Local beauty spot on the cards for de-mining

THE Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been given permission to undertake an investigation in the Yorke Bay area this summer, which could eventually lead to the entire beach being cleared of the Argentine mines laid in 1982.

The site is within the National Nature Reserve of Cape Pembroke and prior to the Argentine invasion was a popular beauty and recreation area for the residents of Stanley. It has been out of bounds for more than 30 years; fenced with barbed wire carrying 'danger mines' signs.

At Wednesday's meeting of the Environmental Planning Committee, Nick Rendell (Environmental Officer) noted that the activities proposed are different to previous de-mining work with large amounts of sand and material being removed from within the minefield fence to coastal green areas currently accessed by the public.

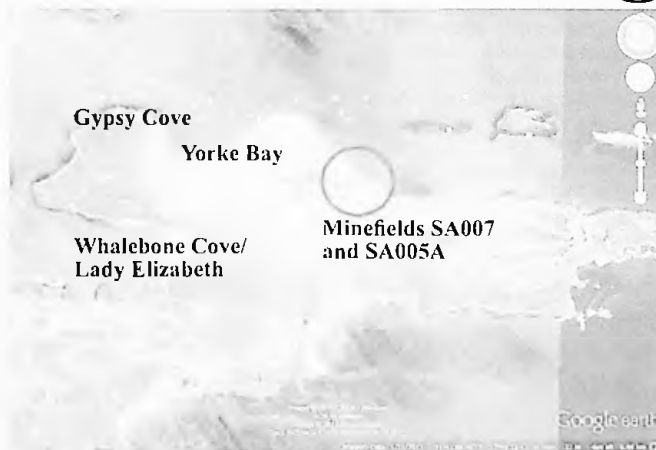

This would impact on access along the south-side of Yorke Bay and the material could be left there for several years with minefield fences moved to surround it, he said.

However it would hopefully lead to the opening of the entirety of Yorke Bay, said Mr Rendell, adding, "This is great, but there will be some short/medium term impact on access and aesthetics."

It was agreed that bringing the land back into public use outweighed the potential damage to existing vegetation which would gradually return to its original state over time.

The Committee chaired by MLA Michael Poole considered points put forward by Grant Munro on behalf of the Friends of Cape Pembroke Group and also Falklands Conservation.

Both suggested that ground

Map showing where the initial investigation project will take place work to achieve best standards for the environment be carried out, while FC's Chief Executive Officer Esther Bertram added that FIG should ensure, "a formal commitment to the long-term management of the site's natural assets occurs."

Ms Bertram questioned why the work was being carried out in summer which could lead to undue disturbance to breeding wildlife and added that the meteorological parameters would differ to those of a winter investigation.

Director of Public Works Colin Summers explained that a conscious decision had been made for the investigation to take place in summer when the sand would be drier and there was more wind to measure the movement of the material. There would also be less impact on the environment with machinery in the area during the dry months.

The area had been selected as most suitable because aerial photographs which have monitored the sand dune movement over a period of time had provided better information for that particular site.

Mr Summers said there was a commitment by the FCO to clear the minefields by 2019, but added that it was dependent on what the investigation this summer revealed; it is expected to be completed by January 2016.

"They know what they are looking for and where to look for it," he said, adding, "they don't expect the mines to have moved, but to have become more covered by sand."

Committee member Gary Clement noted that this had also been the case at Surf Bay where an extensive area of sand had been mechanically shifted and sieved to clear a minefield.

"You can hardly tell that operation took place now," he said.

Approving the application the committee agreed seven conditions be attached which included that access would be from the east end of the FIGAS runway to reduce vehicular impact on the area.

The mechanics of the Yorke Bay minefield investigation

THE proposal is for preliminary studies to ascertain the best de-mining approach. It will have some impact on the natural environment and will involve the removal of dunes. However, without this work it will not be feasible to undertake the de-mining of Yorke Bay in the future.

The proposal involves the excavation of three investigation lanes/entry points from safe ground to the south of the minefield fence. Excavation will then proceed towards the SA007 minefield panels using mechanical equipment. The aim is to look for any evidence of landmines, unexploded ordnance (UXO) and other related metadata.

The route of excavation will follow a straight path unless there is evidence to require otherwise and will proceed as far as possible, limited only by time and, possibly, penguin activity. If penguins foreshorten the distance, whilst time remains, then a fresh line of excavation will be selected.

The depth of excavation will be guided by the details in the minefield folder and will be decided on a day-by-day basis. The aim will be to go deep enough to ensure any mines in the path of the excavator are located. Sand extracted from the area will be taken to an area outside of the current minefield fence, where it will be handled so that any solids, including mines and UXO can be separated from the sand itself.

The sand will not be returned to the area from which it will be taken but will be piled up in a suitable location so that some insight can be gained into the movement of sand over time.

Comment by Acting Editor Sharon Jaffray

STILL stuck in the doldrums of the slow news season it was with some enthusiasm I pounced on the Planning and Building Committee agenda this week. Especially as there was talk of a trial clearance of mines at Yorke Bay. (See front page story)

For those of us old enough to recall our carefree youth pre-1982, the idea of being able to access this local beauty spot again is a truly exciting one. I may even be a tad over-excited, maybe akin to some Islanders now living abroad some of whom seem to think that if they return they will regain some of their youth.

In the cold light of day I suspect Yorke Bay is not the never ending expanse of white sand with sparkling pools of warm shallow water to paddle and wallow in on numerous scorching days throughout the long summer, that I nostalgically recall. For a start, it's been a long time since we had such a summer.

But on the plus side there is once again a chance that Falklands' children (and the young at heart) will be able to store such fond memories for the long cold days of winter (and old age).

There is no denying that Yorke Bay is a pretty magnificent amenity to have so close to town. Think Surf Bay and multiply it by at least a hundred.

There will inevitably be some quibbling about how the operation should be carried out and even some bids to make money out of it with impact assessments and the like, but to my mind the benefits of having access to the entire beach in the long-term far outweigh a bit of upheaval and even a bit of mess on the accessible parts of Penguin Walk in the short-term.

As one who learned to drive a good old 250cc two-stroke Suzuki down that beach at a tender age (and still bear the scars to prove it) I am not so optimistic that it will all happen while I can still give my horses a good gallop down the waters edge... but I'm hoping there will be enough charge in the mobility scooter to leave my mark with a few doughnuts in the sand.

I WAS nearly late for the above mentioned meeting as for more than a decade I have been alerted to such gatherings by the previous DPW bounding gazelle-like past the office window at great speed. Being a bit of a traditionalist I have now asked the new DPW to also provide suitable warning for me to grab notebook and pen and give chase - it's one to keep an eye out for...

