUGHT again! Two glorious days and I was gullible enough to believe that spring really had started on September 21 this year.

Wrong. Here we are back to a dull day and with such strong, cold winds that I'm quite happy to just plant yet a few more seeds, but only inside.

Nevertheless, the fine spell allowed me to clean up all the vegetable garden, and to put weed killer down on the bits I couldn't get at. The day was sunny and mild but, as we know, it can change very quickly. So to ensure I wasn't wasting the weed-killer I put about a teaspoon of washing-up liquid in every couple of litres of the mix. This ensures that should it start to rain or snow before the recommended six hours you have not wasted your money or time, as the soap helps the weed killer to soak into the unwanted vegetation and makes it weather-proof within half an hour or so.

Since I last wrote, I've spent a lot of time pricking out plants; brassicas, tomatoes, pumpkins, peppers and so on.

I would love to plant sweet-corn too as I for one think it is wonderful when fresh. However, although it grows very easily under cover and planted in blocks of four, you still have to shake the plants once flowering starts to pollinate them in the way wind normally would do it outside. And here's the rub; even walking through the tunnel they are in makes me sneeze and cough. In short I am allergic to their dust I guess, so I will not be bothering to grow them. Shame.

The windowsills are now quite chock-a-block with seedlings and pots of seeds just put up there to germinate. How I love this time of year. I'm pricking them out as soon as I can for conditions indoors are perfect for the development of something called "damping off". There can be many reasons for this, such as dirty plant trays, contaminated soil, too much water or, as is more usual, little plants which are too close to each other, lacking ventilation and perhaps, kept too damp.

There is a compound called copper fungicide that can be purchased which will keep the problem at bay if watered on to the trays at the time of sowing. But if the plants are already keeling over then really the only thing left to do is throw them away, wash the equipment and start again. Which is fine but it might shorten the season a little bit.

I am in no great rush to start the annual push of sowing carrots, parsnips and swedes. The ground is really not warm enough yet, and as the seasons always start later now, there seems little point in putting in seeds which will probably rot anyway.

The ground must still be too cold, new weeds are not germinating yet.

I will be putting in some early potatoes outside though, but will not plant any more inside this year. The self-seeds are doing quite well without any help from me! I have been digging out, as required for eating, the two rows of potatoes that I left behind last year. I think I will probably do that again this year. The potatoes are in great shape; not a sign of a sprout on them and beautifully firm, these are 'Cara' potatoes and perhaps, it might not work with other types though.

Meanwhile, with all the fruit trees and bushes reasonably clear of weeds (even if surrounded by dead grass because of the weed-killer) it is time to 'Spring trim' any tired looking branches and any which have taken a hammering over winter, and to feed them ready for all that wonderful growth to come. A little snack at this stage of potash and a mulch of compost should see them through.

All roses need roughly the same treatment and I hope (once I've rid myself of yet another cold) to get out there and trim them down to about 15 inches then feed them with a good tomato feed followed by a mulch of compost kept well away from their collars.

I treated the Buddleias (Butterfly bush) the same way but left them a little taller this year at 24 inches. They didn't make as much growth as normal last year and the Lathyrus (perennial Sweet Peas) I had planted between them to clamber up through them ended up covering them up instead.

Now that the vegetable garden is under some sort of control I hope to finish weeding the flower beds too. They are looking very messy and rather bedraggled carrying as they are all the dead and now unwanted growth from last year. It won't take long once I get going. It is quite surprising just how much dead wood pinks and some others plants carry. I waste a lot of time finding and admiring old friends in there, some of which I have totally forgotten about.

Just now I am delighted with the Chionodoxas (Glory of the snow) the starry white ones, the pink edged ones and the pale blue ones all look wonderful. And so too does the very small Scilla sibirica, it has the most striking electric blue I have ever seen. I must spread the clumps a bit when they finish flowering.

I must also break up the snow-drops which are just finishing. I will not be satisfied until they occupy all the flower beds. They don't affect other plants but they do look good when there's nothing much else around.

Winners of the Argos Challenge Trophy

THERE were two lucky young recipients of the Argos Challenge Trophy announced by Falkland Archery Association for the months of July and August last week.

Thomas Watson was the winner for the month of July and Jack Cartwright was winner for August.

Jack has only been with the club two months but has shown great determination and tries his best to learn all the little nuances of the sport of archery.

Thomas is one of life's optimists and is always cheerful even when the arrows don't land where he expects.

Both are a credit to the junior section of the club.

The recent addition of seven new juniors has added a real buzz to the club shoots and opened up the Argos Challenge to a much wider pool. They are a very competitive bunch of young archers all determined to do their best in their chosen sport.

Juniors make up almost two fifths of the regular shooters at the club and the future looks bright for the sport with their strong participation.

Mark Lewis, one of the prime movers in re-establishing the sport in the Islands, said: "It's a joy having the junior members in the club and these are the people who will be competing in this sport for the Falklands in the future. Thomas and Jack show great potential and great attitude and deserved to be awarded this trophy."

Archery Have-A-Go sessions have now changed to every three months. The next Have-A-Go session will be early December (an advert will be placed in the Penguin News).

Mike McLeod

A breath of fresh air

SPORT is not just about sweating; a general improvement in health and wellbeing is usually the aim. With so many individuals gearing up to lose pounds for charity by making dramatic lifestyle changes it seems timely that Carol Peck has injected another route to wellbeing.

Fitness guru Ms Peck has reintroduced yoga and pilates to the community thanks to the Narrows Bar opening up their function room for the sessions.

Ms Peck's real aim is to dispel any fears or preconceptions that you have to be really flexible to practice yoga. As the physicality can be modified to suit a class or individual need, yoga is a suitable exercise for all ages and fitness levels.

Monday sessions are 'Hatha Vinyasa' which works on coordinating breath and movement together, with less of a focus on the physical aspect. The key to these classes is aligning breath and body.

Wednesday sessions have more structure and involve moving through a series of structured postures and set routines.

The first session was an introduction to the poses that she hopes to develop over the weeks. "As people get to know the poses, then I hope to move on to a more traditional format as they will know what is coming up," said Ms Peck.

Consistent practice increases core strength and flexibility, and is also known to reduce stress and elevate mood by increasing the prevalence of 'good mood' neurotransmitters like serotonin.

But the side of yoga that she truly wants to focus on is the positive adjustments to ways of thinking, that yoga principals promote: "There are aspects other than physical flexibility involved in yoga. I'd really like the focus to be on wellbeing."

"I try to incorporate the meditative elements in the class. And maybe in the future, if enough people are interested, start a meditation group," she said.

There has been an enthusiastic response from public. The uptake has been high in all sessions with some returning students from her previous classes of 10 years ago. "It has been great to see them again and some new faces too."

The yoga sessions, along with pilates on Tuesday, are limited to twelve people and cost £4.

Because of the popularity of the sessions, and the generosity of Claudia at the Narrows providing a venue, it is hoped they will run until at least Christmas.

General Election
Thursday 7th November 2013

The Registration Officer wishes to inform members of the public that the closing date to apply to go on the Electoral Register and to vote by means of a Proxy, Postal or Postal Proxy is midday Wednesday 16th October 2013. After this time no application can be accepted.

What to do so that you don't miss your opportunity to vote?

If you think you may be entitled to vote, you are advised to check with the Registration Officer whether your name is on the Electoral Register.

If you believe that you are not going to be able to attend in person to vote on polling day (or at a mobile polling place) then you have the following options:-

- Proxy - a person nominated by you can vote on your behalf
- Postal - you can vote by post
- Postal Proxy - a person nominated by you to vote on your behalf can apply to vote by post

An elector who is registered for Postal, Proxy or Postal Proxy voting cannot vote in person unless they cancel the existing arrangements.

For further information or application forms please contact the Registration Officer on telephone number 27269 or by emailing registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk.

FIDC Oil & Gas Industry Directory

FIDC is building a directory for the Oil Industry that includes Falkland Island businesses already or wishing to become involved in the industry.

The Directory is being compiled in coordination with Premier Oil and Noble Energy, and could involve other licensees in the future. The purpose of the directory is to ensure that oil companies understand which local businesses wish to be involved in the industry and to identify ways in which both FIDC and oil companies can assist local companies in prequalifying for oil industry work in the Falkland Islands. FIDC intends to develop its own funding scheme to assist local businesses acquiring the relevant certification and management systems for pre qualification.

If you wish to be included within the directory and participate in certification discussions please contact Michael Betts – Phone: 27211 or E-mail: mbetts@fidc.co.fk

Accident a reminder that FIPASS is a working dock

AN investigation is being conducted into an accident that took place on FIPASS (the floating dock near Stanley) on Thursday October 3, involving two people being hit by a rope.

Harbour Master Malcolm Jamieson said because the accident was under investigation he was unable to comment. "at this time"

"However this should be taken as a reminder that FIPASS is a working dock," said Mr Jamieson.

The accident involved local businessman Steve Dent and his step-daughter Tiphanie, being hit by a rope, while Mr Dent was releasing a vessel's mooring line from the quay side.

Speaking to Penguin News yesterday, Mr Dent who runs a health and safety consultancy, said he did not apportion blame on anyone but himself, adding:

"and if there is a lesson to be learned from my point of view let the people who know how to do their jobs, do their jobs."

He added that such were his feelings that he was solely at fault that he personally called the dock manager to apologise for the events and thanked her for her prompt actions. He also emailed Lewis Clifton of Byron/McKay Port Services offering his apologies.

Mr Dent said: "Those of us in the safety world are just as human as the rest of the Falklands and the impact of human factors in safety is widely recognised."

"My family and I will feel the impact of last Thursday for some time, likely with me, for life such is the extent of my muscle damage. Thursday could have been a lot worse and Tiph clearly could have suffered fatal injuries.

Yes, I run a safety company and yes, I likely should have been aware of the risks, but, docks are not in my area of competence and I was completely unaware that the area where I stood with Tiph was an area at risk. That dock must have had 30 people on it that night and two got injured. Others with more knowledge could have given better guidance."

Mr Jamieson describing FIPASS, said cargo operations on the dock include any combination of trucks, cranes and forklifts and assorted types of cargoes from 40 foot containers to ships general stores. There are other hazards associated with ships and dock operations that may not be apparent to a casual visitor.

"For instance, suspended loads may not even be seen by a casual visitor," said Mr Jamieson.

Rigorous safety procedures at Stanley House

DIRECTOR of Education Annie Tempest has stated that the procedures for the safety of children at Stanley House are rigorous.

Ms Tempest responded to last week's Penguin News front page story that quoted the author of a Child Safety Review suggesting in the 1980s and 90s adult men had been allowed to take female children out of Stanley House for purposes assumed to include sexual contact.

Ms Tempest emphasised: "Staff and Parents all need to give their permission for students to leave the Hostel grounds if they wish to undertake any extra curricular activities or have weekend leave."

"In the case of looked after children Social Services will need to give their permission for students to leave the Hostel ground if they wish to undertake any extra curricular activities or have weekend leave."

She said no one under the age of 21 is allowed to sign out a Stanley Hostel student without the permission of parents or guardians and all staff at Stanley House are CRB checked.

Ms Tempest said: "There are policies and procedures in place for the safeguarding of Stanley House children and these are regularly updated. These policies follow good practice guidelines and UK standards."

The policy for the use of mobile phones is incorporated into the overall safeguarding policy. "Staff undertake regular training in Safeguarding Provision from Level 1 to Level 3."

"Computer access at Stanley House is monitored through our Educational Service providers. These services screen all material accessed," concluded Ms Tempest.

Hypothetically speaking - what would candidates give you for price of a jetty

GENERAL Election candidates do not have an easy task, faced as they are with the worry that promises made during the campaign will be waved in front of them by the public and media for their entire term in office, should they be elected.

Prior to the publication of official manifestos listing their priorities and intentions for the future, Penguin News took the pressure off and invited them to respond to a hypothetical question. We hope their answers will give readers a tiny insight into what matters to candidates as people, as opposed to campaigners fearful that promises made now will constrain and govern their actions if elected.

We asked them to respond with one hundred words or less to the hypothetical question: The public jetty project has been allocated £1.78 million. If elected and you were offered the opportunity to award the equivalent amount of public funds to any one project of your choice (and if none suited you, you were allowed to create one) that would benefit part of, or all of, the Falklands public - where would you direct the funds and why?

Candidate John Birmingham (Stanley) picked up on the issue of care saying: "A new school hostel properly designed modular system for possible expansion on the BFFI site. This would have the effect of freeing up the whole Stanley House grounds for not only more sheltered accommodation but also a care home for the elderly."

Melanie Gilding (Camp) felt the people were more in need of the £1.78 million than the jetty: "One project which would benefit the most residents and their families has to be the reintroduction of the Holiday Credit Scheme. At £1 per day, (but it should be more), we could fund it for three years. Better budget management should then allow it to continue. By helping offset increased airfares, it allows more families to travel and be ambassadors for the Islands. It also eases the extra travel costs involved in living on the West and outer islands. It makes a real difference to people's lives. Everyone gains." Cont. page 3

Comment by Deputy Editor Sharon Jaffray

PEAT cutting Monday is a Falklands holiday I hope we never lose. Not only is it completely unique to the Islands, to me it signals winter is over; time to take a deep breath and get ready for a new season.

It also doesn't hurt to spare a thought for those in years gone by who have not only sallied forth to carve the year's heating and cooking fuel from the ground but also managed to maintain vegetable gardens to feed the entire family, not forgetting holding down a full time job and probably working a bit of overtime or taking on a contract to make ends meet.

In those days it was an accepted way of life and if you didn't roll up your sleeves and get on with it you would soon become known as a bone idle son of a gun. The state of your garden and fullness of the peat shed was better than any CV when it come to getting a job locally - there was your work ethic on display for all to see - unlike the over-rated CVs of modern times which often contain so many embellishments and ego boosts that it bears no relation to the actual commodity on offer.

On the complete other side of the coin if you turn to the centre pages and read of Leiv Poncet's latest sailing exploits you will discover a rare and admirable modesty in his achievements. He doesn't mention the fact that the route he took is considered by fellow sailors to be one of the most difficult to traverse. "Look it up on Google Earth and know fear," said Ailsa Litzow in her blog after meeting up with Leiv in Tasmania. She and husband Mike have crossed the Pacific from California twice, once with a baby for crew on the Pelagic, so are no strangers to life at sea.

Ailsa described Leiv as a "sooooooper-understated guy," which pretty much sums him up considering he has circumnavigated the Falklands and other even less hospitable areas alone in a kayak, without so much as a drum roll let alone the fanfare which has accompanied other attempts at such feats.

Much as I would love to think I could cope with the challenge and solitude of such adventures, I fear I may have passed my best before date and resign myself to crossing oceans from the comfort of my armchair, book in hand. I've just set sail with the Litzows on Pelagic through the pages of South From Alaska, (available from Amazon and on Kindle) and it looks set to be quite an entertaining trip. Could look quite good on my CV too....

Drink driver fears for his safety in police car

MOUNT Pleasant man Jeremy John Clarke (29) was fined £350 and banned from driving for one year after he admitted drink driving in the Senior Magistrates Court on Wednesday.

Prosecutor Matthew McCabe told the court that acting on information received, police officers had approached Mr Clarke when he was parked behind Michele's Café just before midnight on September 21. A road side breathalyser test proved positive with a lower Camic reading of 61.8mg per 100ml of breath taken at the police station.

Mr Clarke admitted he had driven from behind the Globe Tavern to Michele's Café car park, but realising he may not be fit to drive, parked up and gave the vehicle keys to his passenger.

A former police officer who now works as a lifeguard at Mount Pleasant, Mr Clarke said that several of the police procedures had bothered him and he had made a formal complaint to the Chief Police Officer.

He had not been asked if he was in charge of the vehicle, he had been pressed to provide a breath sample while seated in the police vehicle when his training had been to ensure the provider was standing, he said.

He had not been asked when he had had his last drink or cigarette, he explained, adding that the hand cuffs placed on him had been too tight and had not been loosened when requested. He provided photos of abrasions on his wrists to the court.

Leaving Michele's Café car park, Mr Clarke said that PC Steve Dent had again driven up a one way system, he was placed in the back of the vehicle without a seat belt fastened which he was unable to fasten himself due to the handcuffs and the drive to the station had been erratic with corners taken at a speed not warranted by the situation. "I feared for my safety," he said.

Mr Clarke pointed out some further concerns he had about station procedures and explained that he had been offered the keys to the vehicle on his release an hour and a half later, but had refused to take them given that he had been charged with drink driving. He said he had preferred to collect them later that day.

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said he wished to be clear that he had not heard evidence or adjudicated on the procedural matters which Mr Clarke had raised and that the correct procedure was to forward his statement to the Chief Police Officer.

Sentencing Mr Clarke, Mr Gumsley said it never ceased to amaze him that people appeared in court for drink driving in a town which was small enough to easily walk from one end to the other. He pointed out that Mr Clarke had been well over the legal limit to drive (35mg/100ml) and it was not a case of just two pints. In addition to the fine and ban, Mr Clarke was ordered to pay £85 prosecution costs.

Fine and ban for vehicle crash

STANLEY man Christian Ian Minto (22) was fined £200 and banned from driving for 28 days after he admitted driving without due care and attention on Airport Road.

In court on Wednesday, Prosecutor Matthew McCabe said Mr Minto in his Land Rover 90 had collided with a vehicle driven by Duane Stewart near the Totem Pole on August 16. He said at 4.40pm, Mr Minto had pulled out from a layby where he had been parked behind another vehicle and hit the near side of Mr Stewart's vehicle activating the airbags and causing considerable damage.

Mr Minto said he had been blinded by the sun but felt he had made the appropriate checks for oncoming traffic, adding that he was not usually a dangerous driver. "Accidents happen everyday and unfortunately, I had one," he said.

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said he was satisfied Mr Minto did not mean to pull out, but also that he had not checked properly for traffic as another driver in the layby had seen Mr Stewart approaching.

Court costs of £85 were also ordered to be paid.

"At present elderly residents who need to be taken care of are looked after in small rooms located in an area within the hospital and in my view this is far from ideal and not somewhere for those who have given their all to the Falklands to have to spend their twilight years. Building this type of facility would not only benefit many people in the future, giving them a better quality of life, but would also free up much needed space in the hospital," she said.

Gavin Short (Stanley) felt similarly. He said: "My inclination, if presented with the sum that you mention, would be to use it towards either a properly staffed old folks home or the new school or school extension, complete with upgraded sports facilities. Our elderly deserve something better than being placed in the KEMH and whilst the staff I am sure do the best they can, they are not properly trained in that area - and only through continuing to educate our people to the highest possible standards can we continue to take more and more control of our country."

Jan Check (Stanley) also picked up on care for the elderly: "Although a hypothetical question I believe my proposal is realistic and potentially a long term benefit for many. I would use the funding to bring forward the design and building of a home for the elderly who are not in need of constant hospital care. While many enjoy and prefer independent living at home or in sheltered housing with some support, there are many who can no longer manage whether because of failing health or diminishing mobility."

Additionally it would free hospital space for consulting rooms for visiting specialists and to enable more emphasis on better primary care for all."

Mike Summers (Stanley) felt the jetty was worthy of the funding saying: "The public jetty is essential to the tourism industry; letting it fall into further disrepair, putting the safe operation of one of our key industries at risk, is not a sensible option. The current design maintains safe tourist operations, creates a more sheltered haven for tenders, and the possibility of regular passenger exchanges. This generates substantially more economic activity, always remembering that the tourism industry creates considerable employment for operators during the summer season; and properly managed, and with the right investment at the right time, tourism as a sustainable industry will be here long after the oil is gone."

Roger Edwards (Camp) was keen on the holiday credit scheme: "Already included in my manifesto, I have the idea of reintroducing the Holiday Credit Scheme. £1.78 million would nicely cover the four year term of the new Assembly at a rate of 50 pence per day per entitled person. It needs to be kept simple, a flat rate to be used on FIGAS, ferry, LAN Chile and the airbridge (or other airline if introduced) not transferred to foreign 'Grannies' or charities (other than SAMA) and capped at five years if not used."

Phyllis Rendell (Camp) said: "The last Assembly asked the question of the public what a suitable memorial to Margaret Thatcher would be. I responded that I thought a community venue for films, music, theatricals, presentations etc. would be appropriate. This would benefit a large proportion of the Stanley population as well as Camp residents when visiting Stanley. The centre would be named after Margaret Thatcher. Besides new and upgraded infrastructure to benefit the Camp community that I will be seeking funds for if elected, I think people also need to have some of their money spent on social amenities for all to enjoy."

Lynda Buckland suggested: "varyingly glamorous projects like a toddler paddling pool or building our own first class sports facilities spring to mind. But I think I would plump for employing local builders to construct a fully equipped 24 hour supported living facility, so that those who are unable to live independently can be cared for in a home style environment with dedicated staff."

Ian Hansen (Camp) said if he were only given one option, "from the capital works sense, then it would have to be allocating £1.78 million towards an ongoing annual rolling project of tarmacing the MPA road, which is of benefit to pretty much all of the community all of the time. If it were a case of using the funds in subsidy form, then the decrease of freight rates Island wide would be my choice."

Candy Blackley (Stanley) said she would like to see funding benefit the whole of the community: "The building of a family recreation centre would have to be my choice. A facility with an ice rink, bowling alley, small cinema and café, would bring pleasure and quality to all ages within the community. Such a build would look amazing under the brow of Sapper Hill overlooking the new developing housing site."

"Such a project could instil a new sense of pride and wellbeing for our future."

Accident a reminder that FIPASS is a working dock

Continued from front page: Anyone who gains access to FIPASS is deemed to be a user of FIPASS he said and therefore, "should fulfil their obligations and responsibilities for their own safety and for the safety of others. They should also follow the guidelines and instructions from FIPASS Management and be familiar with them. Any user of FIPASS must hold adequate insurance cover for employee protection, third party and public liability. Anyone who is not aware of the potential hazards involved has no place at FIPASS as they may put others at risk without even knowing."

Mr Jamieson said: "Folk will be aware that a review is underway which is looking at practices and policies and the legislation that is required to ensure not only for safety of navigation within the harbours but for safe operations in general."

This is the most wide ranging review of its type in maritime affairs in the Falklands, he said, "and should result in ensuring that we have a maritime regime that is fit for purpose in the 21st Century."

Access to FIPASS can be confusing for some. FIPASS can be a restricted area for security purposes under the International Ship and Port Security Code explained Mr Jamieson.

"However this does not cover health and safety matters as such and this is clearly higher risk. Therefore, folk can access FIPASS but they must be aware of their obligations and so casual visits should be discouraged. This issue is likely to be included within the investigation."

Guacho Rivero bill fully in force

THE Argentine 'Gaucha Rivero' Bill which bans the access of British flagged (red ensign) or convenience flagged vessels that have called at the Falkland Islands remains fully in force for Ushuaia, Marcelo Echazú, head of the Tierra del Fuego Tourism Institute, Infuetur announced last week.

He said: "The law is full in force," and, "the important thing is that the issue is known by tourism operators," and as such if they organise a cruise that includes the Falklands and then attempt to access Ushuaia, "authorities will not allow it."

Implementing a law which is enforceable is a "matter of self respect" added Echazú.

FIG's website goes live

THE Falkland Islands Government's new local services focused website, www.fig.gov.fk has gone live.

The aim of the new site is to create a new channel for residents to access Government services (in addition to telephone and face-to-face enquiries).

The site contains links to micro-sites constructed by departments themselves, which are currently information hubs but will be supplemented shortly by on line forms and further access tools.

FIG's Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher said, the new website would hopefully make it easier for people to find out about Government services, at anytime of the day.

Sex offence case must progress says judge

STANLEY man Kevin Derek Charles McLaren (42) appeared in court on Wednesday when both the prosecution and defence sought an adjournment for the case to be progressed.

Mr McLaren faces a total of seven sexual offence charges and one of harassment involving two complainants who were under the age of 16 at the time the offences took place. He was arrested and remanded in custody on August 21 and released on August 28 on stringent bail conditions.

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said he had previously granted a long adjournment on August 28, so the case could be progressed this week. Crown Prosecutor Matthew McCabe said, "the complexion of the case had changed considerably," and following further police enquiries additional complainants had come forward with another suspect surrendering to bail on October 21. There may be an application to link the cases, he said.

Mr Gumsley said the court was determined that the current case should progress and if other matters were to crop up they could be tried at a later date. He said he was anxious that all parties including the victims and McLaren himself should have something to work towards.

Mr Gumsley adjourned the case until November 5, saying he did not want any undue delay and expected a trial date to be set and a full plea and management hearing to be conducted at that time.

Court news

Youth given CSO for assault

IN the Magistrates Youth Court on October 2, a Stanley youth received a Community Service Order after previously pleading guilty to a charge of assault.

The case related to an incident when the 17 year old male entered the home of the victim late at night with another man and assaulted him. Juan Godoy is currently serving an eight month custodial sentence for the joint offence.

The Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley gave credit for the early guilty plea, the remorse shown and the apology to the victim by the youth. He also took into account though the aggravating factor that the youth had entered someone's home in the middle of the night uninvited.

Mr Gumsley told the court that usually in a joint venture such as this, there is a joint sentence. However, due to the youth's age, he was given 120 hours of Community Service ordered to pay £300 compensation to the victim with £85 court costs.

Custody ends, CSO increased

MPA RESIDENT Rick Marc Thomas received a Community Service Order after admitting to two charges of assault and one count of obstructing a police officer in their duties.

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said that though the level of violence was at the lower scale, domestic violence is a serious offence. Mr Thomas has spent six weeks in custody after breaching his bail conditions and was ordered to complete another 100 hours of community service to be added to the remaining 35 hours of his previous community service order. He is also to pay £85 in prosecution costs.

£685 fine for taking vehicle

SERVICEMAN Craig Stuart Kelly received a 95 hour community service order and was fined a total of £685 for taking a vehicle without consent and driving whilst under the influence of alcohol.

Mr Kelly admitted taking a vehicle belonging to the MPC fire station, before 'dumping' the vehicle at the sewage plant and driving another vehicle. He was recorded as being nearly twice the drink drive limit.

Planning and building approve 10 applications

TEN of 12 applications were approved by the Planning and Building Committee on Thursday, October 3, one was refused and another deferred.

The committee first addressed a deferred application from the meeting in September regarding KTV erecting masts in the Dairy Paddock area. It was agreed the requested information provided by KTV answered all their questions and the application was agreed subject to conditions.

An outline application to construct a dwelling on land to the rear of 1 and 2 Racecourse Road by Owen Betts was refused due to known difficulties of building on the land. The plot has an earth mat inhibiting development in the area and for this reason the committee recommended that the plot area be removed from the FIG list of prospective land for development.

It was agreed that an application from Paul Bonner to construct a warehouse and vehicle lock-up on Plot 34 Lookout Industrial Estate should be deferred until a plan of the build was provided.

Subject to conditions a number of new builds and developments were approved by the committee:

Constructions of single storey dwellings were approved for Lindsay Bonner at Plot 10 Sapper Hill, Victoria Lee and Lucas Bernsen at Plot 2 Sapper Hill, and, subject to a re-orientation of the build, for Lucille McMullen at 6 John Street. Ruth Reid was given permission to build a one and half storey dwelling at Plot 17 Sapper Hill and an outline application for Chris and Nancy Locke to build a dwelling with conservatory, garage and parking at 4 Philomel Place was approved.

John Clifford was permitted to temporarily site a container at Harbour View Knott, Eliza Cove Road; and an application by Derek Goodwin to construct a conservatory at 21 Eliza Crescent was also approved.

Sure South Atlantic Ltd were given permission to re-surface and improve their car park on Ross Road.

Falkland Islands Government's Public Works Water Section was granted permission to construct a new road to their proposed dam site and construct and bury 10km of water pipe and electricity cable in the Murrell River/ Moody Valley area. An outline application to construct a dam and pump station at Murrell River, with two 350m³ holding tanks in the Murrell River/ Two Sisters Gate area was also approved for the PWD Water Section.

It was noted by the committee how well researched and detailed the impact assessment paper was that accompanied the development and the efforts taken to impact the National Nature Reserve as minimally as possible. They also agreed the development addressed a serious need to improve water supply to Stanley and safeguard its future.

New road names for Sapper Hill

THE roads at the Sapper Hill housing development have been named as Diamond Jubilee Road with Rex Hunt Road for the phase one and two development sector and Sandy Woodward Road for phase three and four.

Goodbye Red Plum

THE Royal Navy's former ice patrol ship HMS Endurance is to be scrapped announced the Ministry of Defence this week. She was replaced in her duties in 2011 after a failing valve caused her to flood off the coast of Chile on December 16, 2008, causing 15 civilians to be airlifted from the ship.

HMS Endurance had operated in the British Antarctic Territory and around South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands throughout the austral summer.

She was tasked with providing direct support to a UK led, multinational Antarctic Treaty inspection team, landing and recovering British Antarctic Survey scientists, assisting with conservation work, helping survey the poorly-charted waters around the Antarctic Peninsula and improving the safety of other ships and mariners operating in the area.

Her duties were taken over by a former Norwegian research ship HMS Protector. The replacement vessel was leased to the MOD for three years while HMS Endurance's future was considered. £5 million was invested in improving HMS Protector's communications systems, enhanced armour protection and specialist hydrographic equipment including a survey motorboat for her new role in the Royal Navy, and was considered better value for money than the cost of bringing HMS Endurance's capabilities back up to scratch.

General Election November 7, 2013

A past boo boo and campaign no-nos

FOUR years ago the Falkland Islands Government Attorney General of the time was forced to apologise for advising election candidates wrongly regarding their campaign expenses limit. As candidates lodged their nominations they were advised that Stanley candidates could spend £265 and Camp candidates £351.

But those limits originally set in 1989 had been superseded by legislation passed in 2001, permitting £500 for Stanley and £600 for Camp candidates.

To add insult to injury the Attorney General sent letters warning candidates of the penalties they could potentially suffer if they overspent. A breach of those rules could constitute a criminal offence and disqualification from standing for the Legislative Assembly, he advised.

Fortunately, they were able to correct the error in time for everything to go ahead, and the 2001 legislation still stands; thus your candidates will be spending up to £500 for Stanley and £600 for Camp (the latter allows for travelling expenses).

The restriction is imposed so that wealthy candidates do not have an unfair advantage, and candidates will have to report their expenses within thirty five days of the election. They are also informed of corrupt practices such as bribery or 'treating' (for example paying for drinks for a person to corruptly influence their vote) as well as undue influence such as threatening a person to compel them to vote.

Illegal practices are also outlined and this could include inciting others to disturb election meetings or paying an elector to display election posters 'other than in the ordinary course of the elector's business'.

Penalties are in fact rather stiff with corrupt practice potentially meaning up to twelve months in prison or a fine of £5,000, or both. Illegal practice could bring three months in prison or a fine of £1,000 or both.

Personation or passing yourself off as someone else (perhaps an unlikely scenario in the Falklands) could mean imprisonment for two years or a fine of £7,000 or both.

So with all candidates suitably scared who can actually stand?

Well it is more a case of who cannot?

The guidance paper given to candidates outlines, among other disqualifications, that they cannot stand if they are a member of the regular British armed forces, or are acting in public office (although if they relinquish the disqualifying office they can stand). If they have an allegiance to foreign power they are out of the running, as well as if they are an undischarged bankrupt or certified insane. If they are subject to a prison sentence of 12 months or more or have been in the last five years then, again, there is no point filling in the candidacy forms.

So when will we know for absolute certain the final list of candidates?

Nomination forms for this year's General Election have to be returned to the Returning Officer by end of play on Thursday October 17, and the successful candidates' names will become public within four working days of close of nominations, thus before the end of the day on October 23.

Candidates will be paying a £100 deposit for the pleasure of standing and unless they receive more than one eighth of the total votes counted in the election they will not be getting it back.

Finally if you the public want to nominate candidates, (the candidate has to be nominated by two electors and supported by four electors) don't get too carried away. An elector must not nominate or support more than eight people in the election.

And if it all gets too hot out there for candidates they have the option of withdrawing before the close of nominations.

Hospitality Management - Up-Skilling Opportunity

Saint Helena has the opportunity to develop a sustainable hospitality industry attracting global tourists, investors and being a source of high value employment for the local population. The plans to build an international airport on the island is the catalyst for this opportunity and defines the timeline to prepare the hospitality industry for the growth and demands from these new visitors. There is recognition for the need to accelerate the development of the islands hospitality sector focusing on developing a local skilled workforce to meet these new challenges.

Bearing in mind the opportunities which will be presented by rapid development of the economy created by the inception of a new airport, we still need to support and develop the current hospitality capability and capacity on Saint Helena at Management Level. To ensure we address the 'Management' skill needs in hospitality, international accredited training facilitation is necessary.

Learning Hotel - My Pond Hotel

Enterprise St Helena and the University of Stenden in partnership with the Scholarship Awards Committee is offering an opportunity for initially up to four individuals to undertake a degree in Hospitality Management through full-time study in South Africa over two and a half years at Stenden University, commencing January 2014. Ideally carrying out the last six months as an industrial placement with an on island accommodation provider.

Situated in Port Alfred, Stenden South Africa, www.stenden.co.za provides the grounding to pursue a career in the hospitality industry; Stenden is affiliated with the world renowned Mantis Collection of Boutique Hotels and Private Game Reserves.

A Bachelor of Commerce degree in Hospitality Management is a prestigious degree one can hold in the international tourism industry. Having an international degree will ensure that individual hard work and academic achievements are recognised, as well as the practical experience and a high level of education gained.

Eligibility

- Must have entrance qualifications (at least 3 A/AS Levels and 3 IGCSE grades A – C, passes must include English. Mathematics or a Science Subject is a requirement.)
- Must submit a written document/essay on 'What makes a good hospitality manager'
- Applicants need to display insight in the hospitality industry and what it means to work in such an industry, actual industry experience is considered a plus
- Age requirements is 17 yrs + the maximum age is undefined
- In exceptional cases, mature applicants who do not satisfy the requirements detailed above may be admitted if there is evidence that they possess the intellectual and technical abilities to complete the programme successfully

If you would like to take advantage of this exciting opportunity please send your CV including a written document stating what makes a good Hospitality Manager to the Scholarship Awards Committee thro' the Secretary, Carol Thompson, ELC by Friday 25th October, E-mail: hram@education.gov.sh Tel: +290 22607. Applicants maybe asked to present a short presentation about their application to the Scholarships committee on 4th November.

Notes to possible applicants;

The Dean's discretion can be used for mathematics or the relevant science subject if it falls just outside the pass level.

You will be required to go through the normally process of admission to Stenden University.

Partners will expect a return on investment and therefore conditions will be placed on applicants in the form of a bond.

Mere mortals do still have a brain

AT a recent Public Meeting we mere public were informed that the MPA Road tarmac cost could not be justified as parts of the main substructure are now so bad they would have to be renewed at huge cost as well.

Now, I know I am just another dumb member of public in the eyes of the top level leadership here but logic (a rare work in FIG methinks) tells me that if these areas are so bad, then they will have to be renewed soon regardless, even just to continue with the gravel surface? This excuse story appears to have taken over from the earlier one of, 'MPA road use will not justify tarmac once Port William Deep Water Port comes in as all the freight will be landed there.' The penny, has, it appears, finally dropped in the upper echelons that the daily demurrage cost of the FIRS would be pretty steep even if they were willing to consider the diversion! Now these folks need a new smokescreen and decided upon the road base story. Cost of tarmac can be made as an argument I accept - but not all the claptrap we get fed each time as well.

This sort of behaviour pattern was again demonstrated recently when those of us on the electoral role each individually received a postage paid envelope telling us there was an election coming up and did we know what to do! I would hate to think of the money that could have been saved if:

a) The letters inside could have been placed in ONE envelope per household where two or more voters have the same address.

Or b) reverted to the system of 40 years ago where it was assumed the electorate had half a brain and could listen to a radio and read the local paper which told us the date, and a reminder of how to fill in the form at the time. In those days we had to vote for East or West in Stanley and Camp and also one for overall Stanley and one for overall Camp. It would take at least another 10 senior grades in the Secretariat to get their heads halfway around that today!

Although today in 2013, we mere mortals who make up the general public still have at least half a brain - it is apparent that many of those in charge have considerably less and assume we are also down at their level.

I won't even dare to mention the lump of scrap by the Public Jetty that could easily be moved by a couple of "Bens" in an afternoon with a lorry, a crane lift and a suitable metal cutter or oxy-acetylene torch.

Budget surplus expected for South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands

THE Government of South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) is expected to show a small budget surplus in 2013. This is despite further expenditure on reindeer eradication and Discovery House. (Discovery House, built in 1925 has been renovated to house scientists.)

According to the GSGSSI's recently released annual report, in the long-term the government will seek to maintain at least one year's operational costs in reserve.

Fisheries licence revenue accounts for around 70 per cent of the GSGSSI revenue. The 50 per cent reduction in toothfish quota between 2009 and 2011, accompanied by two poor years in the krill fishery, a dip in tourism and a rise in fuel prices severely stretched GSGSSI resources.

This led to a deficit of £674,000 in 2010. In 2011 the deficit was reduced to £125,000 and preliminary figures for 2012 suggest a deficit of £79,000. The 2011 figures include unused King Edward Point funds returned by BAS, which reduced the deficit considerably.

During that period GSGSSI sought to make operational savings, including using only economy travel and since 2012, purchasing fuel from the Ministry of Defence. GSGSSI also allowed fisheries patrol vessel Pharos SG to undertake short periods of sub charter work in Falkland Islands' waters in order to recover some of the charter costs. The 2012 figures include £160,000 spent on the reindeer eradication and Discovery House, so a deficit of £79,000 represents a balanced operational budget.

In 2011 the FCO provided additional funds to bolster reserves.

New Bistro and Bar in town

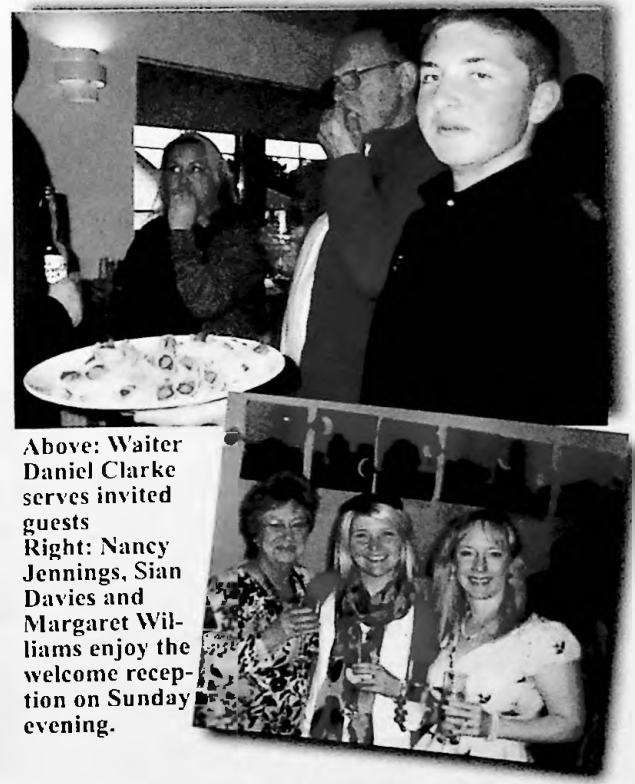

CAHOOTS Bistro and Bar located in the building formerly known as the Brasserie on John Street is the latest eatery to open its doors in Stanley.

Proprietors Caroline Cotter and Ali Brown of Wickham Heights Ltd who own Look-out Lodge hosted a reception for invited guests on Sunday, prior to opening for business this weekend.

Opening hours are 6-9pm on Friday; Saturday and Sunday brunch from 10am - 2pm and open again in the evenings from 6-9pm.

Caroline and Ali are now accepting bookings for events and say the menu will change on a regular basis.

World Mental Health Day October 10

Fish glorious fish

TEAM Tranquil is to distribute a small locally produced fish cook book as part of World Mental Health Day (WMHD).

To celebrate WMHD Team Tranquil is encouraging everyone to think about the amount of fish they eat in their diet and the positive effects that eating fish can bring to a family's health and wellbeing.

The idea for this year's health promotion campaign came from Team Tranquil's WMHD 2012 random survey within Stanley which showed that out of almost 100 people surveyed, only one third ate fish regularly more than once per week.

The recommendations suggest that eating fish twice or more per week can be part of a healthier balanced diet. There is great debate about the value of fish oil food supplements, however, experts agree that omega 3 and 6 essential fatty acids cannot be produced naturally, therefore consumption of fish is a natural source of these fatty acids.

Fish has been associated with cardiovascular function, brain and cognitive function, joint mobility, eye health, healthy skin and bones and a stronger immune system.

To help the community think 'fish', Team Tranquil will be taking some fishy snacks into the schools, with fish fingers in the IJS and tuna sandwiches for the pre-school children, plus a fish themed competition to draw or paint a fish. Camp Education will have their pupils involved in painting a fish or writing a story or poem about fish. FICS pupils will join in with fishy snacks and a fish themed story. A panel in Stanley will choose winners in various categories who will receive a prize.

Also, look out for tasty fish dishes around town in restaurants and cafes.