Bank holiday for South Georgia toothfish

EVERY country has its bank holidays. Some are widespread such as Christmas Day and Good Friday, others are unique such as Peat Cutting Monday in the Falklands and Melon Day in Turkmenistan.

South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands has its own bank holidays set by the Commissioner for South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands each year.

On September 4 (today), Toothfish Day is celebrated to follow the end of the toothfish season at South Georgia.

To help you join in the spirit of Toothfish Day here are some toothfish facts! Did you know that:

- The average weight of a commercially caught toothfish is 7-10kg but they can exceed 100kg.
- Toothfish can live for up to 50 years and can grow to lengths of over 2m.
- Toothfish live in cold waters (1-4 Celsius) and can be found in the South Atlantic, Pacific, and Indian Oceans as well as around sub-Antarctic islands.

• The South Georgia Toothfish Fishery has been recognised as one of the best managed fisheries in the world and has been certified by the Marine Stewardship Council (MSC) for over ten years.

• FPV Pharos SG, undertakes regular patrols to prevent illegal fishing in South Georgia waters.

• This year 2,200 tonnes of toothfish have been caught around South Georgia by six vessels. Strict vessel licence conditions set by the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands include stringent safety requirements, and measures to protect birds and other sea life.

• It is a condition of the fishery that every toothfish vessel has an independent scientific observer onboard ensuring 100% coverage.

The observers assist with fish tagging and release to monitor toothfish stocks and keep them healthy.

• All of South Georgia's toothfish catch is carefully checked and reweighed in Stanley to support the Marine Stewardship Council's Chain of Custody.

• Customers can increasingly use data collected by vessels to trace back individual fish to the exact time and place at which it was caught.

So, if you are looking for a reason to celebrate this Friday then raise a glass to toothfish - a nice white will go with it swimmingly!

No approach from Argentine uni

DIRECTOR of Education Tom Hill has confirmed that no approach has been made to the Falkland Islands Education Department regarding a free scholarship scheme with a Patagonian university.

The National University of San Juan Bosco, based in the Chubut province in Patagonia is said to be offering 10 scholarships that will include free flights to and from Argentina, an allowance and the possibility of lodging in a university residence.

Argentine official Daniel Filmus recalled that in the beginning of the 1970s (when he was a first generation Argentine teenager), dozens of Falklands youngsters were offered scholarships and had studied on the Argentine mainland.

In 1971 Argentina signed an agreement with the UK allowing it to offer different programs and services to the Falkland Islanders in the health, labour and education sectors. At the beginning of the program five scholarships were offered, expanding to 10 in 1972, and then 30 in 1974. MP/PN

Get snapping to brighten up Ross Road

A SECTION of Ross Road will become an outdoor art gallery, showcasing images from Falklands' photographers this summer.

The idea is the second initiative from Julie Halliday to encourage local artists to get their work out there and stems from an outdoor exhibition she saw in London quite a few years ago.

In the back of her mind for some three or four years now, she told Penguin News that after the success of the Falklands Framed exhibition last year, she decided, "yeah, I can do this," and jumped right in.

The idea is to have a picture printed on to 1.2m x 1.2m sheets of aluminium substrate. There will be approximately 32 panels with a single image on each selected from five categories: Natural Elements, People, Creatures, Architecture and Sea and Landscapes.

Mrs Halliday said she was also hoping to publish a book with all the images plus some of the images that are runners up.

The exhibition will be called 'Essence of Our Community' and will run throughout the tourist season.

Images ideally need to be submitted by September 15, but the deadline may be extended she said.

To submit an image you can drop off a digital copy directly to Julie Halliday at Studio 52 on Ross Road or email to studio52@horizon.co.uk with your name, image title and a description of your image.

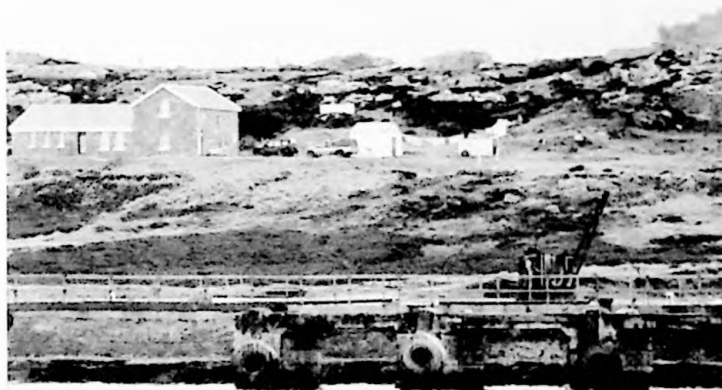

You can submit to as many categories as you wish (max of three per category), however you cannot enter the same image into more than one category.

All photographers need to be living in the Falkland Islands or are a Falkland Islands citizen.

There will be six or seven images selected from each category culminating in the Essence of Our Community final exhibition.

As with the Falklands Framed exhibition which raised more than £12,000 for the Stephen Jaffray Memorial Fund, all the panels will be auctioned or sold for charity at the close of the exhibit.

"All entrants must understand that any image submitted may be used for marketing and promotional purposes for the exhibition and subsequently produced into a book to showcase the exhibition with the proceeds going to a local charity," said Mrs Halliday.

Fortuna prepares to power up the Camber

LOCAL fishing company Fortuna Ltd have been given the go-ahead to lay a high voltage power line and water line from the south side of Stanley harbour to the Camber, just west of the Narrows.

The Planning and Building Committee discussed several issues of safety which had been put forward by various interested parties on Wednesday morning, but decided that any damage to the cable or pipe could only impact on the applicant by way of costs.

Fortuna Ltd currently use the Camber docking area as an alternative to FIPASS for laid up fishing vessels and had indicated in their application that it would be cheaper to replace the cable and/or pipe two or three times rather than laying a cable and pipe underground from Moody Brook.

Harbour Master Malcolm Jamieson did not oppose the application, but said that both FIG and Fortuna should recognise the risk of a vessel either mistakenly anchoring over the top of the lines or even accidentally dragging an anchor over the line if caught out in bad weather. He also raised the issue of possible dredging of the harbour in the future. He concluded that it was a risk Fortuna would need to accept and that FIG or any future harbour authority would need to maintain reasonable control over.