Although some fish can be expensive to buy there are many simple recipes that can be made within any household. To help share some good ideas the fish cook book will be full of tried and tested favourite recipe ideas donated by Falklands' residents.

For the complete fish novice keen to try preparing fish from scratch, Simon Issacs from FICS, will be preparing a special fish and chips recipe on FITV.

A spokesperson for Team Tranquil said: "To compliment Simon's fish dish Analisa Sturdee will be tackling the squid, showing you how to prepare squid from scratch (which is cheaper to buy) and how to make your own squid rings, a local favourite for many."

If you are interested in Team Tranquil and its work and are keen to find out more about this charity then please contact Ruth on 22169 for more information.

Leiv with a fine catch in Southwest Tasmania

Amongst the trees of Gordon Island, Tasmania

Crossing oceans Poncet style

Did you sail around the world? 'Well I guess so, since I set off eastwards and come back from the west...'

IN September 2011 yachtsman and Beaver Island resident Leiv Poncet set sail from Stanley on his yacht Peregrine on an epic journey that took him around the globe and back home again. His journey took him eastwards to South Africa, through Crozet Islands, Kerguelen Islands, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand and the Chatham Islands.

Here he shares his story in the typically modest style of his renowned seafaring family...

THE most traumatic moment of my trip came just days after leaving Stanley in late September 2011.

During a fresh northwesterly, a steeper wave than the others dipped the leeward rail underwater and swept an unsecured hindquarter of Brookfield's finest mutton off the deck. With about 3,000 miles to go until Cape Town, I was pretty upset.

Inaccessible Island loomed out of the mist and then vanished astern. A few hours later, I lowered the sails in the lee of Tristan da Cunha. The landing looked dicey. Had I waited a few days I'm sure conditions would have improved. Seeing the island would, I think, have been particularly interesting for me as a Falkland Islander. The feeling of isolation on small islands surrounded by big oceans can overwhelm those who come from large, populous nations. Seeing Tristan's steep volcanic slopes and limited habitable land gave me a glimpse of their point of view for once.

I stuck to my plan to head for Cape Town for provisions and a new mainsail. Although I did manage to see a bit of the South African interior for a few days, I was mostly the quintessential yachting, spending my time on board repairing and replacing stuff so that I could carry on to the next port to spend yet more time replacing and repairing.

My run from the Falklands to South Africa was relatively quick. Though shorter, the next leg took almost the same time. Day after day I railed at the unfairness of encountering light easterlies at 45 degrees south. The Crozet Islands provided a day's distraction as I passed close by. Through a combination of occasional favourable winds, much use of the engine and even more cursing, I inched closer to my goal: the Kerguelen Islands.

These French-administered islands cover two thirds of the land area of the Falklands and have an equally convoluted coastline. Although they lie slightly further north, the surrounding cold seas and other climatic factors give them permanent ice on the higher mountains. Alluringly, they are one of the least well-known subantarctic island groups. For my first few days there, I kept trying to compare them to other high-latitude islands. They lack the classic and striking beauty of South Georgia, but are harsher and more barren than the Falklands. All share similar wildlife. Some bays look like anchorages you might find here, while others are surrounded by unfamiliar and savage rock formations. I soon realised that they have their own defining characteristics and shouldn't be measured against superficially similar places.

From their discovery in the late 1700s, all attempts at settling the Kerguelen Islands failed. They are too remote, the climate and land too harsh and the native vegetation too poor. There is something in the barren, brooding basalt landscape that is intriguing for as long as you are a visitor but would, I think, become oppressive to anyone who tried to live there permanently. The remoteness of this group of islands only adds to the inhospitable feeling. Having made the trip by sea from the Falklands to various South American ports I'm well aware that we are not "just off the coast" of Argentina.

Baie de Recques, Kerguelen

However, the Kerguelen Islands are in a completely different category. The nearest permanently inhabited land is Madagascar, nearly 1,800 nautical miles to the northwest. In 1950 a scientific and administrative base was established on the islands. During much of my visit, two ornithologists from the base joined me on board as part of an agreement I had made beforehand. As well as giving me some company for once, it gave me an excuse to visit parts of the islands otherwise restricted to casual visitors.

I left reluctantly, having only seen a small part of the islands in the two months I spent there. To break up the long passage to Tasmania, I cleared Australian customs in Esperance. This was the northernmost point of my trip. A week or so of brilliant white sand and 20-degree water was enough for me. I headed for Tasmania, a mere thousand miles away. I made landfall in the spectacular southwest corner of the island. After nine days at sea I had the wonderfully refreshing impression of arriving in completely different country, without the bother of having to deal with paperwork first.

I spent the winter of 2012 in Tasmania, sailing around the island over several months. Having attended university in Tasmania some years earlier, it was fascinating to revisit places from the comfort of my yacht and to meet up with old acquaintances and family. My cousin was initially keen to sail with me to New Zealand in the spring, but pulled out at the last moment. I suspect his wife based her opinion of the Tasman Sea on a documentary about a kayaker who died trying to cross this stretch of water.

I was most curious to revisit Fiordland, which I knew from a month sea kayaking along its coast in 2005. The incredibly wild landscape and intricate coastline have a magnetic appeal, but there is a problem. Ironically, the bane of such a huge and impressive landscape is a tiny bloodsucking gnat locally called the sandfly. Though found throughout New Zealand, Fiordland is their stronghold. On a warm, still day thousands of them search feverishly for a patch of unprotected skin, burrowing through hair and clothing to inflict a moderately painful bite that itches for days afterwards. They go to sleep at night, when the mosquitoes emerge.

I spent the majority of my time in New Zealand in Fiordland and around Stewart Island, before heading north to visit friends in Christchurch and Picton where Peregrine's previous owners, who had emigrated from the UK, were now living.

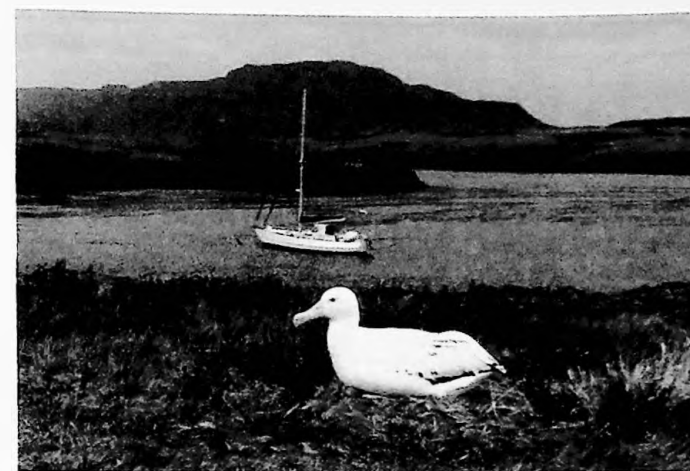

A few days' sailing from Picton brought me to the Chatham Islands. One can almost imagine the Falklands might look similar if we were a few degrees further north. Even though it had always been my intention to stop at the Chathams, I didn't spend as long as I could have done. By that time, I was well and truly on my way back across the Pacific, even if only in my head.

Setting off on a long crossing involves a moment when you must say, "this is it" and take the plunge. My moment came when I arrived at the anchorage I had hoped to spend my final night in and found it exposed to wind and swell. With no alternative anchorage nearby, my 4,650-mile passage back to the Falklands had abruptly begun. It took me half an hour to get my head around this. 33 days later I was home.

I endured no massive storms or major breakdowns, so unfortunately I have no gripping tales of survival, nor any desperate struggles with psychological issues to report on. I have been asked several times since I returned: "Did you sail around the world?" Well, I guess so, since I set off eastwards and came back from the west.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Cowgirl wisdom

An onion can make people cry; but, there's never been a vegetable that can make people laugh

Did you know...

Rule of thumb: Before thermometers were invented, brewers would dip a thumb or finger into the mix to find the right temperature for adding yeast. Too cold, and the yeast wouldn't grow. Too hot, and the yeast would die. This thumb in the beer is where we get the phrase "rule of thumb". Another derivation comes from the ancient custom that men could beat their wives but only with a stick no thicker than their thumb! Thus having someone 'under your thumb'.

Bring someone down a peg or two: In olden times people would share a drinking vessel called a 'pigin'. This was passed around the drinking circle. You drank down to your mark or peg. If you upset the crowd you had to miss a few turns, hence being brought down a 'peg or two'.

Pressed for an answer: Horribly, people used to have heavy weights loaded onto their chests in an effort to squeeze a confession out of them at any interrogation and were quite literally 'pressed for an answer'.

newsDécor-ative October medal for Roy Smith

THE golf season is now fully underway with weekly competitions from now through to April 2014. Last Sunday, 22 golfers contested the October Medal sponsored by Décor Services. In cold but fair conditions most of the field were left regretting their lack of match practice.

There are few, if any, that put in more practice time than the medal winner Roy Smith, a fine round of 74 and playing off a handicap of 9 gave him a nett 65. In second place and one shot back on a nett 66 was league high flyer Bob Gilbert.

The best round of the day was posted by Troyd Bowles, firing in three birdies on his way to a gross 73 and maintaining his lead in the League standings.

This Sunday's fixture is the popular 3-Ball Team Alliance, this is a stableford format with the best two individual scores per team counting on each hole. Please sign in by 9:00 for a 9:15am tee-off.

Waist shrinkers unite for charity

FORTY-EIGHT people have now joined the sponsored slim aimed at raising money for the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund.

What started with a few girls chatting about ways to raise money for the fund has exploded into a community slim down with altruistic motivation.

There is no overall target for money raised but organiser Carmen Miranda reassures that any amount will help the fund out and every penny counts: "All I hope is that people manage to lose weight, feel better about themselves, and help out a deserving cause along the way," she said.

There is plenty to inspire the slimmers aside from their charitable cause with local businesses offering some great motivation.

Supporting all the slimmers in their aim is Stanley Leisure Centre; the organisation has awarded a reduced rate for a three month membership and a one hour private gym session once a week.

The Wirchird is also helping with manager Jo Ellick offering to have a healthy menu option available at the restaurant with a discount for those taking part.

Practice Nurse Mandy Heathman will do fortnightly weight checks for those who wish to monitor their progress.

The individual who sheds the most weight will win a one hour sauna/jacuzzi experience for four people courtesy of the Malvina House Hotel.

They will also win a £20 DFC Clothing gift voucher donated by Deborah Ferriby.

A prize, yet to be revealed, will be donated by the Seafish Chantry for the person who raises the most money.

Miss Miranda thanked all the businesses and individuals for their help in supporting the scheme: "It's just amazing how kind and generous people are in this little town of ours," she said.

If you would like to join the slimming group, or make a donation, you can contact Carmen on Facebook, mobile: 55972 or email: owls@horizon.co.uk to hop on board.

There is also a facebook page 'Sponsored Slim for Stephen Jaffray Fund' where members can chat, post questions and share healthy recipes and tips.

Tapout XT Circuit schedule

The 90 Day Tapout XT Challenge at the FIDF Hall, Mon-Fri, 5:30pm - sessions are free and all kit required will be provided though you should bring a towel and water. Sessions can be taken at your own pace but make sure you're medically fit to take part.

General Election Thursday 7th November 2013

The Registration Officer wishes to inform members of the public that the closing date to apply to go on the Electoral Register and to apply to vote by means of a Proxy, Postal or Postal Proxy is midday Wednesday 16th October 2013. This means you only have five days left to apply. After this time no application can be accepted.

What to do so that you don't miss your opportunity to vote?

If you think you may be entitled to vote, you are advised to check with the Registration Officer whether your name is on the Electoral Register.
 If you believe that you are not going to be able to attend in person to vote on polling day (or at a mobile polling place) then you have the following options:-

- Proxy - a person nominated by you can vote on your behalf
- Postal - you can vote by post
- Postal Proxy - a person nominated by you to vote on your behalf can apply to vote by post

An elector who is registered for Postal, Proxy or Postal Proxy voting cannot vote in person unless they cancel the existing arrangements.

For further information or application forms please contact the Registration Officer on telephone number 27269 or by emailing registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

A GROUP of 23 Gurkhas revisited the Islands this week staying with families and Liberty Lodge and travelling around the Islands they bravely fought for in 1982. For the majority of the group it was the first time they had returned.

It has long been a legend of the Falklands War that the invading Argentines defending Stanley were so terrified of the Gurkhas, that they ran from their positions before the small but ferocious Gurkhas were able to make contact.

Following the Argentine surrender those same Gurkha soldiers stayed in Camp settlements on both East and West Falkland where they were held very dear by the residents. This week a convoy of volunteer drivers ensured that the group was able to revisit these places.

The visit was funded by the Falklands Veteran Foundation for which the Gurkhas expressed their gratitude also thanking SAMA82(FI) Chairman Gary Clement and Liberty Lodge manager Ellen Davis for organising their visit.

Your election candidates

AT the time of Penguin News going to press the following persons have confirmed they will stand for the November 7, General Election:

Stanley:

- Norman Clark
- John Birmingham
- Mike Summers
- Lyn Buckland
- Gavin Short
- Barry Elshy
- Teslyn Barkman
- Candy Blackley
- Jan Cheek
- Faith Felton

Camp

- Ian Hansen
- Phyl Rendell
- Roger Edwards
- Melanie Gilding
- Sharon Halford

The official list of names was scheduled to be released by the Returning Officer Keith Padgett late yesterday afternoon. The official list will be published on www.penguin-news.com

Why should I vote for you?

IF past elections are anything to go by the public turn out for the November 7 General Election could well be upwards of 80 percent, a proud claim by any country. The difficult part is, how to use those votes. Who should we vote for? Who has done well in the past? Who can do better?

In an attempt to assist you in your decision making Penguin News invited former MLAs to 'boast' about their achievements and asked new candidates to tell us why they think they could do better.

Beginning with those Camp candidates who responded, Ian Hansen explained he, "inherited," the Minerals portfolio, adding: "I have supported the Director of Minerals and have assured oil companies that the Government can be approachable and trustworthy partners to work towards exploitation of commercial oil."

Speaking of working with his, "Falklands Landholdings colleagues," he said he believes, "we have removed the risk of again becoming reliant on subsidies or overdrafts. A healthy reserve has been created with wind power consequently being introduced at North Arm, soon Fitzroy and Goose Green to follow."

Sharon Halford told Penguin News she, "assisted Directors and others in getting policies in place across my portfolios that were of benefit to the end users and also I like to think that I injected some Falklands' common sense at times."

She said she, "helped many in the areas of medical and social. I hope I was firm but fair on all committees under my chairmanship. However my ambitions could not have been realised without the majority agreement of MLAs."

Newcomer to the hustings Phyl Rendell feels one of her strengths will be listening to people. "I think you need to find out what the concerns of your electorate are, and take them into account when making decisions. If they are not acted upon, give the reason. Examples that spring to mind are the decision to build a port at Port William before all the facts are known, people's plea for the MPA road to be surfaced and the abolition of MST."

Melanie Gilding said she feels, as a newcomer, she could bring a fresh approach and open mind to the team, without any preconceived ideas. "I also hope to put my legal training, and years spent in practice, to good use. Twenty-four years here, (20 in Camp), have given me a feel for the Falklands and its challenges. The Assembly's role and the future of the Islands, are entering a new phase, and I think I can make a real and meaningful contribution."

Moving on to Stanley candidates, fresh to the hustings, Faith Felton, asked by Penguin News what she could bring to the party replied: "A different perspective, the willingness to stand up and fight for what I believe and an inability to rein in my tongue if

HAVING wiled away quite a number of hours listening to talks by oil executives about short and longer term plans for oil exploration and (hopefully) exploitation in Falklands waters, it was refreshing to have the opportunity to question oil and gas recruitment businessmen David Spencer and Ken Goddard (see page 10) last week about what the industry could mean to the man in the street.

Not least, because reading back over the piece mid week it inspired the thought that there's something of a gulf between how the world perceives the effect of an oil industry on we residents, and how Falkland Islanders view it.

While the British media still occasionally waxes lyrical about Islanders being set to become multimillionaires (I'm glad I got a larger handbag for my birthday - more space for the alleged mountains of dosh coming my way) most residents will be inclined to have the more modest expectation that, just for example, an apprenticeship in welding might lead to increased and reasonable employment opportunities in the future.

Of course not all overseas journalists are completely devoid of the realities. A few months back I happened to comment to one that as a local newspaper editor I couldn't see myself getting rich off the back of oil, to which he replied in a mildly sympathetic tone, "no, you're right, probably not."

Ah well.

Still, based on the information expressed by David, Ken, their intended business partner, Cheryl Roberts, and also Premier representatives (in the latter's public presentation last week) the opportunities will be there; and in the case of this industry, not simply there for those with the finances to invest or with armfuls of scholarly accomplishments, but for the boy or girl with a practical trade under their belt.

I wonder if it's too late for me to train as a bolter?

SO the hustings continue and what a marvellously mixed bag of candidates. While responses to the hypothetical question we posed the week before last week were a little yawny to say the least (or perhaps it was the fault of the question) the diverse and informative answers to this week's question posed, reflect well on the competitors. For readers' information PN has been rather springing the questions on the candidates - a very mild taster if you will, of the pressure they will be under should they be elected. It has certainly been an interesting exercise for us to observe who responds quickly and enthusiastically and who doesn't.

Krysteen is new PR manager

ISLANDER Krysteen Ormond has been appointed as the Government's Public Relations Media Manager.

Miss Ormond has recently submitted her Masters thesis at the University of Nottingham, where she also studied languages and culture as an undergraduate.

She has been actively involved in raising awareness of the Islands and travelling with MLAs over the last couple of years and says she is really looking forward to the new challenges that the PRMM role will present, "and to look at new ways of making sure our Islands and our message is put out there."

Why should I vote for you?

Young newcomer Teslyn Barkman believes the, "opinions of the next generation have been undervalued and issues overlooked because they have felt they couldn't confide their worries and have them be respected. I can offer an approachable face to voice concerns to and will endeavour to include them in policy decisions."

She added: "The experience I can gather adapting to this role is also an investment into our political future. I hope to relay what I learn but I hope to teach former MLAs a little as well."

Another newcomer Lyn Buckland says she would improve on opportunities for local people, and businesses: "During my six years as a Business Advisor I have seen both strive to develop, only to be restrained by FIG. Just because someone has not got it right at school or in their early career, it doesn't mean that they can't because they are the wrong side of 30."

She said she would also push for a large cash injection into the hospital to get the best doctors and equipment possible, "we should never scrimp on health."

Candy Blackley feels she could provide a closer link between the community and the Government, by listening and involving the people in the decision making process. "This would enable everyone the opportunity to contribute their ideas, and equally their concerns. Therefore a more cohesive approach for decision making and by involving the public, debate will be constructive and open and the outcome more fruitful," she said.

Turning to former MLAs, Jan Cheek said education, "is indisputably in better shape than when I took over. While my knowledge and keen interest may have played some part, most credit must go to the staff and management who have worked through some difficult times. I have resisted the temptation to 'micromanage' instead supporting development of policies to improve and expand what is on offer."

Mrs Cheek is also, "proud of helping plan over several years, our successful public diplomacy campaign to counter increasing Argentine economic and diplomatic aggression."

Barry Esby explained that as a result of new MLAs being full-time, "their relationship with the department Heads will change. If elected, I see myself working very closely with the Heads of my departments to make policy decisions and give a vision as to how I see those departments in five and 10 years time. The Directors would then use their expertise to move their department towards that goal."

He asked: "How else can Directors from the UK know what developments would be right for the Falkland Islands?"

Mike Summers' principal portfolios were Tourism, Rural Development Strategy and Agriculture he explained. "In tourism my early action was to find a solution to the dysfunctional organisation of the industry, and find an agreed solution to get all parts working together more closely. The Rural Development Strategy had not been adopted, and abandoned as 'too difficult'. I supervised its restructure, completion and adoption, and the early elements of implementation. Agriculture has been less troublesome and the industry is doing well."

Gavin Short concludes saying: "As far as I am concerned across all of my portfolios it was a team effort - from the lads and lasses on the ground through the management levels and up to MLAs and often involving other departments outside of my portfolios. More importantly it also involved the general public, feeding in their ideas, wishes and concerns. I hope in most cases I had a light touch and went out of my way to try and not micromanage."

Firefighters extinguish the vehicle fire near the Mt Kent turn-off

Picture M Elstow

Firefighters to the rescue

THE Fire and Rescue Department was called to a vehicle which was on fire near the Mount Kent turn off at 1.57pm on Saturday.

The owner of the vehicle Tanzey Gough said she and her friend Lynsey Trevaskis were travelling along the road with their young daughters Shaniqua and Skye. When Tanzey had stopped the vehicle and lifted the bonnet to check the windscreen washer reservoir, the engine started smoking and went on fire.

The fire service tasked eight firefighters and three fire vehicles to the scene and on route to the incident were informed that all occupants were out of the vehicle. Station Officer Gerard Jaffray told Penguin News.