Director of Public Works Colin Summers explained that should a jigger or other vessel drag an anchor, as one had last year over the proposed cable placement area, it would trip the electricity supply to Stanley, but that it could be restored at no extra cost to Government within 15 minutes. Fortuna Ltd would however have to replace the cable as it can not be joined once broken.

The volume of water used would be relatively small as it was only for laid up vessels and staff on the dock and a means of monitoring to ensure there was not a loss into the harbour could be investigated, said Mr Summers.

On the subject of dredging, he said that as time went by and the cable became embedded in silt and other materials on the harbour floor, the risk of it being damaged was much reduced.

Head of Planning Steve Butler in providing an assessment (in place of the Planning Officer who had declared an interest) said development of the Camber Dock was broadly supported by the Development Plan and that conditions had been proposed to respond to the relevant concerns raised.

He noted however that the issues of liability for either the applicant, FIG or harbour users were not planning issues and could be considered further when a Lands Committee application was made.

... more planning news

DEVELOPMENT goes ahead within the Historic Dockyard site as outline approval for the erection of a timber frame building for exhibition space for the Museum was approved at Wednesday's Planning and Building Committee meeting.

The construction of a log cabin at their property at 15 Ross Road was approved for Mr and Mrs Colin Davies subject to standard conditions as was Allan Fowler's application to build a car port onto the existing garage at 4 Capricorn Road, although there was a need to reduce it by 1.5 metres to comply with visibility requirements.

Stanley Services Ltd had their plans for The Paddock to the rear of the Malvina House Hotel amended to omit the road access to St Mary's Walk and to include 12 parking spaces for the building currently under construction.

The siting of a mobile home to the front of the current property at 3 Capricorn Road for Neil Finlayson was the only application to be refused on the grounds that it did not comply with policy.

Code for fishing vessel crews

EXECUTIVE Council have reviewed a paper from the Director of Fisheries on a voluntary Code of Practice for fishing vessel crew members.

MLA Phyl Rendell said it was an initiative to address the losses at sea of fishermen working in the Illex fishery.

All agreed that the Code was a good start, but further work now needed to be done to clarify what FIG is actively doing to improve conditions for fishermen.

The Director of Fisheries believes crew, in some cases, want to leave vessels because they do not like the work and vessel captains must allow this to happen via launches and not by jumping into the water. The Code sets out a number of practical proposals such as providing information on the vessels about the cold waters of the South Atlantic in multiple languages.

In addition to approving the Code, Executive Council members asked that a Port Welfare Committee be established and a public awareness campaign held as soon as possible.

MLAs match fundraising

THE Nepal Earthquake Appeal account closed last week with a massive £31,578.14 raised by the Falklands population of less than 3,000 and the Legislative Assembly has announced that the entire amount will be matched by the Government.

It was initially thought that £25,000 would be adequate to match local fund raising and this was duly added to the Disaster Aid Relief fund.

Good work by everyone involved - £63,156 is winging its way to where it is most needed.

Con Ball sellout

CONSERVATION Ball tickets sold out in just six minutes on Tuesday morning with a record number of tables available this year. A spokesperson thanked everyone who bought tickets, adding that the continued support from the community was very much appreciated. "Also sorry to those who were just pipped to the post this year, but we are really excited that the ball still creates such a buzz."

Last year £34,000 was raised and the team at FC is hoping to match, or even better, raise more this year.

Campers Bash

Don't forget the Rural Business Association's fundraising Campers Bash on Saturday. Tickets available from Southern Imports. Live band and music from DJ Heather for a night of fun.

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into her working week

LAST week was a busy one with most of the standard weekly meetings and some catching up to do after the recess. I also stood in on Executive Council for MLA Mike Summers who is on holiday for the rest of this week. That meeting, as reported elsewhere, was largely taken up with oil related papers as oil companies move on to further exploration wells. Fortnightly meetings of Executive Council were intended, among other things to enable speedier action on important papers.

With so much change and development going on the enormity of what has been achieved in the last few years in housing development only really hit home when giving a running commentary to grandchildren just returned after two years away. The Sapper Hill loops have some really attractive houses with much hard work obviously going into gardens and some landscaping. I know how much effort goes into creating a decent garden, making peaty soil workable and productive, creating shelter and the trial and error to see what will thrive. Without any prompting by me it was also encouraging to hear the children talking about wanting to retain green space and common recreational areas. Listening to sub-teens should be compulsory for anyone in any position of power, their directness and simple logic is refreshing.

As I mentioned in the Assembly meeting last week, it would be useful to know more of what people would like included in public meetings. I have had some say they like informative presentations, at every meeting while others would prefer more open meetings. While I do believe one of the purposes of our meetings is to answer any question put to us, there is a danger of such meetings becoming rambling and repetitive if not well managed. We take pride in the fact that we are probably the only country in the world where the entire elected government are open for questions from the public every month. The question is that if few come to the meetings are they actually valued by our constituents, could we better organise the meetings for our constituents?

Noble and Premier drilling plans given the go ahead

THE most recent meeting of Executive Council (ExCo) was dominated by matters relating to oil exploration and development, with eight papers dealt with on the day.

Director of Mineral Resources, Stephen Luxton, and Head of Environmental Planning, Steve Butler attended the meeting which firstly addressed a paper on the Review of Noble Energy's Offshore Exploration Drilling Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for the Rhea-1 Well in PL001 (North Falklands Basin).

MLA Phyl Rendell said it was the third EIS before ExCo this year so the process was better understood and the standard of the cases had improved. Questions raised about the content of the EIS during the consultation period had been addressed by Noble Energy and MLAs were satisfied with the responses.

It was noted that Falklands Conservation had referred to a new element regarding offsetting hydrocarbon emissions when drilling wells. The legislation does not require this to happen but asks if there is any provision in the EIS. This is a matter that will be considered by FIG for when the oil industry moves to a production phase.

Members were content to agree that the EIS was fit for purpose and that the additional information in the appendices should be attached to any consent to drill.

Noble Energy's Oil spill Contingency Plan Appendix B Rhea-1 Well was also approved as an addition to an earlier plan.

MLA Rendell said Noble Energy's work concluded that a blow-out from the Rhea well would have a smaller impact than from the wells drilled by Premier, and this was reflected in their modelling.

MLAs also advised the Governor to action the Director of Mineral Resources to give Noble consent to drill the well.

Two papers on Premier Oil's activities were also considered. An application for an exemption for an EIS requirement from Premier Oil concerning the drilling of the Jayne East well was approved. "Premier has learnt a great deal about the basin when drilling previous wells and has decided to use a more robust drilling design for this well," said MLA Rendell.

The outcome is that some more cutting than originally planned will come to the surface of the seabed and there will be slightly more carbon release. Members welcomed the more conservative drilling approach and agreed that this mitigated against small increases in emissions and cuttings.

The second Premier Oil paper obtained consent to drill Jayne East. MLAs agreed there was no requirement for a further EIS in relation to drilling the well.

The next paper referred to the need for further research in order to develop environmental legislation for offshore hydrocarbon activities. Members supported the need to progress this work further and agreed to put the work out to tender. This will include looking at the Australian/Norwegian model introducing an "Environmental Case" structure and it was agreed that this could be addressed and brought back to ExCo for further consideration.

A paper on the division of offshore environmental regulatory roles and responsibilities between the Mineral Resources and Environmental Departments was discussed. With a considerable amount of work being undertaken and a good deal of cross-over between departments, the paper sets out clearly who does what. Members agreed the recommendations as to the role of each department along with an annual review on progress.

The last oil related paper addressed the possible scenarios for export of oil from the Sea Lion field. Premier Oil had asked for consideration to be given by FIG to off-loading crude oil inshore, due to the perceived weather conditions at the Sea Lion well site. Members agreed that the concept should be reviewed further by engaging consultants to address Premier's proposals. MLA Rendell said the public would be consulted on these matters as the plans evolve.

SCB's Liverpool FC signed shirt draw

THE second annual draw for a signed Liverpool Football Club shirt to raise funds for Standard Chartered Bank's chosen charity, 'Seeing is Believing' took place on Monday morning.

KEMH employee Vince Keegan was the lucky winner, although he confessed in a FIRS interview that he was not a LFC supporter himself, and had purchased the tickets with a good friend in mind.

SCB manager Stuart Horse-

wood said more than 300 tickets had been sold and together with donations £1,500 had been raised for the bank's global charity which assists blind people who can be cured by a simple operation.

Standard Chartered Bank matches all donations received, so in total £3,000 was raised.

Stuart Wallace as the previous year's winner made the draw in the hope he would share his good luck.

Ten consolation prizes of a goody bag containing a Liverpool scarf and special cap, a water bottle and four beer mat coasters with the Liverpool FC emblem were won by: Myrtle Clingham, Martyn Gilson-Clarke, Daisy Gapol, Stacey Bragger, Paul Banks, Val Berntsen, David Peck, Jake Hawsworth, Michael Johnson and Lindsay Bonner.

If you have not already got your prize, it can be collected from the bank.

Earwig project on schedule

THE Environmental Committee has confirmed that the project biological control of the European Earwig project is well underway.

Currently the fly pupae, which will be introduced as a natural predator to the Earwigs, are being collected in the UK and although progress had been slow to begin with, the project was now on schedule.

If everything else goes according to plan the first trials should take place in November this year.

FCO policy concerns

At the same meeting concern was raised over the Conservative 'Blue Belt' initiative, a proposal by UK Members of Parliament to create and improve marine protected areas in the UK's Overseas Territories.

Committee members were worried that the UK Government was getting too involved in Falkland Island policy making.

However, in a memo sent this week to the Falklands Government the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) assured there would be no enforcement of policies and any proposed would need local agreement.

The Committee agreed to discuss the matter further before a formal response from the Falklands Government was sent to the FCO.

FI smoko-break at Rutland Birdfair

Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB), Falklands Conservation (FC) and Falkland Island Holidays (FIH) all represented the Falkland Islands again at this year's British Bird watching Fair (Birdfair) held on the RSPB's reserve at Rutland Water in the UK.

All three stands were packed from opening on Friday and traditional Falklands hospitality was being doled out in the form of Granddad Luxton's Scorpion Biscuits (a West Falkland smoko favourite) from the FIH stand.

Jenny Luxton of FIH said they were kept busy promoting the wonderful abundance of wildlife in our unspoilt environment. "We emphasised our awareness of the Conservation of such an asset and having Falkland Islands Tourism and Conservation in the same row helped to promote this," she said.

Lectures are a major part of the Birdfair experience, and the Falklands featured strongly in this area too with Martin Beaton giving three lectures on his life-style on Weddell Island, the wild-life there and a sprint through the birds of the Falklands.

Margaret Carr gave a more detailed lecture on Penguins, Albatross and Shags.

Falkland Islands Holidays' offer of a free prize draw of a seven-night package in the Falklands was met with enthusiasm and almost 500 tickets were snapped up.

Ms Luxton said it was interesting how many people having visited the Islands retain an interest, "and come and visit us on the stand to talk about their experience and their hopes to return."

Public notice - Trout fishing in the Falkland Islands

Brown/Sea trout can be fished from September 1st until April 30th. Fishermen do not need a licence to fish but the daily bag limit is 6 brown trout for all waterways, except for the Murrell River, which has a daily bag limit of 3 trout and each fish must weigh over 1.5lb (0.5kg). The native zebra trout can not be fished.

The Environmental Planning Department wishes to remind fishermen that landowner permission is required before fishing on private land. On the Murrell River, fishing is not permitted from the culverts or within 100m of the culvert crossing on either side or upstream of Drunken Rock Pass, and these areas are marked.

The Falkland Islands is free of all invasive freshwater algae and fish diseases, and we want to keep it that way. If you are bringing fishing gear in to the Falkland Islands that has been used elsewhere, you must Check, Clean and Dry. Fishing gear should be cleaned in dishwashing detergent or household bleach.

For further information, please contact the Environmental Planning Department on 28480.

Spring blooms are providing an early burst of colour

ON our return from a two week break in a warmer climate, I was longing to see how the garden had fared.

One of my most pressing needs, for there was little point in having a plant patrol in the snow, was to have a look inside the tunnels. I was delighted to find most of the seeds, planted before we left, had germinated.

It was fortunate that old habits die hard and I had added ant powder to the top of the soil once the seeds were sown. There were hundreds (and I'm not exaggerating) of dead and dying ear-wigs in amongst the seedlings, so the precaution proved very worth while. All this after my fond notions that they were fewer of them this year!

At least the brassicas have been allowed to germinate and grow untouched. Beetroot and carrots have also germinated during this last week since we got back.

Plants have decided Spring is here. The snowdrops are numerous, though there could never be too many. Some of the polyanthus are flowering, even if they do look rather wilted following the snow. The hellebores also look a bit bedraggled, but a spot of warmth or just light, in the form of sunshine will soon put that right.

But the show stoppers at this time have to be the baby irises. No more than six inches tall, if that, they have formed sizeable clumps and stand proudly showing their exquisite, and rather large, flowers in all shades of blue. Hopefully their yellow version might also flower this year, they too were grown from seed, but the bulbs seem to be taking longer to mature.