He explained that two fire fighters wearing breathing apparatus used a high pressure hose reel to tackle the fire. Two other fire fighters in 'safe air' used another high pressure hose reel and concentrated a jet into the engine compartment.

"It took approximately 10 minutes to extinguish the fire," said Mr Jaffray.

Miss Gough said she, Miss Trevaskis and the children had quickly moved away from the vehicle and had not been in any danger.

She wished to thank the two passers by who had stopped and checked to ensure the burning vehicle was not occupied and had then kindly waited up on the hill with them until the fire fighters arrived. Miss Gough said it had been very kind of them, adding that unfortunately she had not got their names so she could not thank them personally.

Neighbourhood policing model

THE Acting Chief Police Officer, Chief Inspector Len McGill (above) has introduced the Neighbourhood Management Policing Model to the Royal Falkland Islands Police and the Falkland community.

CI McGill said this model of policing was designed to forge closer ties between the police service and the community it serves. To achieve this, named police constables are given geographic and thematic areas of responsibility.

"Over the next three weeks police constables, with lead roles in the delivery of the model, will conduct a process of introduction and publicity, through all media outlets and start to work within their allocated areas. The introduction of this model of policing is in response to the satisfaction survey conducted last year," he explained.

Conditional discharge for text harassment

STANLEY man Steve Coppell Bonner (31) was given a six month conditional discharge and ordered to pay £385 compensation after he admitted harassing a man and causing damage to his vehicle.

Crown Prosecutor Matthew McCabe said that the charges related to incidents which occurred after Mr Bonner's wife had entered into a relationship with the complainant, Jeremy Poncet.

The harassment occurred between April 3 to September 5 and the damage to a vehicle on May 18. Mr Bonner had visited the home of his wife and the complainant while under the influence of alcohol. Mrs Bonner had called the police and Mr Bonner had kicked Mr Poncet's vehicle before leaving the area. When Mr Poncet informed Mr Bonner of scratches on the vehicle by text the next day he had offered to pay for the damage. Mrs Bonner had said she did not wish to make a complaint.

Mr McCabe said texts had become "increasingly abusive" and on September 5, Mr Poncet had made an official complaint.

Defence lawyer Alison Inglis said Mr Bonner was the sole carer for his children since the marriage breakdown, adding that his actions, for which he had apologised to all concerned, had been a reaction to "seven stressful months."

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said he was dealing with a man who, "didn't take it very well," when his wife left him for another man. The texts were, "not pleasant, but not the worst texts I have seen in court."

He noted Mr Bonner was of previous good character, saying he had no doubt that if it were not for the domestic situation he found himself in, he would not be in court.

"I have no doubt you are not a bad man," he said, adding however that having acted in a petty manner there were consequences to be faced.

In addition to the conditional discharge and compensation, Mr Bonner was ordered to pay £85 court costs.

Curfew for sexual offences with young girl

STANLEY man Bruce Adam Humphreys (26) appeared in court on Wednesday facing charges of sexual assault and grooming a 13 year old girl.

The charges relate to an incident in 2012 about which Mr Humphreys was interviewed in August this year.

Given that during that interview Mr Humphrey had admitted touching the girl, Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley questioned why the case had only just come to court in October.

Crown Prosecutor Matthew McCabe, said it was in fact part of a "wider police enquiry" and more information would be available in due course.

Defence lawyer Angela McGuinness requested an adjournment as she had only received the relevant documents on the case that day. The case was adjourned until October 23, when Mr Gumsley said he would expect pleas to be entered to the charges.

Mr Humphreys was released on bail with conditions which include a 9pm to 7am curfew, not contacting the complainant and not entering the street where she resides.

Mr Gumsley said he hoped to rely on the discretion of the police with regard to the curfew, given that Mr Humphreys' wife was about to give birth.

MPA man released on bail

MOUNT Pleasant man Mario Clint Youde (28) was been remanded in custody from October 15 to 17 while appropriate accommodation in Stanley was sourced to meet bail requirements, pending a further court appearance on October 23.

Mr Youde faces three charges of assault against his 24 year old partner and one of criminal damage.

Mr Youde is alleged to have assaulted his partner on three separate occasions dating back to April and during the last incident on September 15, dropped her laptop and Kindle in a fish tank, an action he admitted in police interview saying it was to, "calm her down."

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said he was "bemused" that the Crown now perceived some sort of danger for the victim when it had been a month since Mr Youde had been interviewed and admitted criminal damage. "You'd expect it to be investigated and charges made immediately," he said, adding that he did not see the current procedure as being the best course of action to protect victims.

Q Are all papers which are advertised as being available from Gilbert House also available in hardcopy (ie printed out) for those who do not have access to computers and/or printers?

Clerk of the Assembly Claudette Prior provided the following answer

A Public papers from Government Committees and Executive Council are available from Gilbert House.

The preferred method of distribution is by email.

However, those people who do not have access to computers and/or printers can request hardcopies. Copies will be prepared as soon as practical and depending on the volume of photocopying required a charge may be made to cover costs incurred.

South Georgia shipping news

THE krill fishing season in South Georgia tailed off during September reports South Georgia News.

One trawler finished fishing on September 2 and another on September 3, leaving two vessels fishing for krill and obtaining moderate catches.

One of the remaining vessels then suffered engine problems and departed the fishery to sail to Punta Arenas, Chile, for repairs.

The last trawler continued fishing with moderate success until leaving the fishery on September 24.

A reefer anchored in Cumberland Bay on September 13 to receive krill from a trawler, but transshipping operations were postponed due to bad weather.

Two trawlers were scheduled to arrive to be licensed to fish for icefish in early October, and one trawler to fish for krill.

The German research vessel Polarstern has been conducting research in the area throughout the month.

HMS Richmond was on patrol in the SGMZ towards the end of the month and anchored off Hope Point on September 27 for a three-day visit.

HMS Richmond is currently on a seven month Atlantic patrol providing on-going protection and reassurance to British interests within the region.

Director of Education: School environments for Stanley and Camp must be equitable

MANY of the Falkland Islands Government (FIG) Camp Education buildings are in need of upgrade and refurbishment, stated Director of Education Annie Tempest in a report to the meeting of the Education Board on Tuesday Morning.

She noted that the buildings, "are to be surveyed as soon as possible and plans formulated within the budget process to respond to the surveys."

Ms Tempest, who has visited the Camp since her relatively recent arrival in the Islands believes standards of the school environment for children in Stanley and Camp, "must be equitable."

Surveys will also be carried out for accommodation of Education staff living and working in Camp, "to ensure equity with Stanley counterparts," adding, "this is an important factor in terms of recruitment and retention of teachers."

Ms Tempest commented that Camp Education had some very good teachers, "and we need to keep them."

On subject of school staffing generally she reported that an advertisement had been placed in teaching UK resources magazine TES for an English teaching post as well as a Complex Needs Teacher with a January 2014 start date. She said short-listing will take place on October 18 and telephone interviews on October 22.

Ms Tempest also confirmed that the staffing vacancy for an Examination/Vocational Post had not attracted any applicants. She said the salary needed to be revisited as well as the experience required, "as the grading did not reflect the reality of the position or the responsibility."

Internal positions for Teaching and Learning Responsibilities (TLRs) were advertised this week for both academic and pastoral responsibilities.

Among other news she noted that: "New staff induction has gone well with Richard Lilley joining FICS to teach PE along with Jenny Sol returning to the Islands to teach Art."

Regarding physical work on the Falkland Islands Community School Ms Tempest reported that Director of Central Services Simon Fletcher met with the Head Teacher and Deputy to discuss the impact of the proposal to change the indoor dry changing rooms to a fitness centre. The impact for the school will comprise the modification of the existing cloak room areas to, "further improve the facility."

She said: "Issues surrounding safeguarding and children using public changing areas is a potential risk factor we need to consider and minimise. To this end, we are looking to use our own internal areas with the support of funds from the contingency allowance Simon Fletcher has factored into his paper to Ex-Co last session."

Ms Tempest also told the committee that Safeguarding Children Level 1 training had been delivered to staff.

She also expressed concern that as a result of 28 new children in school this year and with the total up to 280: "Three year groups are completely full, resulting in implications for recruitment of new staff."

Human Resources has been informed of the figures.

It was also noted at the meeting that planning permission had been granted to relocate the portacabin currently on the West side of Stanley House to another part of the grounds, and under the Training Centre heading, the Apprenticeship Co-ordinator and the young apprentices had started work on the OFTEC (Oil Fired Technician) portacabins.

Penguin news

A RESEARCHER who has studied captive penguins in Dubai is heading to South Georgia to conduct research on a natural population.

Dr Brent Stewart, an American marine scientist, had a brief period at Ski Dubai to study its population of Gentoo and King penguins ahead of the planned three-week expedition to South Georgia in October. According to South Georgia News, his research comprises studying and recording penguin calls, which are unique to each bird and enables them to recognise each other even amongst thousands of others. He will compare the South Georgia recordings with ones made from the penguins in Dubai. By comparing recordings between males and females and between captive and wild birds, Dr Stewart hopes to learn more about how their calls enable breeding pairs, and parents and offspring, to identify each other.

He will also study differences in the birds' plumage and how these change with age. Dr Stewart is expecting to fly a drone over the bird colonies to help provide an accurate count.

Ski Dubai, which features an indoor ski slope, is funding the research trip with a grant worth £85,000 as part of it's 'Snow Penguins' programme, which aims to educate visitors about the species and the threats facing them in the wild.

Islands' Chamber of Commerce trade talking in Montevideo

A DELEGATION from the Falkland Islands Chamber of Commerce left Mount Pleasant Airport on Saturday bound for Montevideo. By Monday morning the conference room of the After Hotel in Montevideo's Pocitos district was full for their first meeting with their opposite numbers from the Uruguayan-British Chamber of Commerce.

The delegation, which was representative of most sectors of economic activity in the Islands consisted of: Roger Spink (President), Hamish Wylie (Vice-President), Cheryl Roberts (Treasurer) and members: John Barton, Eugene Hurley, Mike Butler, Stuart Wallace, James Wallace, Ailie Biggs, Russell Morrison, Carl Stroud, Mark Neves, Michael Betts and Neville Hayward.

Opening the meeting on Monday morning, the Vice President of the Uruguayan-British Chamber of Commerce, Guillermo Wild, welcomed the Falkland Islands delegation to Uruguay and gave an outline of his Chamber's organisational structure and activities. By means of a fact-filled graphic presentation he provided a comprehensive overview of Uruguay's economy and outlined the aspects of its geographical position, political stability and lack of corruption which combine with the country's fiscal situation to make it a potentially competitive and attractive trading partner for the Falklands. He hoped that during their visit, the Falkland Islands Chamber's members would find many things of interest, make useful contacts for the future and discover many opportunities to advance trade between the two countries.

There followed a presentation on the Falkland Islands Chamber of Commerce and the reasons for the current visit by President Roger Spink, which was preceded by a brief introduction by the Falkland Islands Government's Director of Fisheries and Agriculture, Mr John Barton. Mr Barton said that it was a source of great pleasure to him to be back in the city where he had spent many of his formative years as a pupil at the British School and he wished to assure his Uruguayan listeners that the Falkland Islands Government would be one hundred percent behind any initiatives to expand trade with Uruguay which might arise as a result of the delegation's activities. With the exception of imports of tobacco products and alcohol, there were no goods subject to import duty and the procedures for goods like fresh food stuffs, which required certification were, he said, straightforward and transparent.

Prefacing his remarks with an outline of the Falkland Islands

Chamber of Commerce's composition, in his presentation, Mr Spink briefly reviewed the history of trade between the Falklands and Uruguay, including the long period ending in 1971 when the regular passenger service from Montevideo by ship provided the Islanders' principal link with the outside world.

The current visit by the Chamber of Commerce delegation, said Mr Spink, came at a time when the Falkland Islands were poised for dramatic expansion of the economy in the run-up to the exploitation of the Sea Lion petroleum discovery. The aim of the visit, therefore, was to make useful contacts which in the future would facilitate the renewal and strengthening of these historical trading links to the mutual advantage of both countries. While the Falkland Islands might never figure in the top ten list of trading partners of any country, there was already business to be done there and this was going to increase vastly in the coming years. The pre-existence of a containerised shipping service and its relative proximity to the Islands made Uruguay ideally placed to participate in that expansion.

The morning concluded with a presentation by the Universal Shipping Agency SA, which works with SAAS to provide that service as well as many others within and outside Montevideo's port. Of special interest to many present, given the relatively small volume of imports required by some local companies, was probably the announcement by the agency's Managing Director, Captain Miguel Elefteriu, that his company was now able to provide a consolidated container service from Montevideo.

A visit to the Container Port was among the packed programme of activities and meetings with prospective business partners planned for the Falkland Islands delegation - Michael Betts of FIDC reportedly establishing a record of 13 consecutive meetings in one day.

The official business of the delegation concluded with a reception at the British Embassy on Wednesday evening. Though the purpose of this visit was primarily about making contacts rather than placing orders, Hamish Wylie reports that wine from Uruguay may soon appear on the shelves of the Chandlery. He and other delegates took part in a tasting which left them, "amazed at the quality, as the country is not known for its wines."

The visit to Montevideo ended on October 17 when the long journey home via Santiago and Punta Arenas began for most of the delegates. It had not all been work however; some fun was enjoyed in the form of a visit to a dinner tango show and an international football match (Argentina v Uruguay) at the historic Centennial Stadium, venue for the very first World Cup in 1926.

Equipped with Uruguayan scarves and a discreetly waved Falkland Islands flag, the delegation saw a thrilling match which ended in a 3-2 victory for the home team. The following morning there were some sore throats among the Chamber members, but all had enjoyed a very good-natured occasion in marvellous surroundings.

Roger Spink spoke for everyone when he told Penguin News, "It was a great occasion for Uruguay and we were delighted to be able to share in it." John Fowler

FIDC Oil & Gas Industry Directory

FIDC is building a directory for the Oil Industry that includes Falkland Island businesses already or wishing to become involved in the industry.

The Directory is being compiled in coordination with Premier Oil and Noble Energy, and could involve other licensees in the future. The purpose of the directory is to ensure that oil companies understand which local businesses wish to be involved in the industry and to identify ways in which both FIDC and oil companies can assist local companies in prequalifying for oil industry work in the Falkland Islands. FIDC intends to develop its own funding scheme to assist local businesses acquiring the relevant certification and management systems for pre qualification.

If you wish to be included within the directory and participate in certification discussions please contact Michael Betts – Phone: 27211 or E-mail: mbetts@fidc.co.fk

Rockhopper should comply with tax regulations

THERE have been some recent comments not only in the Penguin News but in overseas national newspapers and news agencies about the tax dispute between FIG and Rockhopper Exploration.

With the amount of money at stake I am surprised that it has not been front page news.

When Premier bought into Rockhopper's Licence it has been reported they paid £640 million. Now all of these companies know and understand the tax regulations that they are obliged to abide by. With a capital gains tax rate of 26 per cent it would mean that FIG should receive at least £166 million of tax revenue.

The most recent news I have found from Bloomberg and an article in the Sunday Times is that Rockhopper balked at paying the full tax and have begun talks with FIG.

Let us not forget a fundamental point that any company that does business in our country and wishes to exploit our natural resources should be expected to comply with all of our laws including the tax regulations.

I look forward to hearing the views on this subject from all of the prospective councillors both in Stanley and the camp.

Falklands issue: Argentine thanks to Caribbean

ARGENTINE Vice President and acting President Amado Boudou, Foreign Minister Hector Timerman, other cabinet ministers and lawmakers met last week with Saint Vincent and Grenadines Prime Minister Ralph Everard Gonsalves, on an official invitation to visit the country to thank the Caribbean leader for his support on the issue of the Falkland Islands.

According to the official release from the Argentine Foreign Ministry, Prime Minister Gonsalves was invited to Argentina in the context of official policy, "to increase political, trade and cultural links," with the Caribbean.

The island is a member of the C24 the United Nations decolonisation committee which annually votes on the issue of the Falkland Islands.

Temporary dock purchased and ready says Noble Energy

"TWICE as fast as a typical gas company," was how Noble Energy was described by its representatives at a presentation given by the company to the public last Thursday evening.

The Houston based oil and gas company bought in to Falklands Oil and Gas Ltd's northern and southern area licences in August last year.

Noble's Business Unit Manager in the Islands Mike Radabaugh, having explained the company's core operating areas around the world, told a relatively large audience in the Narrows Bar on Thursday that they had been, "looking for the next big project," and believed that it could be the Falklands.

Next steps, he said, involved further 3D seismic, the erection of a temporary dock facility east of FIPASS (subject to planning permission) and additional exploratory drilling with a target of early 2015.

Further surveying of the northern licence will begin next month with the arrival of the massive vessel PGS Titan; this will take four months and will mean crews changing via Stanley and a re-introduced aircraft charter.

With regard to the temporary dock facility Mr Radabaugh said the area had been identified and was considered a reasonable place, "close to the existing shore base."

Construction will likely begin in February 2014 with the materials arriving towards the end of this year. The dock, which is, "still in a conceptual phase," will take around six months to erect, but could be taken away afterwards, "if that is what we are asked to do."

The audience was assured that no dredging was required, and vessels working the dock would be chosen based on their suitability to the available depth.

The barge itself has already been purchased and is docked in New Orleans and the dolphins (for berthing and mooring) "are being fabricated."

Describing the structure Mr Radabaugh said it wasn't anticipated the dock would be used for storage but would be a flat area for moving materials around. They found the barge in Mexico in the Panama Canal he said and it had arrived in New Orleans last week.

Asked what would happen if they were not given planning permission for the temporary port, Noble representatives said they believed there was no reason not to be given permission if they were willing to do all that was asked in order to obtain it.

Speaking of drilling, the audience was told that further analysis was ongoing, after which the aim was to drill two wells. Currently work was being undertaken to identify a contract for a rig for the first quarter of 2015.

Asked when the company might require a permanent deep water port for their operations it was suggested that, "best case scenario," one would be needed 2017/18. However they cautioned that if exploratory drilling showed no oil then in turn a deep water port would obviously not be needed.

Noble's representatives also made it clear that where local contracts could be awarded this would be done because it was always cheaper to use local workers, however it could not be guaranteed that someone with a qualification would always be chosen for every job.

Other Noble representatives speaking at the presentation comprised their Falklands' representative Richard Winkleman, who has been in the Islands for more than six months, Operations Manager Joel Landry and Drill Manager John Tregilgas.

The company

Founded by Lloyd Noble in 1932, Noble Energy has 80 years experience in the energy industry and was one of the first independent producers to explore in the Gulf of Mexico. Today, Noble Energy is an S&P 500 company with reserves of 1.2 billion barrels of oil equivalent and assets totalling over $17 billion at year-end 2012.

The company has core operations onshore in the US in the deepwater Gulf of Mexico, offshore Eastern Mediterranean and offshore West Africa.

The company describes itself as having an outstanding record among US based energy independents: "Our broad asset base includes both development and exploratory resource opportunities, with an extensive number of crude oil and natural gas projects in the US and internationally. Our well-balanced portfolio and strong financial platform provide the flexibility to prosper across economic and commodity price cycles."

Falklands talk fishery stock assessment in Rhode Island

THE Falkland Islands fisheries sector was invited to Rhode Island, USA earlier this month in order to present the Islands' success story of data-sharing between the industry and the local fisheries department.

Andreas Winter from the Falkland Islands Fisheries Department and Michael Poole, representing the Falkland Islands Fishing Companies Association, attended and gave a presentation, talking in particular about the in-season assessment and management of the Loligo squid stock.

Mr Poole told Penguin News that representatives from Norway and Canada were also invited to present on data-sharing cooperation initiatives in their countries.

Mr Poole said: "The Falklands presentation was well received and, along with Norway and Canada, demonstrated how industry and fisheries scientists can work together cooperatively to ensure a sustainable and well-managed fishery."

He said attendees were particularly impressed with the way in which Falkland Island companies get actively involved in stock-assessment initiatives as well as environmental issues such as seabird mitigation measures and ensuring gear minimises by-catch.

Fishing on the east coast of the US still involves tens of thousands of boats and people and is different to the Islands in that many smaller family-owned companies operate in their exclusive zone.

However, despite this, the Falkland Islands representatives were able to share practical information regarding how data is collected, communicated and analysed here in the Islands.

The Commercial Fisheries Research Foundation (CFRF), which hosted and funded the event, is planning on using the information obtained from the three international presentations to, "further develop and improve cooperative research and data-sharing in the US fisheries sector," said Mr Poole.

"They will do this in conjunction with the US federal and state governments as well as non-governmental organisations and fisheries associations."

Mr Winter and Mr Poole said they also learned a lot from attending and will be discussing with their respective groups how useful initiatives from elsewhere in the world may be applied here in the Islands.

They would like to thank CFRF, FIFCA and the Fisheries Department for their support.

A stroll down memory lane

BILL Luxton, Richard Cockwell and Norma Edwards take up the Camp seats on Legislative Council while Jan Cheek, Mike Summers, Lewis Clifton, John Birmingham and Sharon Halford are voted in for the Stanley constituency.

Cllrs Clifton, Cockwell and Halford are elected as the Executive Council members.

The election followed a lively hustings period when allegations were made by a member of the public against one of the candidates and the Governor took the unusual step of publishing a letter in Penguin News to rectify the matter.

The idea that young people have little or no interest in local politics is thoroughly debunked with the result of a shadow election at the Community School selecting the same five candidates for Stanley. Bill Luxton is also the favourite with the youngsters for the Camp constituency, but Richard Stevens pips Richard Cockwell for second place and Norma Edwards and Eric Goss tie for the third seat.

Undaunted by a recent refusal by FIG to invest in the operation of a Montevideo to Falklands airlink, Falkland Islands Airways (FIA) hope to be operational by the end of March 1998. Director Mike Summers says airframe preferences include the Boeing 737 and the Brazilian regional jet the Embraer 145. Former BA operations official John Williams consulting for FIA says the airway could exist profitably even if there is no oil and thus no oil traffic. Islanders are told that once operational they can travel to the UK on a comparable rate of the RAF Tristar; there will be employment opportunities and individuals may be given the chance to invest in the future.

History is made as Captain Keith Hatton of the King's Division, Normandy Band lowers his baton and brings the century old tradition of the last Night of the Proms to the Islands. The band is in the Islands to become the southern-most link in a world-girdling chain of concerts involving thousands of people singing the Hallelujah Chorus at the same time in every time zone, thus forming a continuous, 24 hour concert.

FARMERS express cautious support for a trial ferry service between East and West Falkland using Tamar FI, with November 4 pencilled in as the start date. FIDC Manager Julian Morris said: "There will be a handful of people who will be waiting for it to fail, but you can't make progress without there being some pain. We can't let a fear of failure stop us from trying."

Four candidates confirm they will be standing for election in November: Janet Robertson, Kevin Ormond and John Fowler are standing for Stanley while Richard Stevens is standing for the Camp constituency.

After almost two decades of service to both the Stanley and Camp constituencies, Norma Edwards resigns from Legislative Council and is adamant she will not be standing again.

Attorney General David Lang features in The Times as Lawyer of the Week. In the article published to coincide with an advertisement for his job, Mr Lang says the main challenge of his 18 years service was modernising the laws and dealing with the legal side of the economy. When asked what advice he would pass on to his successor, Mr Lang said, "...never be afraid of saying you don't know the answer and will have to research it."

TWELVE candidates put their names forward for the General Election for the Camp constituency with six standing. Norman Clark, John Birmingham, Jan Cheek, Andrea Clausen, Jacqueline Cotter, Emma Edwards, Eric Goss, Janet Robertson, Glenn Ross, Dick Sawle, Gavin Short and Mike Summers for Stanley and Roger Edwards, Sharon Halford, Ian Hansen, Bill Luxton, Richard Stevens and Clive Wilkinson for Camp.

The Foreign and Commonwealth offices announces that British company BACTEC has been chosen to carry out the Falkland Islands de-mining project. Clearance of mines from the 117 mined areas was to have been finished by March this year, but Britain secured a 10 year extension for the project, arguing the task was too challenging to be completed within the time frame.

Oil and gas: Planned recruitment company combines industry, veteran and local links

AN oil and gas recruitment and sales company, Rust Resources with 'fortuitous' links with the Falklands aims to form a joint venture with Falklands businesswoman and Islander Cheryl Roberts and, depending on the speed the Falkland oil industry develops, begin hiring by late next year.

Director of recruitment company Rust Resources, David Spencer (a former member of RRS Bransfield) who is Mrs Roberts' cousin told Penguin News there would be opportunities for Islanders to work and be trained by the company to suit aspects of the oil and gas industry.

There are two companies in the group, he said, which is based in Washington north east in the UK and Weybridge near London.

The group also has offices in Houston, Brisbane, Dubai and two 'virtual' offices in the Far East.

Apart from the Falklands family connection, Mr Spencer said Falklands' oil explorer Noble Energy is already a client of the company, and added to that, the company's Business Development Manager Ken Goddard, who was also in the Falklands last week with Mr Spencer, is a Falklands war veteran.

Mr Goddard was with 42 Commando Royal Marines during the 1982 war.

Mr Spencer explained he and his associate had been in the Islands with the purpose of meeting, along with Mrs Roberts, oil companies including Premier, Noble, Argos Resources and Desire, also port services company

Ken Goddard, David Spencer and Cheryl Roberts

Sullivan Shipping Ltd, the Byron Group and Falkland Islands Government executives, including Director of Mineral Resources Stephen Luxton and Director of Central Services Simon Fletcher.

Pinsent Masons was also paid a visit, in order to talk about "the legal structure that we will put together."

They had had a very positive response he said, "because there is no doubt that technical resources are going to be required," by the oil companies.

At the same time he emphasised, "what we do, doesn't actually require a technical knowledge of the oil and gas industry," as it is, "about immigration and dealing with people so we don't need technically qualified people in that way.

"We've done it before in other countries where we have started with one person and built the full team there, so we can also see that happening here."

The company provides personnel from the exploration phase through to the production phase, he said, as well as decommissioning (taking everything apart at the end).

He said at the exploration phase they hire, "drillers, coil tubers, cementers, wire line people, slip liners - people who drill holes and poke things down them - and those who analyse the results," as well as, "completions people," when that phase ends.

With regard to actual drilling, "when you need a subsea pipeline and a subsea structure, like an FPSO or TLP, the more senior people we have design what is needed and they will work on a two, three or four year contract for Noble for example, to design it and put it in place."

Asked what types of trades the company would be seeking locally, he said initially administrative, but also, for example, fitters, welders and similar, "those are the roles that you can qualify for relatively easily."

He said with regard to more senior roles it was difficult to tell in the short term, "because it takes a number of years to qualify and then most of the companies would like to see someone with 10 or 15 years experience before they will let them go offshore because it is a highly technical and potentially dangerous industry."

Health and safety was also important he explained and something the Falklands was not yet geared up to. Consultants from the local joint venture company could provide this training: "You can do the theory relatively quickly, but hands on with an onshore or offshore facility, that takes a lot more time."

Rust Resources consultants already give training in health and safety: "Noble will go into a region as they did in Israel, which doesn't have experience in the oil and gas industry, just like here."

"We have health and safety people there on contract to Noble and effectively what they are doing is training the contractors to comply and help put the systems, procedures and processes in place that comply with the health and safety standards that you expect."

He added that Noble were, "very good at doing that," but, "they have not said much about that (in the Falklands) but they are very good at using local contractors and using their people to help the local contractors comply with the regulations - I have seen them do that, it's not just words."

Mr Spencer also emphasised a point made by Noble Energy at last Thursday's presentation that it was always better to hire locally because, "it costs you less; you don't have to fly them in and you don't have to find accommodation."

Giving an example he said Rust Resources' office in the north east of England began in 2010 with only nine members of staff, but now boasted 55 staff from the immediate area, "and none of them are oil and gas people, they are just local people that work with the guys that come in and out."

"They put them on planes, they book the hotels, they deal with the clients. We have a big office that we built very quickly."

So when will it all begin? Mr Spencer explained that their input is very much dependent on the speed at which the industry itself moves, however, "Noble move very quickly; if they find what they think is there, the teams build very quickly."

The pair are keen to return again and for Mr Goddard, it was a particularly fascinating experience from a personal point of view. It was his first visit to the Falklands since his experiences of 1982 and he was able to visit Mount Harriet where compatriots were killed and injured.

With typical Royal Marine humour he described himself, tongue in cheek, as having been, "nothing but abused," since he arrived in the Falklands this time, however he agreed it was a, "form of affection."

His colleague told the story that on meeting Noble Energy's Falklands representative, Texan Richard Winkleman, the latter remarked to the ex Royal Marine: "When you were last in the Falklands you carried your pack on your back - now you're carrying it on your front!"

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800. Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system: Telephone: 28100, E-mail: inspector@police.gov.fk or fax: 28110.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters.

Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

OURS must have been the only drive ever to sport its own carpet. Certainly it caused a few strange looks from passers-by. I have to say though that the green and even 'lawn' looked wonderful for a bit.

The truth is we were getting rid of some carpeting and cutting it up to cover the compost bins, luxury eh? These squares will sit on top of the bins, keep some of the rain out and a lot of the heat in. The first bin full is ready for use anyway; lovely brown soil. The covers should take care of all the new contributions to the bins.

There is a sea of Narcissus (daffodils) outside, there are little clumps everywhere, all pointing their small, medium or large faces to the sun, or, in the direction it should be shining from, anyway.

There are some only four inches tall, some reach six and many more are the normal 15 inches in height, but each little clump is different in other ways too. Their trumpets or cups can be large or very small, in some they would probably be better described as saucers as they can be very small and quite flat, though those are usually quite frilly. There are some bright yellow singles and some very double 'cups', little creamy ones with a brighter cup, bigger ones with orange and white cups, little lime yellow ones, creamy white ones, yellows with salmon cups, some standing tall and proud, others seem a little bashful.

I have about forty different types, and that isn't anywhere near the hundreds of different ones available; each one with a charm of its own. Some people believe that daffodils should remain plain yellow but all the different variations that have appeared over the years are really very attractive.

Trimming the 'lawn' and spring flowers add a burst of yellow to 7 Ross Road West

The tulips are nearly ready to give their all too, that is if this incredible wind today doesn't flatten them first! Primroses, both single and double ones, are also looking great. The drumstick ones in white, pink or lilac are showing off masses of rounded balls each about two inches across, and the auriculas are finally showing buds so they should start to flower within a week or so. Some years ago I planted some Dodecatheon (pagoda lily) seeds, one eventually appeared and when large enough was put in the flower bed. The plant has grown larger every year since with never a sign of a flower but the foliage is lovely so I left it, removing some weeds yesterday I came across it again and couldn't believe the size of the plant and the fact it has flowered, and lovely yellow flowers they are too! Also a bright yellow are the Doronicums (Leopards bane) these are like rather large daisies.

The strawberries in the tunnel suddenly looked ill and sure enough, the cockchafer beetle babes had been having a field day chomping their way through the strawberry roots. I drenched them with Provado weevil killer and hopefully this will allow the affected plants to recover with food, water and lots of tender loving care. They must, for there are some anxious little faces checking them fairly frequently.

Whilst talking about plants under cover, I have to admit that though I religiously remember to ventilate the plants under cover, I totally forgot to shade some seedlings under glass, sadly they got cooked. I've had to start again with some things, though not all were damaged. The peas having been hardened off during the day were fine and luckily had been taken inside during the night that we had that frost. They will be planted out this week, weather permitting.

Yesterday was a glorious day, almost too hot as my nose and cheeks will testify. At last I was able to make some inroads on the flower beds. Such a joy to rediscover old friends and see how much bigger they have grown during their time underground.

But now it has to be all systems go and I hope to get many of the outdoor seeds in. The weeds are starting to germinate and some of the potatoes left in the ground accidentally last year are starting to show small sprouts. Already the seed packets are growing in number as I check and re-check the packets of carrots, beetroot lettuce and dozens more. The cabbages are still a bit too small to put in the ground but I shall add some 'greens' to the borders in the tunnels, to get ahead of those outside.

Bill gave the lawn a mow over the weekend, He left the 'cut' quite high and it really makes a wonderful difference to the velvety green grass. If it is too short it tends to burn off with our Spring winds.

Every time I'm outside and spot a dandelion in the grass I nip off as many of its flowers and buds as I can in an effort to stop them seeding and spreading even further. To remove them or put weed killer on them just ensures bare land for more of them to colonise. Weed-killer is going to be used outside the front where it joins the pavement. Here the dandelions and baby gorse plants threaten to take over and, of course, to slip through to the flower beds uninvited.

Cowgirl wisdom

If you're lucky

Did you know.....

THE phrase "paint the town red" is thought to originate from a legendary night of drunkenness. In 1837, the Marquis of Waterford - a known lush and mischief maker - led a group of friends on a night of drinking through the English town of Melton Mowbray. The bender culminated in vandalism after Waterford and his fellow revellers knocked over flowerpots, pulled knockers off doors and broke windows in the town. To top it all off, the mob painted a tollgate, the doors of several homes and a swan statue with red paint. The marquis and his pranksters later compensated Melton for the damages, but their drunken escapade is likely the reason that "paint the town red" became shorthand for a wild night out.

SIX teams took part in last Sunday's fixture, the always popular 3-Ball Team Alliance.

This is a stableford format with the best two individual scores per team counting on each hole.

Strong winds from the North West provided testing conditions for the golfers and called for good shot-making skills or a generous handicap allowance.

Perennial winners of this event are Team Bonner and their early round form of averaging five points per hole was setting them up for yet another win but a couple of lapses towards the end saw them slip back into second place on 77 points.

The Toffees, Adam Glanville, Wayne Clement and Glenn Ross eased some of the endless suffering of following Everton FC by scoring 78 points and recording a win.

Nearest the pin on the 8th in two shots went to Adam Glanville and Glenn Ross scooped the one shot prize on the par three 17th.

One of the best shots of the day came from the latest graduate from the club's junior section. James Tyrrell powering an unbeatable drive down the 18th fairway to win the prize for the longest drive.

The Matchplay entry list is posted on the club notice board and the draw will take place after the November Medal.

The competition this Sunday is the Fortuna event, format is 18 holes of stableford.

Please sign in by 9:00 for a 9:15 AM tee-off.

GENERAL ELECTION 7TH NOVEMBER 2013

Emergency and Replacement Proxies

The Deputy Returning Officer wishes to inform electors that there are provisions to enable emergency and replacement proxies for the upcoming general election.
Under the following circumstances, an elector may be able to apply for an emergency proxy/replacement proxy:

- (a) an elector is required to leave the Islands to receive emergency medical treatment;
- (b) an elector is required to leave the Islands as the spouse or family member to accompany someone else to receive medical treatment;
- (c) an elector is required to leave the Islands on urgent business/work;
- (d) an elector is required to attend to a family member overseas who is seriously ill;
- (e) an elector is required to attend a funeral overseas;
- (f) an elector suffers delays in travel arrangements outside the elector's control which means that they cannot be in the Islands at the relevant time;
- (g) any other exceptional reason which means that the elector would not otherwise be able to vote; or
- (h) if an elector has appointed a proxy to vote for them on their behalf and the proxy will be unable to vote on their behalf because any of the criteria above apply to the proxy, then the elector may appoint an emergency replacement proxy.

The application must be accompanied with supporting evidence that demonstrates that there are compelling reasons of urgency and that the application is not made on the basis of merely convenience.

Applications for consideration need to be sent to the Registration Officer, Town Hall, Stanley no later than 4pm Monday 4th November (three working days before the date of the election).
For further information please contact Beth Dent on 27269 or email registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

Support for privatisation but not 'at cost' to public say candidates

GOVERNMENT run industries can potentially suffer the effects of excessive bureaucracy making them less efficient; and Falkland Islanders don't like bureaucracy right? At the same time we are equally sensitive about the concept of privatisation. How might it affect the user? Do we want social objectives to become subordinate to profit motive?

The arguments for and against privatisation are many, so galvanised by a reader's question, Penguin News asked General Election candidates for their opinions. We asked: "Are you for or against transferring FIG public services to the private sector? Do you approve of the aim to privatise the Post Office? What other services should be privatised?"

Apart from one or two candidates, support for privatisation was largely strong but with a number of stipulations.

First to respond was Norman

Clark (Stanley) who said he was in favour of transferring some public services, providing the new owner could improve the existing service or facility to the benefit of the public. He added: "I would ring fence the power supply and hospital against any such transfer."

He approves of privatising the Post Office with the Philatelic Bureau privatised separately, but with the same proviso noted above.

Faith Felton (Stanley) said, "Ideally no, I do not support privatisation of any of the public sector." However she added: "That said, if Government are unwilling or unable to invest the capital which is needed into this area, to make it fully operational, then this route must be considered. The main areas which spring immediately to mind are the asphalt plant and the quarry. The Post Office, I see no reason to privatise this."

Mike Summers (Stanley) says he is a long term supporter of privatisation of Government services, "if it can be done in the best interests of the people who use them."

"This includes future costs and any regulatory mechanisms that would be required. I have no objection in principle to the privatisation of the Post Office, but the detail will be critical to judge public benefit. Other services can be considered where there is interest."

Lynda Buckland (Stanley) is for "transferring public services to the private sector when it can be demonstrated that the business or individual can continue to deliver or improve on the service provided. I believe that there are several services that could or should be privatised." She said she hoped people would understand she was unable to comment further due to her current employment as a Business Advisor.

Teslyn Barkman (Stanley) said privatisation, "improves service and alleviates the budget but proposals should be considered carefully in the case of essential services like the Post Office. If it were to make a sustained or seasonal loss that couldn't be covered it would force prices up. If it could be justified, it should be regulated by the state to ensure the consumer is protected. More service based non-essential services would be better options for privatisation."

Phyl Rendell (Camp) is in support of privatisation, "provided costs to the consumer were not unduly increased and staff were protected, that is, TUPE." (Transfer of Undertakings - Protection of Employment regulations).

She said: "I support the privatisation of the post office on these terms and would consider the computer section, the leisure centre and more road building and maintenance, among others, for privatisation. I do not consider key services such as power and water as suitable for privatisation. Continued on page 3

DUE to arrive in the Falklands early next week is the new Ramform Titan Class 3D Seismic survey ship, accompanied by support vessels Falcon Explorer and Fellowship.

The Ramform Titan was launched on April 26, 2013 from the Mitsubishi yard in Nagasaki, Japan and was designed with the purpose of collecting maximum amounts of seismic data, quickly, safely and reliably.

The vessel will carry out further surveying of the northern licence for Noble Energy Falkland Islands Ltd. The work is expected to take four months and will mean crews changing via Stanley and the reintroduction of an aircraft charter.

The Ramform Titan has berths for 70 crew, capacity for 6,000 tons of fuel and seismic equipment and 24 tow points.

For crew entertainment there is a 225 square metre sports hall, ball court, gym, theatres, TV and games rooms.

Comment by Deputy Editor Sharon Jaffray

AS election fever picks up it's no surprise to note that the resurfacing or 'making safe' of the Stanley to Mount Pleasant road is a top priority and given the strong message from the population over the last few years, is guaranteed to be a vote puller.

How that might be achieved of course is an issue that we will watch with interest over the next four years, but if the present frame of mind is sustained after the votes have been counted, there is no doubt it will happen.

The residential care home is also an election priority, and I readily agree, a much needed facility for the Islands. Doing a few sums on the back of a fag packet however, I think those two projects would pretty much use up any sensible release of reserve funds for the time being and I'm left wondering where we would be left thereafter. Back to quibbling over a few pennies here and there to create a balanced budget and the rest of the infrastructure falling into a further state of disrepair?

It's a fine line to walk, this standing for election lark and the real risk is making promises that can't realistically be kept.

I do agree however that it is time to put something back into the community which has had to tighten its belt over the years. And throughout those years most of the population have carried out good diplomacy work for the Islands, especially with the thousands of tourists throughout the season. I have regularly boasted the superiority of our medical and education systems in defence of our shabby roads, explaining that with such a limited budget priorities have to be made. The question of why revenue from tourism isn't invested in improving the visitor experience is a bit harder to handle admittedly, but hopefully we'll be able to distract them from the state of the Public Jetty with the attraction of the newly constructed toilet block at the Jetty Centre this season. It was a long time coming, but at least on this occasion it's not money being flushed out to sea.

ON a completely different note, I really have to give the local business Eagle Inshore Fishing an accolade this week. Chris and Lindsey May, have a top quality product with their locally processed Snow Crab and it reaches the shelf at an affordable price. Bearing in mind it is has to be caught, processed, frozen and delivered to Stanley, £5.75 for a 250g pack is a fair price and it is pure Falklands. Thank you guys, it's become a regular favourite in our household. I don't suppose you could grow some swedes this year could you? Someone is having a laugh (all the way to the bank) with the price of them in here.

BFBS Big Salute auction launched today

THE annual BFBS Big Salute Auction will be launched online throughout the day today Friday October 25 to raise funds for BLESMA, Blind Veterans UK, Combat Stress, FAB (Families' Activity Breaks) and Veterans Aid.

From 11am to 7pm UK time (8am Falklands time) lots will open every hour at www.bfbs.com/bigsalute/auction and bidders have seven days to place bids until the live on air auction day on BFBS radio during Friday November 1.