The crocus in their various colours are putting on their always reliable and lovely show as well. The clumps of yellow ones are probably the most eye-catching at this time, but all worth a closer look. There is a very delicate one as well, a variety called 'Lady Killer' I think, but it was grown from seed and it might not have come true. It is not a very large one but it has very distinctive blue/grey wide stripes which perhaps show best before the flowers open properly. Very pretty.

The puschkinias are also flowering well. For the rest, the weeds are thriving, mainly in grass form but the odd dandelion flowers are on show as well. The ground being too wet to do anything about it, I'm pretending they are there to brighten the garden up for the moment!

The drumstick primulas (dentulatas) are now lovely wide clumps and some are almost ready to flower. Soon their lovely big drumhead flowers will take over the show as they rise about fifteen inches above the ground, showing off their rose, lilac or pure white flowers.

Speaking of primroses, last year's seedlings of double-flowered ones have mainly come true and the white ones (now they are not hidden by the snow) look especially good. With the paeonias sending up their lovely red leaf buds it is quite clear that another season is under way, and time I got myself moving too.

The Goji berry, grown from seed last year, has come through the winter and is covered in leaf buds. I have no idea what the berries will taste like and am not a great follower of fashion, so when adverts say this fruit or that one is particularly good for you, I must admit to being rather sceptical, after all have we not heard this about so many foods over the years? And good, or bad, the news tends to revert after a time anyway. I've grown this because I could not resist the challenge of growing something different and, if we like it, that will be bonus.

Talking of fruit, I was a bit angry with myself for forgetting to check the greenhouse one of the grape vines is growing in. I have been ventilating the tunnels daily because so much moisture tends to collect on the plastic but had failed to check this one. I had to do a quick clean-up and remove all the dead leaves before mildew could take over and maybe do some lasting harm to it.

There are hens and there are gardens and 'never the twain should meet'. True, they will devour insects, good and bad, but they will scratch at and eat anything else that catches their fancy too! I foolishly did not get some tall enough fencing around our greens with the result that we now just have some lacy left-overs. So much for planting for spring!

Tessa came to visit on the day when I had planned to make a start on putting in some tomato seeds and so found herself 'pressed' into service. She worked with a will and was soon enthusiastically sieving seed and cutting compost into small pots, she then watered them and let them rest and soak whilst she got some labels written out. Five seeds into each pot and more soil sieved on top and the pots now sit, with a propagating cover on them on one of our windowsills.

Now is a good time to cut back fuchsias and pelargoniums under cover. Any bits of fuchsia can be put into water where they will root quite quickly, pelargonium pieces are better put straight into soil. Some fresh top soil and water and the original 'tired' plants will quickly perk-up.

According to folklore, people living in the Himalayas who eat Goji berries are reputed to live to between 120 and 150 years old! The famous Li Quing Yuen is said to have lived to over 250 years, and ate Goji berries on a daily basis.

Whilst some may pretend Goji Berries are new to the UK and a secret to the Western world it is well documented that Goji's were first introduced to the UK in the 1600s. The name 'Goji' is fairly new and is based on the Chinese name 'Gou Qi Zi' - before this it has been known as The Chinese Wolfberry, The Matrimony Vine, The Chinese Boxthorn, The Red Medlar and even The Duke Of Argyll's Tea Tree. It is known to be a naturalised species in the UK, being found in hedgerows in some parts of the country.

FLH farm face-lift and planning for the future

FALKLAND Islands Landholdings (FLH) farms are going for a settlement makeover this year as they set out to recruit a band of workers to move around the three farms for a five month period.

General manger Neil Judd explained that while the FLH farms of North Arm, Goose Green and Fitzroy had suffered the same tough two decades as other Falklands farm's they had also enjoyed the past five years of good wool prices and were now 'profitable businesses'.

Over the last few years long term investment had been made in wind power as well as replacing tired machinery, but now with reserves being built up it was time to address the settlement's appearance, he said.

£40,000 has been made available within the budget with more available for additional fencing and pen repairs if a suitable gang is sourced.

FLH are seeking five experienced hands to carry out maintenance to buildings, pens and fences and possibly other tasks around the three farms: North Arm, Goose Green and Fitzroy which are managed by Steven Dickson, Keith Alazia and Gilberto Castro respectively.

While Mr Judd said the perfect scenario would be a group of experienced Islanders taking on the work, if there was a problem recruiting locally, alternative options would be looked at to ensure the work was carried out.

But the aim was to have a 20 week period where a good hard crack would be made at getting the farm settlements back up to scratch and all tidied up.

Over the past 20 years a backlog of the more cosmetic tasks has built up. The farms have been functional, but managers are now keen to spruce them up and make them more aesthetically appealing to the public.

Mr Judd said it was inevitable that some of these tasks had been let slip while money was tight and financial assistance was needed from the Government.

Falkland Landholdings has now built up reserves and is able to commit to developing the business and look at ways to create long term profit.

The business of farming is being developed in a number of ways across the FLH farms with sheep genetics being one area.

Efforts have been made to better understand the wool and meat markets and an in-house breeding programme is currently underway to try to shift from 25 micron to 23 micron wool, but also produce a dual purpose animal which truly thrives on the rolling flats of Lafonia.

The 23 micron wools command a better price on the market, said Mr Judd.

How to create that shift as quickly and as economically as possible is being addressed with the managers from each farm establishing a ram breeding nucleus of 2,000 ewes, carefully selected from their respective flocks.

"The animals are productive, open faced and stylish with slightly finer wool and good body condition," explained Mr Judd adding: "The type of sheep we want to be producing across the farms."

Ram material had been sourced of a similar type and also some 3,000 ewes had been artificially inseminated (AI) with possibly more in future years.

But, he said it was not solely about AI it was more about creating an economic sheep that will thrive in the Falklands.

The performance of these animals will be bench marked over the next year.

"We've identified the technical attributes we are interested in and we will compare and monitor to see if it generates exactly what we want."

Goose Green and North Arm managers Keith Alazia and Steven Dickson will be open about the outcome of the project and the sheep breed will be adopted across the entire organisation.

The Fitzroy farm system is to be shifted to match that of Goose Green and North Arm and spread a similar type of business and breeding strategy across the entire organisation.

Hardiness and performance within the relatively harsh environment is key to the operation, said Mr Judd.

Fitzroy had previously concentrated on meat sheep, however the loss of wool income had not been justified.

Increasing genetic fat and muscle to help the animal cope when conditions get tough was being tested and could be useful to the Falkland Islands as a whole, said Mr Judd.

"We'll be happy for people to come and look at the lambs on the ground later in the year and we can compare results."

Like many farms FLH suffered the extended period of low prices of the 1990s and into this century and operated at a loss with Government subsistence until the 2009/10 financial year when a profit was turned.

Mr Judd explained that the global financial crisis had been a catalyst for wool prices increasing because of the way the currencies work, and the last five years of very solid wool prices had improved the FLH financial position markedly.

"The board are now trying to ensure that the reserves built up over that time are used to grow the business; to make it more robust so that it is able to cope when the next price slide occurs. We are all aware that the last five years good prices was the first for a very long time."

So the challenge now is to grow the business, productivity and create options on farms to make sure it is profitable in the long term. Not just to go from boom to bust in the horrible cycle that seems to repeat itself.

"I'm not trying to say that we are going to get it all right all the

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800, Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RIFP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland from their respective flocks.

"The animals are productive, open faced and stylish with slightly finer wool and good body condition," explained Mr Judd adding: "The type of sheep we want to be producing across the farms."

Ram material had been sourced of a similar type and also some 3,000 ewes had been artificially inseminated (AI) with possibly more in future years.

But, he said it was not solely about AI it was more about creating an economic sheep that will thrive in the Falklands.

The performance of these animals will be bench marked over the next year.

"We've identified the technical attributes we are interested in and we will compare and monitor to see if it generates exactly what we want."

Goose Green and North Arm managers Keith Alazia and Steven Dickson will be open about the outcome of the project and the sheep breed will be adopted across the entire organisation.

The Fitzroy farm system is to be shifted to match that of Goose Green and North Arm and spread a similar type of business and breeding strategy across the entire organisation.

Hardiness and performance within the relatively harsh environment is key to the operation, said Mr Judd.

Fitzroy had previously concentrated on meat sheep, however the loss of wool income had not been justified.

Increasing genetic fat and muscle to help the animal cope when conditions get tough was being tested and could be useful to the Falkland Islands as a whole, said Mr Judd.

"We'll be happy for people to come and look at the lambs on the ground later in the year and we can compare results."

Like many farms FLH suffered the extended period of low prices of the 1990s and into this century and operated at a loss with Government subsistence until the 2009/10 financial year when a profit was turned.

Mr Judd explained that the global financial crisis had been a catalyst for wool prices increasing because of the way the currencies work, and the last five years of very solid wool prices had improved the FLH financial position markedly.

"The board are now trying to ensure that the reserves built up over that time are used to grow the business; to make it more robust so that it is able to cope when the next price slide occurs. We are all aware that the last five years good prices was the first for a very long time

Roy and Cherry triumph in final tournament of the darts season

THE final major tournament of the darts season took place in the Town Hall on Saturday 29th August.

Jointly sponsored by the Victory Bar and Bonner's Haulage, entry numbers were lower than usual this year so it was good to see a number of non-league players taking part.

Progressing to the semi finals of the ladies competition were Cherry Robson (beat Sam Dodd, Maggie Goss and Sarah Cooper), Cathy Jacobsen Snr (beat Avril Bonner, Jane Clement and Sharon Jaffray), Teresa Clifton (beat Candy Blackley, Ali Dodd and Jackie Thomas) and Ella Crowie (beat Kristy Buckland, Julie Clarke and Lynda Buckland). At least two of these ladies won all their games 2-0. Cherry and Ella won their semi final matches to take their places in the best of 5 leg final which Cherry won 3-2.

44 men entered the men's competition but there were a number of byes. The line-up for the last 16 included some tough matches: David Ashbridge v Chris Lloyd, Melvyn Clifton v Steve John, Roy Shepherd v Richard Bonner, Colin Smith v Toot Ford, Sparky Ewen v Adrian Minnell, Tim Bonner v Len Ford, Peter Goss v Graham Minto, Clayton March v Martyn Gilson-Clarke. Chris, Steve, Roy, Colin, Sparky, Tim, Peter and Martyn won through to the quarter finals.

The semi finals were between Chris Lloyd and Roy Shepherd (Roy won 3-1), and Tim Bonner and Martyn Gilson-Clarke (Martyn won 3-0). Some excellent scores were recorded in both matches.

The best of 7 leg final was won by Roy 4-1.

Many thanks to the sponsors and also to the Darts Club committee for their efficient organisation.

Congratulations to Her Majesty the Queen

Long may she reign

A ROYAL milestone was reached yesterday as Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II became the longest reigning Monarch in British history, surpassing the reign of her great-great-grandmother Queen Victoria.

To celebrate the occasion in the Falklands, Union flags were raised by Government departments, while on Victory Green the Falklands flag was raised alongside the Gibraltar flag in recognition of the fellow British Overseas territory's national day.

Three issues of stamps were also released to mark the historic occasion; one for the Falklands, another for South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands and also the British Antarctic Territory.

The issues were all part of a series which also includes Ascension Island, the Bahamas and Tristan da Cunha.

Queen Victoria came to the throne aged 18 and died in 1901 when she was 81, an incredible reign of 63 years and 216 days (23,226 days, 16 hours and 23 minutes) that defined an era and a people. In her journal Victoria recorded that, "Today is the day I have reigned longer, by a day, than any English sovereign". The Victorians responded enthusiastically to her historic milestone yet, like our current Queen, Victoria did not encourage any celebrations ahead of the day.

Yet for Queen Elizabeth II to become the longest reigning of the 41 kings and queens of England since the Norman Conquest is without doubt an historic achievement. Like Victoria, Elizabeth II is much loved and during a lifetime of service has provided a reassuring and enduring source of stability in a fast and ever changing world.

Elizabeth's reign has seen more developments, achievements and records than any other. According to the Guinness World Records she holds the world record for the most currencies featuring the same individual.

Her Diamond Jubilee river pageant in 2012 set a new world record for the number of boats in a parade. She was the first British monarch to have sent an email, to have a message placed on the moon, to have conducted a royal 'walkabout' and to have held a public concert in her back garden.

Members of the Assembly sent a letter of congratulation from Gilbert House on Thursday, however as is traditional with communications to the Royal family the content of the message is not shared publicly until after confirmation of receipt has been received.

FIG investigate receiving small number of refugees

MEMBERS of Legislative Assembly have agreed to investigate with the British Government the possibility of offering to receive a small number of refugees in order to help them and to help to fill some of the many labour skills gaps in the Falklands.