With more than 100 items it is BFBS' biggest Big Salute auction yet, including signed sporting memorabilia, books, music and celebrity photographs, overnight stays, clothing and limited edition prints.

Sports fans have the chance to own a shirt worn and signed by Wimbledon Champion, Andy Murray, or bid on a Chelsea FC football complete with team signatures. Tours of Lord's cricket ground, or golf rounds at the award-winning Stoke Park are also up for grabs.

Spokesperson for BFBS Mikaela Roche said: "Thrill seekers can take to the skies with the Army Parachute Association, and try zorbing, fly boarding, or even a wind tunnel experience with the RAF Falcons.

"There's also the opportunity to meet Status Quo, watch the live filming of Celebrity Juice, Daybreak and Lorraine, or rub shoulders with top players at the Football Writers' Association Footballer of the Year Awards."

The live auction will be broadcast across the BFBS radio network on Friday November 1, and listeners in the Falkland Islands will hear coverage from 10am.

Mikaela said: "As well as showcasing auction items, the BFBS Big Salute website has examples of fundraising from around the Forces world.

"If you're organising a charity event in aid of the BFBS Big Salute, go to www.bfbs.com/bigsalute/getinvolved submit your details and send us some photos - we'd love to hear how you are helping to support our five chosen charities.

"You can also watch stories from ex-servicemen and families who have been helped by BLESMA, Blind Veterans UK, Combat Stress, FAB (Families' Activity Breaks) and Veterans Aid, to see how funds raised by the BFBS Big Salute auction can help make a difference to their lives.

"If you'd like to show your support before this year's auction, simply go online to www.bfbs.com/bigsalute and buy a BFBS Big Salute wristband, or you can donate via our Just Giving link on the site."

Election 2013: Independent minded successful negotiator say candidates

DUE to possible technical difficulties last week two election candidates did not receive the question submitted by Penguin News in time for their responses to be included in the paper.

As such we gave them the opportunity to respond this week.

Not having been a Member of the last Legislative Assembly John Birmingham was asked what he could bring to the new Assembly.

Mr Birmingham said: "Although a team player I am independently minded and I would take people's issues back to the top table."

As a former Member of Legislative Assembly during the last term Roger Edwards was asked what he had brought to the table.

Mr Edwards responded: "As Chair of Standing Finance Committee we concentrated on the economy which went from a deficit budget to a surplus."

He added that: "As lead on EU Issues," approximately £4 million Euros were successfully negotiated from the European Development Fund.

He said he was a, "lone voice against road designation for most of the four years but won through in the end."

Inquest opened

AN inquest into the death of Mr Thomas Biggs was opened and adjourned to a date to be confirmed in the Coroner's Court on Friday.

Mr Biggs lived in Sheltered Accommodation on Thatcher Drive and was 86 years old at the time of his death.

Confessed sex offender in jail

STANLEY man Bruce Adam Humphreys (26) was remanded in custody on Wednesday pending a presentence report after he admitted both sexual activity with and the grooming of a child.

The offences took place in April 2012 when the victim was aged 13 and Mr Humphreys was aged 25.

Crown Prosecutor Matthew McCabe said the case had come to the attention of the police in July, while investigating another case. Investigations had revealed some 831 text messages he said, which had progressed to becoming explicit in early March.

Defence lawyer Angela McGuinness said her client was of previous good character, adding, "this a bit of a whopper to come before the courts with for a first time."

Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley said it was a case of a 25 year old man knowing full well he was dealing with a school girl. The texts were "classic grooming," and demonstrated the way "a paedophile inveigles" their way into the victim's affection, he said.

He further added that he could see no alternative to immediate custodial sentence and advised Probation Officer Jason Rice to direct his presentence report primarily at the length of sentence.

Mr Humphreys is to appear in court on November 27 for sentencing.

Case adjourned

STANLEY man Tony Eugene Terence Tony McLaren (44) appeared in court on Wednesday facing four charges of sexual activity with a child as well as one each of inciting sexual activity and grooming.

No plea was entered and the case was adjourned until November 5, with a provisional trial date of January 6 suggested.

Mr McLaren was released on conditional bail which included the surrender of his passport to the Police Station.

Trial pending

MARIO Clint Youde (28) a former Mount Pleasant resident, now living in Stanley under bail conditions entered pleas of not guilty to three charges of assault by beating, but admitted a charge of damage to property.

The assaults were alleged to have taken place at Mount Pleasant Complex between March and September. The property Mr Youde admitted damaging was a laptop and a Kindle valued at £800.

The trial is to take place at 9am on Wednesday October 30 and has been scheduled for two days.

Support for privatisation but not 'at cost' to public say election candidates

Roger Edwards (Camp) said: "I am against the privatisation of the three core services, namely power, water and sewerage. However I do approve the aim of privatisation of the Post Office and look forward to the day we have a postman at no additional cost to postal services. I also support the move to privatising Computers, Payroll and perhaps some aspects of the health service."

Gavin Short (Stanley) said he is, "by nature nervous of transferring services to the private sector unless there is a clear saving and national benefit and employees protected. I am even more nervous of privatising our essential services such as water and power but believe that some form of partial employee buyout could be beneficial allowing them greater freedom. I have yet to see what the proposed benefits are for privatising the Post Office."

John Birmingham (Stanley) has no problem with the private sector taking on FIG services, "where there is a proven economic case and the service levels would remain."

Asked what other services he felt should be privatised, he said other than water and power, "refer to my previous answer."

Jan Cheek (Stanley) is in favour of privatisation where the service, "can be provided equally or more efficiently for the same or less cost; with the provisos that customer/client rights are protected and the new service properly regulated."

She said if the proposal for Post Office privatisation met those requirements, "then I would approve." She feels many of the roles of PWD could be privatised, "as could much adult training."

Barry Elsby (Stanley) thinks any Government service should be considered for privatisation: "However, experience from Britain and other countries have shown that all too often privatisation has led to a reduction in the quality of services and increase in costs. Any service privatised here will almost certainly become a monopoly and would need to be regulated so as to maintain value for money and the continuation of that service to the consumers."

Melanie Gilding (Camp) is against transferring Government's public services to the private sector, "as this invariably results in increased costs, but decreased efficiency, as has happened in UK with the mail service and the railways." She said: "The Post Office could benefit from modernisation and more streamlined procedures to improve efficiency, but placing it in private hands is not the answer. Likewise, PWD, the quarry, and the power station should remain under Government control."

Candy Blackley (Stanley) is not against transferring some public services to the private sector, "as long as it is not going to come at a greater cost to the public. FIG should always retain the vital core services such as health, water and power. I do support the aim to privatise the Post Office. Other areas that could be considered are: catering, laundry, cleaning, funeral services for instance."

FI/Panama link

THE Falkland Islands Government has welcomed an announcement from the Panamanian National Assembly approving the formation of the Falkland Islands – Panamanian Inter-parliamentary Friendship Group.

In September four Panamanian parliamentarians visited the Islands at the invitation of the Falkland Islands Government. The establishment of the Inter-parliamentary Friendship Group, which will promote relationship-building, dialogue and mutual co-operation between the Falklands and Panama, was a direct result of that visit.

Chief Executive Keith Padgett said he was confident the next Assembly would look forward to "building on this and progressing the relationship between the Falkland Islands and Panama."

Captains choice

A CAPTAINS Choice private jet tour with 81 passengers is to visit the Falklands next weekend as part of a journey which also takes in Brazil, Chile, Argentina and Bermuda.

The visit is hosted by local travel agents Island Holidays. The group will spend two nights in Stanley and undertake a variety of tours including battle fields, Volunteer Point and Bluff Cove with a special dinner in the Town Hall on Sunday evening.

FOGL's Desire

FALKLAND Oil and Gas Ltd updated investors on its proposed merger with Desire Petroleum on Wednesday, indicating that the amalgamation should be finished by December 19. Announced on October 3, the deal has widely been received as a win-win, with FOGL gaining access to the North Falklands Basin for the first time and Desire receiving much-needed funds to kick-start drilling.

Carboot sale

DON'T forget the car boot sale on the Community School football field this Sunday to raise funds for the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund. (see page 12)

Organiser Alison Ford said keyrings, stickers and badges with the new SJMF logos will also be on sale from Violet Clarke at the car boot sale and at Stanley Leisure Centre thereafter.

Pax exchange

USHUAIA kicked off the cruise ship season on Friday when she called in to collect 37 guests who arrived via LAN on Saturday afternoon.

Sullivan Shipping Tourism Coordinator Samantha Marsh said this was the company's first passenger exchange this season, with six more to take place over the summer months.

Your questions answered

Q What is the Government's policy on employees having letters or comment published about issues relating to Government?

Government Head of Policy Jamie Fotheringham provided the following response

A FIG's policy on this matter is contained in the Public Service Code of Conduct in Chapter 4 of the Management Code – which sets out the expected conduct of FIG officials in dealing with the media both in an official capacity and as private individuals. This document is available to all FIG employees.

With regard to letters to the press, an officer may, in a private capacity, write a letter to the press or publish material, which may lawfully be published, provided that it does not:

- reveal any confidential information not already in the public domain;

- in any way concern the officer's official duties (unless the prior written permission of the Chief Executive has been obtained);

- criticise the department in which the officer works or its staff, or Government policy or departmental administration in relation to matters which the officer's department deals with;

- criticise existing Government policy in cases where the officer occupies a position in which he/she may be expected to advise the Governor or Elected Members in respect of that policy area.

Similar rules apply to media interviews that officials may give in a private capacity.

Other than these restrictions, officers (except Chief Officers such as the Chief Executive and Attorney General) are entirely free to be as critical of Government as members of the public are entitled to be.

CHEVENING

— UK GOVERNMENT SCHOLARSHIPS —

CELEBRATING 30 YEARS

Are you a future leader looking to study in the UK?
Applications for 2014/15 Chevening Scholarships open till 1 November 2013.

Applications for 2014/15 Chevening Scholarships, the prestigious global scholarship programme of the UK government, are open now and will close 1 November 2013.

The Scholarships, which are funded by the UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) and partner organisations, operate in 118 countries worldwide, and this year will support over 600 established or emerging leaders. Awards are typically for a one-year Master's degree, in any subject and at any of the UK's leading universities.

The Scholarships aim to support UK foreign policy priorities by creating lasting positive relationships with future leaders, influencers and decision-makers around the world.

The UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office said:

'The Chevening programme provides a unique opportunity for leaders of the future to build a global network of continuing professional significance. It enables talented individuals to establish social, cultural, academic or commercial partnerships with the UK. With 2013 marking the 30th anniversary of the programme, we hope that this year's Chevening Scholarships will continue to attract the very brightest and best.'

Chevening alumni have an excellent record of rising to positions of leadership across a wide range of fields: including politics, business, the media, civil society, religion, and academia. Some work as MPs, leading journalists, or policy advisers to NGOs and think tanks; others occupy senior positions in commercial organisations.

Applications for Chevening Scholarships must be submitted online at www.chevening.org. Applicants should read the online guidance and be able to demonstrate how they meet the Chevening selection criteria before submitting an application. Further details of closing dates and priority subject areas (which vary from country to country) are available on the country pages of www.chevening.org.

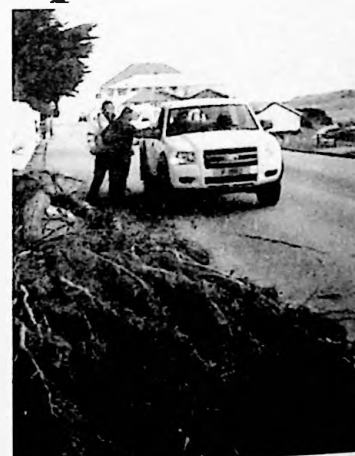

Tree fall stops traffic

OF all the things one would expect to haul traffic to a stop in the Falklands, it's doubtful a tree would even enter on the list of possibilities.

However, the strong winds on Friday did just that for a short period just before the lunchtime rush as part of a tree in the Stanley Cottage front garden broke through the fence and fell blocking the road. Police and Fire officers along with PWD workers were soon on the scene and man-handled it clear of the road.

Hiring new employees? Read this

A VACANCY has arisen in your company. You have selected a suitable candidate, checked their immigration status, and agreed terms with them. What do you need to do next? Local law firm Pinsent Masons explains the way forward.

The Employment Protection Ordinance (section 4) states that employees who normally work for more than 16 hours per week have to be given a written statement setting out the main particulars of employment within 13 weeks of their start date.

As a minimum the written statement should include:

- The name of the employer and employee.
- The date the employment began and the date continuous service commenced (where a prior period of employment is relevant).
- The date the contract will terminate (if it is for a fixed term).
- Salary details such as rate of pay and frequency of payment for example: weekly or monthly.
- Hours of work.
- Any terms and conditions relating to:
 - Entitlement to holidays (including public holidays) and any provision for holiday pay;
 - Incapacity to work through illness or injury and any provision for sick pay; and
 - Pension schemes.
- The length of notice which the employee is obliged to give and entitled to receive to terminate the contract of employment.
- Details of any disciplinary rules and grievance procedures including specifying a person to whom an employee can apply if dissatisfied with any decision. This will usually be a senior manager or in a small business, the owner. All this information can be set out in a separate document from the written statement provided it is easily accessible to the employee.
- Stating whether a contracting-out certificate is in force for the period of employment. For the majority of employers there will be no contracting out certificate.

There are certain protected rights such as the right to minimum payments or rights under a pension scheme.

If there is a contracting out certificate then these rights are not necessarily protected.

If there is a change in the terms of employment the employer is required to inform the employee in writing within one month of the change.

The obligation to provide a written statement does not apply to mariners or people employed outside the Falkland Islands to whom different rules apply.

Employment Law - Paying employees

Every employee has the right under the Employment Protection Ordinance (section 10) to receive an itemised payslip when their employer pays their salary. The statement must include the following information:

- gross salary (before tax and other deductions);
- set out details of the amount and reason for any deductions which have been made of which typical deductions would be POAT (payment on account of income tax), MST (medical services tax), or RPC (retirement pension contributions);
- net salary (after tax and other deductions); and
- where different parts of the net salary are paid in different ways, the amount and way each part payment is made, for example: cheque, bank transfer.

Employment Law - Ending employment

Both an employee and an employer are required to give notice if they want to end the employment relationship.

The minimum period of notice that is required to be given depends on the length of service an employee has with the employer.

Minimum Statutory Notice for an Employee:

If an employee has been employed by the company for more than a month but less than two years the employer must give at least one weeks notice.

The employee is entitled to an additional one weeks notice for each additional year of service. Therefore an employee employed for three years is entitled to three weeks notice. Under the statutory provisions there is a maximum notice period of twelve weeks notice for twelve or more years service.

Minimum Statutory Notice for an Employee:

An employee must give at least one weeks notice.

Contractual Notice Periods:

However, the contract of employment may extend these statutory notice periods by requiring a longer period of notice to be given by the employer or employee.

Termination Without Notice:

There are some situations in which an employer or an employee can bring employment to an end with immediate effect and this will be considered in a future article.

Jodi Poole

1. What is your most prized possession?

Orange ted - a rather worn out teddy from my childhood, who would conveniently get 'lost' at bedtime.

2. What is the worst piece of advice you have ever been given?

"The insanity workout is really great, you should try it" - complete lie, it hurts, I imagine it feels the same as being struck by lightning.

3. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with?

Anthony Kiedis and Billy Connolly - for the laughs and the epic stories over a game of dice in Deanos.

4. What is your happiest moment?

When Stevie proposed at the Mr and Mrs Darts Competition.

5. If you could set up a business in the Falklands what would it be?

Remembering that a lot of my teenage years consisted of walking around in the rain, a youth centre would be an amazing addition to Stanley.

6. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it?

Swing Life Away by Rise Against. It makes me think of a lot of fantastic times with some amazing friends who live overseas.

7. What is the one, single food that you would never give up?

Millionaires shortbread from Jaes - delicious

9. Who would play you in a film about your life?

Sandra Bullock, as she is basically my doppelganger

9. What did you want to be when you were a child?

When I was about five I told a visitor from the education department I wanted to be a bank robber.

10. What would people be surprised to learn about you?

That I'm not Juliet!

The full time problem

IT appears that the move towards full-time MLAS is inevitable and the newly elected Legislature will create history in this respect. However I feel I am not alone in expressing concern over this revolutionary variation, particularly as I feel it deters many people from standing simply because they cannot afford to devote five days a week sitting in Gilbert

House while they have a business or sheep farm to run.

Already several 'good' Camp Constituency prospective candidates have said they did not stand for the reason that I have stated above. One farmer was adamant that he did not wish to spend his £40,000 MLA salary, if he was elected, paying someone else to run his farm for him, as he had been advised when enquiring about standing.

Now we hear that a former MLA, who worked incessantly during the past four years on promoting the Falklands at an International level - portraying the Islands incredible progress since 1982 and the desire of the population to stay British - has not stood because this former MLA cannot combine being a full-time MLA and maintaining a business. The person not standing is a considerable loss to the Islands.

If indeed we do have full-time MLAs then I would hope that several high level posts within Government will in due course be abolished as, for example, I would expect the full-time MLAS to decide the policy for the Falklands and accordingly the highly paid post of Head of Policy could go and thus bring a considerable monetary saving within the public service.

Ian Hansen (Camp)

The next four years will be pivotal in the future of the Falkland Islands and its people. This elected assembly will be either looking at a hugely expanded economy through oil revenue, or coping with handling the fact that our expectations were not as high as hoped for the future.

I am optimistic we will be dealing with the former, and although I am not in favour of spending money we don't have, there are many things that can be done with our current revenue.

I would, if elected, pursue the following issues as a priority.

The removal of vehicle tax. As things stand there is an inequality as some pay and some do not. Instead of legislating that all pay, I believe we should abolish this tax island wide. This is affordable with our current revenue. Tied into this, extreme caution on how the proposed designation of camp tracks is handled is of paramount importance. Thankfully the designation of camp tracks was halted but there is still much to be done.

I think it is time we agree to release funds to begin to tarmac the MPA road over the next four years on a rolling annual basis. The MPA road benefits all of our industries in some form or another, so to me it seems something we should obviously be prepared to invest in.

The Rural Development Strategy Steering Group will have to make decisions that may be controversial and unpopular with those who do not appreciate how different and difficult life in Camp can be. I would not be afraid to support those decisions, which I believe among other things, should include the income tax regime being altered for businesses in Camp. Rural Development Zones should be island wide and not concentrated on certain areas.

No doubt candidates will express the wish to reintroduce the holiday credit scheme. As one of the few to oppose the reduction and eventual demise of this scheme, obviously I would be prepared to support how this may be brought back into the budget.

Internationally, it is a must that the Falkland Islands are out there telling the world who we are and how we can never be a colony of Argentina. The Argentines will always use us as a distraction from their own problems and inadequate government. If elected members of the Falkland Island government can be at any forum to refute their ridiculous claim over our home, we should take advantage of every opportunity that arises. After eight years as an elected member, I feel confident that I have the experience to speak for our country at any venue, on any subject that I may be tasked to do.

Other issues include MST and its removal, and as portfolio holder and Chair person of FLH for six years in total, I would like to follow up the idea that profits accrued by individual farms are given to those farms in some way rather than going into the overall FLH budget.

Melanie Gilding (Camp) Revival of camp

If elected, I shall strive for the rejuvenation of camp. The depopulation of the farms in recent years, reminiscent of the Highland Clearances, needs to be reversed. A country's land should be occupied. To do otherwise sends the wrong message to the rest of the world, and UK may be less supportive if the Falklands consists only of Stanley.

There have to be more incentives and better support and opportunities to attract younger people to camp. Other countries believe in subsidies, and if that helps to keep our land occupied and farmed, then it is worth considering. Lower fuel prices may also help ease the camp situation.

Residential care home

We desperately need a purpose-built facility for our elderly and infirm. This is long overdue, and with an ageing population, should be a priority. This affects us all, in town or camp, and our loved ones. Our older citizens lived through all the difficult and less prosperous times in the Islands, and they are our treasure-house of irreplaceable experience. They should be treated accordingly. The immigration policy should allow for staff with appropriate geriatric training to care for those patients in the home. Our hospital cannot be expected to spare the staff necessary.

Pensions

The old age pension should be raised to a more realistic level. Although it has recently increased by 5%, it is still insufficient. Rather than pay a Winter Fuel Allowance, a better "living wage" pension would ease the circumstances of those having to survive on it. The high cost of groceries here, compared to UK, makes a Falklands pension worth less than a UK one. This is blatantly unfair, and should be addressed.

Abolition of MST and the overseas contribution of £300

The £300 charge for being sent overseas for medical treatment is an unnecessary burden on those on lower incomes and pensioners. As it contributes so little to the medical service, but makes a difference to those having to pay it, it should be abolished. All such levies also involve costs to administer. It is a false economy.