MLA Jan Cheek as Chair of the month said that in terms of numbers, "we've not got that far yet, we are simply investigating the process."

However she added, "It may be that people with their eyes on cities in Europe may not find the Falklands especially appealing."

MLA Cheek emphasised that the possibilities were only being investigated at the moment. "However, MLAs wanted a statement put out as we had been contacted by several members of the public on the subject. In the meantime I understand that some are considering some kind of fund raising for refugee charities."

Comment by Acting Editor Sharon Jaffray

IT IS not often we have occasion to celebrate the monarchy on our front page and I was proud to do so today. Not only in celebration of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II's historic reign, but also in recognition of a strong woman who has stood steadfastly at the head of her family, living under what at times must seem like a microscope of human interest. That cannot have been easy.

Occasionally a fairly austere persona is depicted in photos and footage of our Queen, but if you have ever watched her carefully when filmed around her beloved horses you will have noticed how relaxed and happy she is with a real twinkle in her eye.

She is indeed the longest reigning monarch of which I am very much in awe and maybe some of that projected austerity was inherited from her great-great grandmother who she pipped at the post this week. But also, how many octogenarians do we know who still pop out for a horse ride at least once a week, or even more amazing have survived 63 years and 216 days in a job - all without apparently having put a foot wrong?

But then when you are married to a character like Prince Philip, one does really need to maintain the standard so that his devilment can be received in the manner in which I'm sure it is intended.

Her Majesty is also reported to be somewhat thrifty and will turn unnecessary lights off to save electricity, but on the other hand very hard working and her bedroom light is often the last to be extinguished at the Palace.

While I sincerely doubt I will still be able to clamber onto a horse in my 80s, and just may have made a few tiny boo-boos in the work place already, Her Majesty does have another long-standing tradition which I might be able to take up in her honour... a gin and Dubonnet immediately before lunch? I don't mind if I do.

NOW then ladies, if you want to send a message to your partner on how best to behave when it comes to the romantic side of things, you may want to leave the paper pointedly open on page 5, where you can read of a proposal in the beautiful setting of Pebble Island.

Alternatively, I might suggest rolling the paper up and brandishing it in a threatening manner. When it comes to romantic gestures some men need more than a subtle reminder that it's been some time since the last delivery of perfume or flowers. I'll probably just leave my paper open on page two...

Captain Locke is new Harbour Master

CAPTAIN Chris Locke has been appointed to the position of Marine Officer and Harbour Master, succeeding Captain Malcolm Jamieson who is moving to the private sector to work with Byron Marine.

A Government spokesperson said Captain Locke comes with a wealth of ship operation and maritime experience gained during an extensive career in the Royal Fleet Auxiliary.

Captain Locke is no stranger to the Falklands having visited frequently on RFA vessels including in 1982 when he was part of the Task Force.

Most recently he has undertaken the appointment as Queen's Harbour Master at Mare Harbour.

Captain Chris Locke

He said: "I am delighted to accept the position and am very much looking forward to taking the work undertaken by Captain Jamieson forward."

MLA Cheek rebuts Ambassador's claims

THE Falklands has had extensive exposure in the Huffington Post this week after the Argentine Ambassador to the USA wrote an extensive article claiming that her country was trying to give "dialogue a chance."

Assembly Member Jan Cheek was afforded similar space in the following issue and firmly disputed the claims by Ambassador Celia Nahón that the question of the Falkland Islands was an 182-year old sovereignty dispute with the United Kingdom.

MLA Cheek said, "The Government of Argentina states regularly that its claim to the Falkland Islands runs continuously from the 1820s. It does not. The Argentine claim to Spanish succession, which was never accepted by the United Kingdom, was ended by the 'Convention of Peace', ratified in 1850, and for 34 years Argentina was silent over the Falklands, during which time several Argentine leaders stated that Argentina had no dispute with Britain."

Ambassador Nahón claimed that the UK refused to enter into negotiations about other issues.

But, said MLA Cheek, this was untrue.

"The UK has simply said that Islanders need to be involved in any discussions, and we have extended numerous invitations to talk to the Government of Argentina. These go unacknowledged. In February 2013 the then - British Foreign Secretary Hague agreed to meet with the Foreign Minister of Argentina in London. Timmerman refused to attend because my colleague and I, as elected members of the Falkland Islands Government, were present. The empty chair at that meeting speaks volumes about the sincerity of Argentina's call for dialogue."

MLA Cheek concluded that Argentina's disingenuous call for dialogue was in reality a call to, "colonise our country, seize our natural resources and deny our right to self-determination."

Livestock and meat ordinance

AT Wednesday's meeting of Executive Council, MLAs Mike Summers, Michael Poole and Phyl Rendell discussed a substantial piece of work to make amendments to the Livestock and Meat Products Ordinance.

MLA Summers said it consolidated existing legislation, and was designed to promote human and animal health, as well as protect the meat export industry by ensuring compliance with EU regulations.

"The EU is our major market. This legislation is supported by seven sets of regulations covering hygiene, the regulation of veterinary officials, protection of animals at time of killing, examination and control of contaminants and residues, disposal of by-products, TSE control (otherwise known as BSE) and control of veterinary medicines," he said.

He assured that there were very few changes to current practice for farmers or for Sand Bay Abattoir, though there would be some new provisions on the preparation of farm kill for sale (removal of the spinal cord) and licensing of the import of veterinary medicines.

"These changes will be clearly explained to farmers prior to the Bill and Regulations reaching the Assembly, so that any outstanding issues can be addressed," said MLA Summers.

Former first secretary dies suddenly

ROGER Huxley, who was First Secretary at Government House in Stanley from 1990-4, died suddenly on September 5, while on holiday in Russia with his wife Enid (Niddy).

Roger originally joined the Foreign Office as a communicator in 1965, but transferred to the diplomatic side in 1970. He served in a variety of Embassies abroad, and was head of chancery in Mogadishu (Somalia) before coming to Stanley in 1990. He enjoyed his time in the Islands and was a keen golfer. His final posting from 1995-99 was as Administrator on Ascension Island.

After his retirement to Stratford-upon-Avon he worked in local government and for a while was Honorary Secretary to the newly formed South Georgia Association. He and Niddy had two daughters, Karen and Sian (Mrs Chevasson) who is mother to their two grand-daughters, Tia and Cara.

There will be a service to commemorate his life at Holy Trinity Church (Shakespeare's church) in Stratford at noon on September 25.

Historic landing on St Helena's new runway

THE first aircraft to ever land in Saint Helena will make the historic touch down next week.