MST is yet another tax, in addition to the income tax paid by most. Unless it can be shown to make a significant difference to the medical services budget, this too could be scrapped.

The main artery of the Falklands is a national disgrace. With the release of part of the windfall surplus monies, this could be surfaced to a safe and acceptable standard. This road has claimed too many lives already, and will continue to do so, unless the funds are made available for this project. We cannot afford NOT to do this. It affects us all.

In summary, good budget management, and release of some surplus each year, should make for a more comfortable life for everyone in the Islands. With the successful completion of the above projects, and the re-introduction of the Holiday Credit Scheme, we shall all reap the benefits of increased prosperity.

Please do not hesitate to contact me, on these, or any other issues. Tel: 21061

Phyl Rendell (Camp)

I am standing for election for the Camp constituency because I want to contribute to improving people's lives and to help increase prosperity in the Camp.

I support the current strategy of promoting our right to self-determination as reinforced by the Referendum.

If elected I would work hard to ensure that a proportion of recent and future wealth from oil activities is invested in the Camp in order to benefit residents. We have to find ways of increasing resources and funding for the Camp road network in particular. I also think that there needs to be more focus on what the Rural Development Strategy funds are spent on, for example renewable energy.

The key industries of farming and tourism need to continue to develop and prosper so that Camp becomes more buoyant and better populated. We need a diverse economy with public and private investment in these industries. I would support strategies that increase growth in agriculture and tourism businesses.

During my time on the SAAS board I have seen an increased use of containerisation of frozen fish and FIMCO products, as well as a sizable amount of wool. A growing economy also needs a shipping service to meet increasing import demand that MOD vessels are not able to provide. I will therefore strive for the next Assembly to commit funds to support the SAAS service in the long term.

If elected I would seek to maintain high standards in health and education services, particularly for those in remote locations.

A lot of work has been carried out on testing the viability of a new port in Port William, but there is still more information needed and the most important matter is how it will be financed.

I have difficulty in accepting that any further progress can be made on the project, particularly if FIG is to be the major source of funding, until there is significant revenue from at least one producing oil field. I would therefore challenge the apparent policy where a temporary port facility can only be in place for three years.

The current Assembly has triggered a review of the immigration policy. I think immigration needs to be carefully controlled, enabling sustainable growth where people support our way of life and make a useful contribution to the economy. I would favour flexibility with the award of work permits for seasonal and short term workers to assist employers with filling posts, and there needs to be a regular review of the points system for people seeking PRP and Falklands Status.

To encourage our young people and families to stay and work in the Falklands we need to improve our social amenities which I believe we can afford to do. I would be interested to hear from residents about what facilities they would like to see made available in the Islands.

MLAs have to work with their colleagues to achieve objectives. I am sure you will win some and lose some!

Roger Edwards (Camp)

The Falkland Islands are going through exciting times. We have the prospect of great wealth from Hydrocarbons but this is unlikely to be much before 2020. For the durations of this next Assembly we will have to continue to be prudent and not spend beyond our means.

We will have some additional income from new drilling rounds and I believe some of this can be distributed to the benefit of all Islanders.

Levels of Taxation need to be reviewed and MST rates reduced to zero.

I believe we can re-introduce the Holiday Credit scheme for use on FIGAS, the Ferry and towards Lan Chile and the Airbridge flights.

FIGAS Ferry rates should be frozen for residents.

We must continue to finance improvements to Camp tracks and to black top the MPA road as spare money comes available.

I do not believe we should use our savings to build the new port but wait until royalties from Oil begin to flow. Temporary jetties in Stanley Harbour should be allowed until such times as the new port is operational.

We must continue to invest in training so that our people are in the best position possible to take up new job opportunities. Presently we treat many of our youngsters and graduates poorly and we must stop this.

We are fortunate in having some wonderful youngsters and we must give them the best education available, free of charge.

Medical services should continue to be free at the point of use.

We should give our Monopoly service notice on their licences in order to ensure we can negotiate the very best service at the lowest possible prices.

We have seen the Agriculture Department move away from pure research to a much more user friendly service and this should be encouraged as more and more farms make the transition from purely wool to both wool and meat.

Likewise we need to continue to support the Falkland Islands Meat Co. until it can stand alone and be in profit.

Import substitution aims need to be reviewed again so that more people are encouraged to take part and so that a real difference in imports is seen.

It is not always money that keeps people in Camp but rather the way of life and we must do everything we can not to change that to the detriment of those who make Camp their home.

Tourism is an important revenue earner for the Falkland's and Islanders and we must continue to do all we can to support and sustain this industry.

We must continue to rebut the Argentine lies and false claims wherever they are made. We have made great progress in public diplomacy efforts over the past four years and it is vital that we continue to invest in these as we go forward.

It has been a great privilege to represent the Camp constituency over the past four years and I hope you will vote for me once again on November 7th.

Sharon Halford (Camp)

Born 27.11.53

Married to John and have two daughters and four grandsons

First elected to Legislative Council in October 1993 for the Stanley Constituency and returned in October 1997. Elected to the Camp Constituency in November 2009.

Work: Retired

Interests: Gardening, Cooking, Horses, Fishing and my quad bike Declaration: I have a small share in Falkland Farmers Ltd.

In standing for the Camp Constituency I realise that if elected I will need to work towards the best long term interests for the future of the Falklands as a whole and at the same time do my best to continue improving the quality of life of our residents. As always the next four years could well be problematic at times, you never know what could be waiting around the corner, both internally and externally and we will need to be firm and positive in our resolve.

The Falklands has one of two futures –

- one with oil where anything could be possible, or
- one without oil where some things will be possible

Obviously I would prefer the former but over the term of the next Assembly believe that we will have to work within the latter as to do otherwise would be to spend what we do not have. As promising as oil may appear there are no guarantees and there will be no income from royalties until oil is actually flowing. It is not unknown for oil companies to walk away from projects prior to production when circumstances dictate.

Going forward, and with the above in mind, I would still like to see:

- a balanced budget
- post oil a Sovereign Wealth

Fund set up for the long term benefit of the Falklands

- improved communications for camp, especially in the area of TV coverage

- a continuation of the improvement and upgrading of the camp road network

- continued support for the abattoir

- despite rising costs we still enjoy good medical and educational facilities in the Falklands and I would like to see continued funding for both of these areas

- more work opportunities and training for our youngsters

- FI status holders, whether resident or abroad, being able to hold land in the Falklands without having to apply for a permit

- reintroduction of the Holiday Credit Scheme when it is sustainable to do so

In addition to the above some more capital items that will be required are:

- a properly designed old peoples rest/care home

- more classrooms for the overflowing schools which should also cater for special needs

- new fire appliance for Stanley Airport if BAS are to return and oil activity continues

- new aircraft for FIGAS

- new power station for Stanley

If elected any decisions I make will be with the best interests of the Falklands and their long term future in mind. Being one of eight I would need other like-minded people to agree with me to achieve some of my aims.

Candy Blackley (Stanley)

I am standing for election to the Legislative Assembly because I believe in the future of the Falkland Islands and the people who make the Islands what they are. We are privileged to live here and lots of immigrants come for two years and stay forever!

Our Future - In March we were given the opportunity to choose our future, this was done within international guidelines, and showed a united society. The referendum sent a clear message to Argentina and the World, this must be maintained so that the people of the Islands can progress and enjoy the quality of life they enjoy. We must continue to promote our rights and the wishes of Islanders.

There are many local issues that need to be addressed including but in no particular order:

Taxation - MST as it stands is a hidden form of tax. If there is a need to contribute to our medical service, change the name to reflect its use and allocate the funds to the health service.

Health Care - Although, we enjoy the provision of a good health service, public expectation is high and is forever increasing. The hospital is now an aging building needing additional space and new equipment. The MTO charge of £300 needs to go.

Elderly Care - A residential home is a priority; the accommodation offered to residents is limited and we should enhance the facilities.

Benefits - I would, if elected, pursue and support the reinstatement of some of the privileges that have been removed, priority being the single parent allowance, and the holiday credit scheme.

Dental Care - the employment of a dental hygienist and dental technician is an absolute necessity.

Oil - Our standard of living increased dramatically with the introduction of a fisheries regime, we are fortunate now with the discovery of significant hydrocarbons, care must be taken to manage our future responsibly. Oil will bring an increase to the population which will put extra strain on our services. The FIG should continue to be proactive and listen to its advisors, many of whom are Falkland Islanders with sound knowledge and experience.

Immigration - Our current immigration policy can allow our public services to be exploited; and we look forward to a more flexible but vigilant system which will benefit the Islands.

Development and Economy - To support our future development the MPA road has to be of the highest standard as it is the main road to our capital. We are advised by Government that the country is living beyond its means, however last year the figures showed a huge surplus. Additional income must be spent wisely; the tax payer or the electorate should not be investing in watery graves.

To Conclude - We are living in the 21st century, and must progress with the times. I would like to see more facilities offered to the younger generation, our future.

Jan Cheek (Stanley)

The next Assembly will face a most challenging and exciting time in the Islands' history. If chosen to represent you I would hope to bring experience, common sense and an unrivalled corporate memory to the new Assembly.

Political challenges will be many, first countering the economic and diplomatic aggression of Argentina requires a continuation of efforts in public diplomacy. Internally we will have to develop our democracy to meet the increasing demands on it. Full time MLAs who are planning to commit all their time and energy to the role are essential to this process, as is absolute integrity so that the UK is given no reason to meddle in our internal affairs. Members' full declarations of interests are more crucial than ever.

The economy will require careful management; things went badly wrong with vast sums squandered when fishing first boosted the economy. Some now unfortunately are dazzled by the figures being bandied about, but until commercial oil is actually flowing and royalties being received we must proceed with caution. In the meantime money from the exploration phase is enabling FIG to plan necessary regulation and legislation. I would argue for a review of our planning processes which may not be sufficiently robust to handle issues that will arise as a result of oil production. While we want to enable that development to go ahead it must not be at the cost of our environment and quality of life.

Income should also be used to develop the skills that will be needed for Islanders to participate in the oil industry at every level. Regrettably that is not happening because the criteria for access to funding are too limited and bureaucratic to be responsive to newly identified training needs. I believe that FIDC is failing to grasp this part of its role and would actively continue to press for this vital aspect of development, which is as much about people as projects.

Many departments including education and medical will be stretched to meet extra demand and the new Assembly will have to address this urgently if services are not to suffer.

The new Assembly will receive the recommendations from the consultation on the immigration review and I want to see any new legislation include the requirement for stringent checks on all aspects of it, for example decent wages and accommodation. Related to this the minimum wage legislation is due to come into effect in December and I would hope to see an early review to ensure that it is set at a realistic figure.

Education is making good progress but the UK system into which our students go for further and higher studies is failing in some areas and should be used selectively.

I maintain a keen interest in all aspects of government and if elected will have an open mind regarding portfolios until all new members have had a chance to discuss them. I make no rash promises but if elected undertake to work hard and listen to the electorate.

Barry Elsbey (Stanley)

The MLAs elected on November 7th will face decisions that will change the Islands for ever.

We already have one commercial oil field and there is every chance that in the next few years others will be found.

If this were to happen, it would bring tremendous wealth but, if the wrong decisions are taken, it could destroy what makes the Falkland Islands such a special place.

These decisions must not be left to 8 MLAs and members of the civil service but taken with the full knowledge and support of Islanders.

I hope that the new Assembly will function as it should in a democratic society, namely have frequent debates, discuss policies and allow MLAs to be questioned without notice. And it should be televised.

Once there is a web site for the Assembly, I see no reason why we should not follow other countries and allow the public to propose and vote for issues they want debated.

Our referendum in March was a huge success and showed the world what the true wishes of the Islanders are.

This enabled MLAs to put our case much more forcefully to the Governments of the countries we visited and I believe we are increasingly seen not as a colony but as a self financing country moving towards increasing self government.

I believe our present Constitution no longer reflects this reality. The Chief Executive is appointed by the Governor and MLAs but all Heads of Departments and indeed oversight of the whole civil service, lies with the Governor. He or she has the power to order the Chief Executive or any civil servant to act without reference to elected members. This is outdated and needs review.

We spent £1.5million over the last 3 years sending children with Special Educational Needs to the UK to be educated.

The numbers with Special Needs are growing, with one class having 47% of children affected. We need to invest that money here, helping children locally and hopefully avoiding the need to send children overseas.

The medical department is at a cross roads. The way it is presently structured has served us well for the last 20 years but we need fundamental change to make it fit for the next 20.

Recruitment is in crisis with the new Director predicting that the medical department will have spent over £350,000 on locum nurses, laboratory staff and doctors from July to the end of December this year, as against an estimate of £10,000 in the budget. Similarly, Social Services will have spent about £111,500 on locums.

If this continues, the Medical and Social Services Department could end up spending just under one million pounds on locums in this financial year, as against the £20,000 budgeted for.

This situation should never have been allowed to happen and if elected I would hope to be one of the MLAs working with the Director to bring about the required changes.

If you have other questions call me on 21212 in the evenings.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Did you know.....

Modern English speakers use the phrase "crocodile tears" to describe a display of superficial or false sorrow, but the saying actually derives from a medieval belief that crocodiles shed tears of sadness while they killed and consumed their prey. The myth dates back as far as the 14th century and comes from a book called "The Travels of Sir John Mandeville".

The plays of William Shakespeare are the source of countless modern-day sayings. The Bard is responsible for penning popular expressions like "love is blind" and "pomp and circumstance," as well as for coining thousands of now-common words including "fashionable," "sanctimonious" and "zany."

Faith Felton (Stanley)

I am standing for election on November 7th because I want to do my bit and my best to improve the lot of the Falkland Islands and its people; I have no desire to improve my own lot in life without taking you with me!

I will do all that I can to see money going into the pockets of our least well off citizens and into our infrastructure.

Our youth need a decent recreational facility; there is nothing for them to do between the Shack and the Pub! We are lucky we have good kids, but how long will that last as the population grows, especially if we become even more depressed, deluded and dissatisfied? It will happen, the same as it has everywhere else, let's be realistic about this!

We need decent roads, street lighting etc. and facilities which are fit for purpose; massive investment is needed in a number of areas now, in order to save money in the future. I want to hear people saying more often, "that was money well spent", not things like "it was so damned dark on my street last night that I nearly broke my neck falling over a pot hole, or I tripped on a big bump in the road and ripped the knee out of my new jeans"!

I want to see our money being spent on creating a place where people want to and can LIVE, and not take what they can get and leave!

I will not support the creation of any new laws which further erode our way of life; some of you may remember what that was! We are British, NOT English and I do not like this idea of adopting English law when it fits a purpose. We are self-governing and should be making laws to suit the Falklands, NOT someone of influences personal gripe!

We have a long road ahead of us with oil etc. and there is much work to do and thought to be given to many issues, the road, we are led to believe it will be paved with gold when we get there, but if this spend a pound to save a penny and robbing Peter to pay Paul policy carries on, it will not even be tarmacked!

When was the last time you heard someone say "Ah can't complain Che" when you asked how they were?

I am standing for election because I would love to hear and say those words again and if you vote for me and I get elected, I may not be able to do anything about it, but believe me I will give it a damned good go! And that is my only promise!

If you would like to discuss anything with me, please call me on 53054 or stop me if you see me. Thanks for reading and good luck on polling day, whoever you vote for, I hope it is right for us all.

Teslyn Barkman (Stanley)

AS A SIXTH generation Falkland Islander there are fundamental qualities I hold dear: self-reliance, empathy, reason, resilience, a sense of humour, and intolerance for bullying behaviour.

It's been my job to keep up with topical issues; sitting at committees and meetings, and reporting on local issues as a Penguin News journalist. I've been an ambassador for the Falklands as a face of the media, a representative on the Commonwealth Youth Parliament and by promoting the referendum in North America. This is a career path I want to develop and hopefully do some good for the Stanley constituency.

The Falklands have a lot to take pride in and that should be defended, but our failings need to be addressed proactively.

In recruitment, legislative hurdles need to be simplified and salary packages attractive enough to put people in jobs locally and tie down contracts.

Inability to recruit hospital staff has caused a disgusting overspend on locum cover undermining the quality of care we receive.

MST should be abolished, redirected to health care or given an honest name.

Our population is living longer and we need an appropriate facility for care.

Necessary precautions are being taken in oil industry development with the environmentally focused data-gap analysis group researching where gaps in knowledge still exist, particularly in sea bed impact and foraging routes of marine mammals. Nature should still be in charge, and we need a comprehensive understanding of our ecosystem before allowing industry development.

Stanley Leisure Centre has potential to be a great asset to the community, and improvements mark a change towards developing facilities every town should enjoy. We are not an economy in recession and yet we lack basic infrastructure and facilities to an embarrassing level.

I'm not advocating a spending spree of reserves but if we can set aside to save for "rainier days ahead" we could surely set aside to address issues that have been boiling in the community for years, and have literally 'pot-holed' progress. Frugality should never be at the expense of public safety and wellbeing.

The referendum proved effective for promoting the truth. Our voice engaged the people of the world and their opinions on the issue have the potential to change the view of their government.

As ambassadors for the Falklands MLAs should have continuous media training. Expanding the FIG media team could also prove useful in freeing up MLAs to deal with home issues.

Encouraging overseas students home again ensures the survival of our culture but we can't always secure them employment. Previous experience, particularly for higher-graded jobs is essential criteria; this is necessary but restrictive for those not looking to join at the bottom of the ladder.

Funds available for professional development and training should also be better promoted to ensure it is used.

I am grateful to former MLAs for encouraging the next generation to become more politically active. The Assembly should accurately represent its constituencies, welcome fresh ideas and address our long-term future, not just the next four years.

John Birmingham (Stanley)

I am standing in this election because I have a strong commitment to the Islands I came to nearly forty years ago. I believe I can make a contribution to the future running of the Falklands. I stand for Fairness, Openness and Respect. Here are some of my views.

Argentina:

I support the continuation of an active, quality but targeted PR programme. Complacency is not an option.

Medical Services:

The £300 elective medical tax has to go. Health care should be free of charge.

With a growing older population, it's time to become serious about a Care Home. The hospital is not the place for the elderly.

Education:

Our school population is growing and this will soon be a serious problem. I will be pro-active with regard to the provision of a new school.

Students overseas should be provided with suitable support so that they can be part of the Islands future. The graduate training scheme should be expanded to provide opportunities for more than just one individual.

Training:

I would like to see an increase in the number of apprentices. I support the idea of a training unit with an emphasis on vocational activities. Beckside Farm is an under-utilised facility that could provide an ideal site.

Sports Facilities:

A healthy lifestyle should be promoted which means investment in sporting facilities. I would investigate the laying down of an artificial surface to provide an additional sports ground.

MPA road:

The road is a project whose time has arrived. A five year programme by a well-resourced team could upgrade our main arterial road to a high standard. This would be real inward investment.

Housing:

We need to build more affordable housing, particularly single units. Mobile homes are not a long term solution.

Waste:

The Mary Hill spill enquiry conclusion had a line "the community will no longer tolerate an ad-hoc approach to waste disposal". I support any initiative to improve the disposal of all waste.

Oil:

Oil development is underway. The Government should be a facilitator and a regulator. There has been some confusion about certain aspects of the way forward, not least the siting of the new port. I would like to reconsider the options for port development.

Fishing:

This established industry is still the backbone of our economy. The FIG should work closely with the industry to further increase income to the Islands.

Tourism:

More emphasis needs to be placed on infra-structure development within the Islands.

Camp:

I fully support development in the Camp but question the progress of the RDS after six years of funding.

FIG workforce:

Recruitment and retention are major problems within the FIG. Why? People are our most important asset and should feel valued.

Access:

There are access difficulties around Stanley for those with mobility problems and still no lift at the Town Hall. I will do my utmost to get this long put-off project completed.

The FIG has money in the bank. Let's see some real investment in the infra-structure of the Islands.

Gavin Short (Stanley)

I am offering myself for re-election because I believe that I still have a great deal to offer my country. I am an ordinary Falkland Islander with no interests in or allegiances to any commercial interests – just to you the people and our Country.

I cannot hope to cover everything here but this is a brief resume of my views on some issues.

These next four to eight years are vital to how our country will look and be in generations from now. As we take decisions, the effects that they will have on our country and people must be foremost in our minds. We must make sure that the maximum benefit from the oil accrues to us. Local companies must have every opportunity to participate, local people who have the desire and aptitude must be given opportunities to work in the industry and no barriers be put in place that limit our participation and ability to earn decent wages. Oil is big and must be controlled by us rather than it controlling us.

We must continue to be proactive in getting our message into the international arena. We are having an effect but it's a long term project. I will never give an inch of my country to any foreign power.

Medical & education are cornerstones. We could do better and must always strive to deliver a higher service. Education is vital to our future. All young people have talents and whether they are academic or not, they should be nurtured – we need everyone.

I still want to see wages and disposable incomes back where they used to be. As well as realistic wage increases, we can also adjust the tax thresholds to help people have more cash in their pockets.

I wish to see the workers protection ordinance overhauled and include statutory leave and sick pay.

Our economy is now strong enough for the re-introduction of the old pound a day scheme

The MPA road should be resurfaced but over time.

I will not throw money at the new port, nor will I plunder the reserves until I can see that oil is happening – I will never put our country in jeopardy of being in a debt situation.

We must keep striving to diversify and strengthen our economy. Every enterprise no matter how small and job opportunity is important.

Training & localisation is extremely important to me. We must re-double our efforts.

We must never forget Camp. Stanley is not the Falklands. We must offer schemes & help but the way changes occur in the camp must be driven by the people who live there and not imposed on them.

Immigration must always focus on protecting our core population.

Medical treatment overseas charge must go.

We must press ahead with capital projects e.g. school, roads & Power & Fire stations

I am always contactable. Stop me on the street, give me a call or Facebook me with your ideas & concerns, always happy to listen. It's your country.

Michael Poole (Stanley)

Building a vision

I believe that a vision for the Islands should begin with some thought about what type of people we are and want to be. What's best about being a Falkland Islander, and how do we ensure that the Islands are a place which allows us to continue to be the kind of people we want to be?

To do this you naturally have to generalise, which can be dangerous of course, but it at least provides a starting point for discussion. From my perspective I think that, as Falkland Islanders, at our best, we are:

- Welcoming and trusting
- Resourceful & hard working
- Warm and Charitable
- Engaged and politically active
- Socially and environmentally aware

I am not suggesting that we are all of these things all of the time. However, I would suggest that it would be difficult to argue against these being values that we wish to continue to reflect as a society as a whole.

The question then becomes, how do you structure a vision for the Islands with its wide range of policy, infrastructure and economic decisions which ensures we retain and develop what is so great about living in these Islands and being an Islander?

No great surprise, but I don't have all of the answers. To do that it requires a large number of views and perspectives, and as an MLA I would see my main role as collecting and collating those views and then agreeing on a strategy with my colleagues to achieve that vision. It also requires open debate and compromise, something that we shouldn't shy away from.

This brief article is deliberately high-level, as I am sure that I will have the chance to state my views on issues of interest to you all over the coming weeks of campaigning. However, I can detail here some of the areas that I feel most strongly about today.

Oil development will pick up further pace over the next 4 years, and in parallel key decisions will have to be made regarding the future of statutory monopolies in fuel supply and telecoms provision. As we all do, I want to see local companies and individuals benefit from oil development as far as possible. We therefore need a strong code of practice in terms of local content that helps facilitate this. In terms of the monopolies on the Islands, my natural position is for markets to be opened to competition, unless there is a very compelling argument for why not. Strong regulation and oversight of monopolies is the minimum required.

I also feel very strongly about the social development of the Islands, and have been working on early plans for a community-led cinema initiative. Investment in better sporting facilities is also something I would push for.

I look forward to talking with many of you over the coming weeks and please do not hesitate to contact me with any questions.

Mike Summers (Stanley)

The next four years will see a period of unprecedented change and opportunity in the Falkland Islands.

Further exploration for oil and gas, and preparations for production, will bring opportunities for many, as well as creating some challenges. How we manage this change will determine the success of our Islands for decades to come. It is essential therefore that those who are chosen to represent you have the knowledge, the confidence and the experience to absorb advice and information received, to appreciate its full implications for the wider community, and to assess what is of long term benefit to Falkland Islanders.

The inevitable rise in the cost of living brings particular risk to those on low or fixed incomes, and they will need to be protected. At the same time we must prepare our students and existing workforce for the opportunities ahead, and clearer strategic focus on training and workforce planning is required. Clear and enforceable policies to support local businesses and entrepreneurs are essential. Let us not fail to learn lessons of the past.

The timing of future expenditure is critical, and there will be some important choices, between:

- investing now for future income, or maintaining reserves.
- competing capital expenditure demands.
- funding new services like childcare and improved care for the elderly, or providing more resilience in existing services like primary healthcare and education.

We will not be able to do everything and seeking the right balance requires careful judgement.

In the longer term, if oil revenues do materialise in 5 or 6 years time, all things will be affordable. But until then beware of those promising new projects, new services and more for everyone, without a properly defined funding plan.

For my part, to address some of the issues raised earlier, I would commit to:

- i) abolition of the last vestiges of MST;
- ii) raise tax bands annually in line with inflation;
- iii) developing a strategy to raise pensions by 50% over the next 5 years;
- iv) concentrating Government wage increases at the lower ends of the wage scales;
- v) restraining house rents for social housing needs;
- vi) producing a draft capital expenditure plan for oil and non-oil related projects for a full and open public debate on how best to invest our reserves, and in what order to tackle major projects; and
- vii) seeking stronger efforts to secure a new airlink free of Argentine interference.

International representation remains of crucial importance. Although time overseas should be less than in 2013, it remains essential to keep close contact with our key allies and supporters, and to represent our views in international fora.

I am by nature conservative, believing in a free market economy and minimal Government interference in the lives of people. I will only support legislation that is essential, I will support social programmes where there is a clear need, I will support a firmer strategic approach to the regulation of monopolies, and support strengthening our key industries for the creation of future wealth.

Norman Besley-Clark (Stanley)

If elected I would strive to seek, More Accountability, More Transparency and More Debate.

Since the overwhelming success of the Referendum the Falklands have reversed the old trend of being reactive to Argentine Propaganda, and have become more proactive.

With MLA's overseas visits, informing other Nations of the true facts of the Falklands history, present and it's future.

Now we have gained that momentum we must capitalize upon it!

Constitutional Change

The next natural progression is to change the Constitution. As recommended in the Report on

Roles & Remuneration of Legislative Assembly members (Clifton, Cockwell, McPhee 2013)

Recommendation - 20 (Page 13) "The Formal Relationship between Elected members and the Chief Executive needs to be reviewed"

To ensure that Elected Members are in control of Internal Self Government whilst recognizing the Constitutional Role of the Governor.

In other words the Chief Executive becomes answerable to Elected Members and not to The Governor as is the current situation. MLA's in turn become accountable for their Portfolios.

Education

We need to urgently invest in the Training Department to provide Qualified Instructors in the disciplines that we and the Oil Industry require.

Fast Track the Building of the New Infant & Junior School ensuring that a facility will exist for pupils to have their Lunch on site.

The current IJS could be utilized as the New Secretariat

The Provision of Nursery Tokens. (Single & Low Income Families)

HEALTH

Spoken about on many occasions, surely it's time to do something about a purpose built Old Folks Home.

The most common cause for distress in Senior Citizens is the feeling of Isolation.

The setting up of a SYKPE centre could go a long way to help alleviate this.

THE ECONOMY

We have fared better than most Country's during this period of World Recession.

Whilst a watchful eye should be kept on our Finances some investment on our infrastructure must be made, so that we are able to cope with the demands that we and a looming oil & gas industry may require, along with additional Social Housing requirements.

Minimum / Living Wage

A realistic living wage is a priority. An alternative measure to that being used (Median) is the (AHC)

After Household Costs which realistically reflects the amount of money Families & Individuals have as disposable income (Child Poverty Action Group) CPAG.

To help alleviate the continuing erosion of the Retirement Pension an interim solution would be to extract the pension from the tax calculation for those earning less than £25,000

Cap All FIG Charges: For two years

FIG Employees: Do not feel valued, There is no decent incentive scheme.

A review of staff Training and an incentive scheme should be looked at.

Reintroduce - Winter Time Charge

Reintroduce - Holiday Credit Scheme

Lynda Buckland (Stanley)

I'm standing for election because I believe our local people and businesses need to be first to benefit from improvements made in the Islands, due to word restrictions I have abbreviated all the areas I would want to see addressed by a future assembly. For those that don't know I'm 45 years old and a 7th Generation Falkland Islander. I'm proud of my heritage and dedicated to making these Islands a place that my daughter: Kristy and Grandchildren: Pearl & Kira can be proud of. I've worked for over 6 years at FIDC as a Business Advisor, and have a BA Hons History Degree I gained as a mature student. I would like others to have the opportunities that I have had. If you would like to talk further please phone me on 54322 or email Lynda.buckland@yahoo.com for a full copy of my manifesto.

Locals must be able to secure employment at every level of FIG and an external body should be appointed to ensure that locals that do not meet the criteria are offered the training to secure the position.

We must have more social housing for those that need it and only Doctors and Nurses should precede them on our housing requirements, we also need to continue the Sapper's Hill housing development to first time buyers at affordable prices.

MST should be used to provide Statutory Sick Pay to those being sent overseas medical, who do not receive employment sick pay, this should not be means tested, going overseas on medical is not a jolly, its accessing a treatment that is not provided here. We must abolish the £300 levy to access overseas medical treatment for the same reason.

We must pay whatever is required to employ only the best Doctors and Nurses money can buy, medical care is non-negotiable.

People who require 24 hours supported living should not be residing in the hospital; we must build suitable accommodation with dedicated staff now.

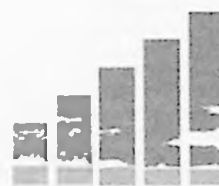

Those that can work should, and in order to ease the burden on young families I would fight to provide free childcare for all working parents, this would not only alleviate the pressures of a rising cost of living but enable many families to be able to own their own homes.

The provision for training funding must allow those not employed by FIG to take 50% of their required training costs as a loan, and when it does not meet the skill shortage requirement 100% loan funding should be provided.

The roads within the Falklands are now beyond embarrassing, while I admit to not having the answers surely we can make a start on surfacing the MPA road.

A first class sports facility is long over due in these Islands, and we need to start planning where ours is going to go now!

Serious consideration has got to be given to a Town Council, not only would this provide a training ground for MLA's it would also serve to ensure they were kept dedicated.

FALKLAND ISLANDS
DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

FIDC Oil & Gas Industry Directory

FIDC is building a directory for the Oil Industry that includes Falkland Island businesses already or wishing to become involved in the industry.

The Directory is being compiled in coordination with Premier Oil and Noble Energy, and could involve other licensees in the future. The purpose of the directory is to ensure that oil companies understand which local businesses wish to be involved in the industry and to identify ways in which both FIDC and oil companies can assist local companies in prequalifying for oil industry work in the Falkland Islands. FIDC intends to develop its own funding scheme to assist local businesses acquiring the relevant certification and management systems for pre qualification.

If you wish to be included within the directory and participate in certification discussions please contact Michael Betts - Phone: 27211 or E-mail: mbetts@fidc.co.fk

Record breaking Penguins win the big hockey three

TRYING to keep your eye on the ball as it whips around the gym hall is hard enough but it has been a particularly exhausting season watching Penguins.

They've earned all their prizes along the way and dominated over the rest of the Hockey Club teams, winning all three of the clubs competitions this year. The skills Pens have shown has been a credit to their team ethic, plenty of carefully placed passing to discombobulate their opponents.

Club Chairman Marcus Morrison said: "I really don't think you will see another hockey team like it and to do what we did this season was nothing short of brilliant." Though he is undeniably right he may be slightly biased as Penguins' Captain.

The team has won a total of 31 games, drew one and lost only one over the season, a very difficult record to beat said Mr Morrison who credited his team's commitment, spirit and willingness to 'never give up'.

"The combination of the team worked really well with the Evans boys linking up in attack. Ricky Leyton as the big hitting centre, Kevin Ross as the defensive man and Sarah Shepherd and Paula Munoz constantly hassling and harassing players into the ground.

"Sarah also was the top scoring female player in the Energise Shield and the Sure Russell Smith Memorial Trophy I believe, so massive credit to her. The Evans boys also destroyed a whole host of records this season and their partnership up front was one of the main reasons for our huge goal difference."

Marcus was a driving force behind his team's success too, achieving four shutouts against some challenging teams. (A shutout is when a goalie manages save every shot.)

It has been an exciting year of hockey and the club has introduced new common sense rules to keep the games fair and fun, said Mr Morrison, adding that though the playing season is over there is still plenty of work to be done: "I will be working hard with the current committee fundraising for Zug, Switzerland in 2015 for the ISBHF World Ball Hockey Championships." Next month will be the official prize giving and the club's AGM, organising training events and also looking to obtain funds to bring a coach to assist with national team development. But for now it is time for Penguins to revel in their victory and the records they've smashed along the way, winning the big three, breaking the all time goals in a game, the greatest winning streak and winning with an incredible margin of 20-0 against Hurricanes.

With a re-draw of teams in the new season it will be exciting to see what the new teams will look like.

The Cup winning match

THE winner of the Stanley Cup was decided by a single game last Sunday. After a months break due to delays the top two teams in the competition Panthers and Penguins took a while to light up the scoreboard with no scoring in the first 17 minutes of the game.

But a few tumbles in the box area and some shots off the bar provided entertainment enough to keep viewers guessing which team would take the prize.

Good shots were being made and the pressure was mounting to find a goal.

As if from no where, Penguins Kyran Evans caught goalie Ever Perelta napping and brushed in a goal before anyone could see a shot was possible, proving why he is the competitions top scorer. It was clearly the boost Penguins needed as it was followed a minute later by Duane Evans scooping in the ball by the goal.

With four minutes left in the first half Kevin Ross tempted Ever out of his box and tapped in a third for Penguins.

It was 3:0 at halftime and both teams were warmed up for the second.

In a brotherly pincer movement Duane recovered for the ball and ran upfield to pass across the hall to Kyran. This is a well rehearsed play we have seen all this season, an "Evans assist" most commonly known as an "Evans assist and goal."

Panthers were quick to retaliate and Karl's goal was met with a raucous cheer, the big cats were the underdogs and they were not going to make it easy for the top team. Good marking and threatening shots from Panthers pushed Marcus to raise the volume of his command to, "hassle guys, hassle".

Karl assisted over distance to Frank O'Sullivan who swooped in a deft goal; Panthers were scrapping for glory. Goalie Ever Perelta was bombarded by Penguins' desperate to defend their spotless record so far and claim the cup.

With six minutes left Kyran found another goal and shortly after both teams of tired faces enjoyed a drawn out restart after the ball was shot into the viewing area. Duane assisted Ricky on to the scoreboard with a skilful play, by passing the ball close to the goalie in order to disorientate him. Never one to give up Karl stole back the ball and stylishly flicked in another for Panthers, but with two minutes left the game looked sealed.

The furious last minute of the season dominated by Penguins was aptly won by them, and added the last piece of silverware, the Stanley Cup, to their pile of success.

They won 6:3 after an admirable display of hockey from both teams which signed off a good season of matches. And left us all wondering what was going to happen when the teams were re-drawn.

Archery awards

AFTER a second successful year the Falklands Archery Association celebrated their achievements in a small ceremony at Malvina House Hotel. Ian Thomson and Argos Ltd, Paul Ellis and Martec Ltd, the Shackleton Fund, Falkland Islands Overseas Games Association, Décor Services, Ray and Gaye Robson, the Chandlery, His Excellency the Governor Nigel Haywood and Rowena Summers were thanked for their generous support.

Medals were present to the lucky winners by Ian Thomson of Argos Ltd.

The Argos Challenge Trophy for the month of September was won by Connor McLeod, and a new scheme of badge awards, designed by Tony Ellis, were awarded to the promising young archers. Chairman of FIOGA Mike Summers, presented the badges to the Junior Club members.

GENERAL ELECTION 7TH NOVEMBER 2013

Emergency and Replacement Proxies

The Deputy Returning Officer wishes to inform electors that there are provisions to enable emergency and replacement proxies for the upcoming general election. Under the following circumstances, an elector may be able to apply for an emergency proxy/replacement proxy:

- (a) an elector is required to leave the Islands to receive emergency medical treatment;
- (b) an elector is required to leave the Islands as the spouse or family member to accompany someone else to receive medical treatment;
- (c) an elector is required to leave the Islands on urgent business work;
- (d) an elector is required to attend to a family member overseas who is seriously ill;
- (e) an elector is required to attend a funeral overseas;
- (f) an elector suffers delays in travel arrangements outside the elector's control which means that they cannot be in the Islands at the relevant time;
- (g) any other exceptional reason which means that the elector would not otherwise be able to vote; or
- (h) if an elector has appointed a proxy to vote for them on their behalf and the proxy will be unable to vote on their behalf because any of the criteria above apply to the proxy, then the elector may appoint an emergency replacement proxy.

The application must be accompanied with supporting evidence that demonstrates that there are compelling reasons of urgency and that the application is not made on the basis of merely convenience.

Applications for consideration need to be sent to the Registration Officer, Town Hall, Stanley no later than 4pm Monday 4th November (three working days before the date of the election).

For further information please contact Beth Dent on 27269 or email registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

BFBS TV Services from Sapper Hill

Due to recent damage, BFBS are experiencing problems with the TV equipment on Sapper Hill. In an effort to reduce the possibility of further damage to the equipment they will be reducing the output power slightly, which could mean some properties in the outer areas of Stanley experiencing further outages and pixelation over the next week or so. They are arranging for spares to be flown down on the MoD air bridge as soon as possible to resolve the problems. BFBS apologise for any inconvenience caused and ask that viewers bear with them whilst they carry out the necessary repairs.

PUBLIC NOTICE

PLANNING APPEAL: 6 JOHN STREET, STANLEY

Notice is hereby given of a planning appeal lodged by Lucille McMullen against the decision by the Planning and Building Committee on 3 October 2013 to impose a Condition on Planning Permission 123/13/PB that the proposed dwelling at 6 John Street is situated facing north-south or east-west on the plot. The reason for the Committee decision is to fit with traditional central Stanley house footprint.

Third parties are invited to make written representations within 28 days of this notice, by Friday 22 November. These should be sent to the Environmental Planning Officer, Environmental Planning Department, Malvinas House Gardens, Stanley mchiverton.planning@taxation.gov.fk Tel: 28480. The planning application, committee report and committee decision can be inspected at the Environmental Planning Department.

The South Atlantic Islands Accountants Association has been set up to assist all professionals within the South Atlantic Islands. It is also hoping to assist via support and mentoring, any students currently studying. Amongst our professionals we have considerable experience and also an examination marker that may be able to give you tips and advice. The aim is to have some student meetings so that you can meet with all of the other students that are also studying. Therefore if you are studying for any of the professional accountancy exams then please contact saiaa@horizon.co.fk and register yourself and we will be in touch to let you know more details about the group and how we can possibly help you. If you are a professional accountant with any of the recognised worldwide institutes and we have not contacted you then please contact us too.

NOTICES

2013 election candidate Teslyn Barkman

I am standing in the Falkland Islands General Election on November 7 because I believe the next Assembly needs a pro-active member with a new approach.

I stand for:
- improvements in administration,
- protection of our environment,
- recognising the views of our community,
- securing our economic future,
- and ushering in a new political future to protect our home, culture and prosperity.

To discuss any issue or request a copy of my manifesto please call 53583, email teslyn@hotmail.co.uk or join in on Facebook: Barkman 2013. Copies of my manifesto are also available online and at Stanley Post Office.

PERSONAL/NOTICES

Happy 12th Birthday Lachlan for today, Love Mum and Fergus xx

We are finally in! Still a lot of work to be done but we can finally say we are enjoying our house. We would like to thank everyone involved in helping our dream come true. Special thanks to the following for not only providing a service but also for being there every step of the way, giving us advice when needed: C&R Construction, Wayne Clement, Tony Courtney and Decor Services. We also want to thank Standard Chartered Bank, CFL, Nigel Bishop, Bonners Haulage, Joseph, Luis, Martin, Ever, Jose Luis, Peter, FIG, FIC, Lifestyles, Falkland Farmers, Suministros Galicia (Uruguay), Inal (Punta Arenas), our neighbours at Mink Park for being very patient and our friends and family for all your support. Hopefully we have mentioned everyone... We are extremely grateful to you all! All the best, Sebastian, Phoebe, Nicole and Joshua.

It is with deep sadness that we report the death of Jaime Robertson, aged 53 - son of Jim and Robin, formerly of Fox Bay West - in Sydney, Australia on the 19th October. It comes after a long illness, bravely borne. He leaves behind a wife and young daughter.

The Stanley Netball Club would like to advise that there will be an EGM on Friday 8th November at the Narrows Bar from 7-8pm.

The Tabernacle Church are holding on Saturday 9th November, from 12noon until 2pm, another of their popular "Soupers Saturdays". Come along to the Tabernacle with your family and friends and enjoy a light lunch of homemade soup, bread with tea/coffee and cake. The Ark Christian Bookshop will also be open for the sale of Christmas Cards and Christian books, including a wide selection of children's books. If you need transport please call Jim Ward on 21851.