Construction company Basil Read has been granted temporary use of the St Helena Airport runway by Air Support Safety International (ASSI). This heralds an historic milestone next week when a Beechcraft King Air 200 aircraft is due to land at the Airport to carry out a series of calibration flights.

ASSI Senior Aerodrome Inspector, Justin Rothwell, carried out an assessment of the Airport infrastructure and safety procedures. As a result, an exemption was granted until September 30, 2015 to enable the calibration flights to go ahead.

The aircraft is due to arrive between Sunday and Thursday, dependent upon suitable weather and other factors.

The calibration tests will be undertaken by Flight Calibration Services Limited (FCSL) who will travel to St Helena on the aircraft leased from TAB in South Africa. The aircraft will fly from Lanseria Airport in Johannesburg, to Namibia, then to Angola and on to St Helena, taking approximately four hours for the final leg of the journey to the Island.

Four months in jail for drink driving

STANLEY man Joan Paul Cancino Contreras (27) was sent to prison for 16 weeks on Wednesday, for driving whilst unfit through drink. He was also banned from driving for 24 months and had his licence endorsed.

Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe reminded the Summary Court that the offence had taken place on June 6, when a police patrol had observed a vehicle being driven at high speed on Ross Road East. Accelerating to 65 mph the police officers said they had not been able to close the gap with the vehicle driven by Mr Contreras and that the speed had been maintained from the bottom of Hebe Street to the Narrows Bar car park.

Due to a private function the car park had been busy and the police had noted a group of eight children on the grass edge of the car park when they had followed to apprehend Mr Contreras.

A road side breathalyser test gave a reading of 149 mg per 100 ml of breath (35 mg is the legal limit) and a later reading at the Police Station had given a reading of 118 mg, however as the Camic machine malfunctioned on the night, this was not an evidential specimen.

In police interview Mr Contreras accepted that he must have been travelling in excess of 70mph and said it was, "a stupid thing to do."

Justice of the Peace Janet Pompert-Robertson said the aggravating features of the case were: excess speed, the level of alcohol in his system, that he had carried passengers in the vehicle, pedestrians in the vicinity, entering a crowded car park and that there was other traffic on the road.

Mrs Pompert-Robertson said she was concerned that it was the second relevant offence within 12 months and that he had also been the subject of two community service orders within the last six years.

The application for £100 prosecution costs was waived and Mrs Pompert-Robertson said she hoped that during the custodial sentence Mr Contreras would take the opportunity to engage with the Probation Officer and seek help for his alcohol and mental issues.

Other cases

Also in the Summary Court on Wednesday, Ulrik Bjorn Erikson had his case rebailed until September 16 for sentencing. Mr Erikson has pleaded guilty to common assault.

Timothy Daniel Francis was fined £225 plus £85 prosecution costs for speeding on Ross Road on August 10. Mr Francis was recorded travelling at 37 mph in a 25 mph zone near Thatcher Drive.

Banned from driving and awaiting sentence

IN the Summary Court on Tuesday, Mount Pleasant man Tyler James Benjamin (19) was given a six month interim driving ban after he admitted seven separate road traffic offences.

He awaits sentencing on August 29, with all options including imprisonment being considered by Justices of the Peace.

The court heard that on August 15 at around 11pm, Mr Benjamin had caused a cyclist to take evasive action to avoid being hit near Hillside Camp on Davis Street and had immediately after that incident been witnessed by police officers on patrol, swerving across the road, hitting the kerb and eventually ending up in the ditch near the By-Pass Road.

Police observed as Mr Benjamin attempted to drive the vehicle out of the ditch. They removed the keys from the vehicle and noted a strong smell of alcohol and that the driver had to be assisted to get out of the car.

A road-side breath test gave a reading of 106 mg/100ml of breath however the Camic breathalyser at the Police Station was not working so an evidential sample was not obtained.

Further investigation revealed that Mr Benjamin was not only unfit to drive and driving recklessly, but was not wearing a seatbelt, had no insurance and had failed to register his vehicle, F515E.

Two weeks later on August 29, acting on information received from a member of the public, Mr Benjamin was stopped near Michelle's Café on the service road with four passengers in his car. He failed a road side breathalyser test and on this occasion the Camic machine at the police station was able to provide an evidential reading of 47mg per 100 ml of breath. Mr Benjamin had still not insured his vehicle.

Reminding the Justices of the Peace of the seriousness of the offences, Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe said that Mr Benjamin had admitted the August 15 offences in police interview and had been released on bail, but had nonetheless moved on to the offences of August 29.

Justice of the Peace Leeann Harris asked that a pre-sentence report be prepared and told Mr Benjamin that all options were being considered, which included imprisonment.

Governors' sport cups still up for grabs

A GOVERNMENT House spokesperson confirmed on Wednesday that the offer of support for sports events and race meetings through the provision of a Governor's Cup in the Falkland Islands would continue.

A challenge cup, donated by Government House, will be presented every year to the respective winners and then returned to their association/club for presentation the following year. In addition, Government House will provide a replica cup which winners are free to keep.

"However, given the present financial climate in the UK, Government House is no longer in a position to provide UK tax payers' money for cash prizes at these events," said the spokesperson.

"The Governor looks forward to continuing his support for these important events in the Falkland Islands community for many years to come."

Government House provides challenge and replica cups for the following Falklands events: West Falklands Sports Association, Stanley Darts Club (in addition to the Governor's Cup, the Rose Bowl is also presented to the winning lady), Stanley Sports Association and the West Falkland Ram and Fleece Show.

Eye on social impact of oil

REGENERIS Consulting Company have been looking into what the social impact of oil production may be on the Falklands and have returned to the Islands this week to share their findings with the community.

They have also looked at how the Government and other partners might monitor that impact to ensure the qualities of life valued by the population are protected.

Consultation took place some six months ago and work will continue over the coming years as potential changes to the quality of life in the Islands are monitored.

30th Annual Craft Fair

THE Falkland Islands Community School hosts the 30th Annual Craft Fair this weekend with a wide range of crafts on display, from artwork to photography, woodcrafts to woolcrafts.

Spinning and weaving will be demonstrated in the school "street" and refreshments will be available. Everyone is welcome and entries are encouraged from across the community.

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into her working week

Our MLA meeting on Mondays regularly includes a PR update and we discuss possible formal responses to inaccurate press articles and other public relations matters. On Tuesdays we meet with the Chief Executive and other civil servants may come with him for discussion of particular items or to brief us as a group rather than just through the portfolio holders. Most portfolio holders have regular or 'as required' meetings with the relevant directors. These meetings are particularly valuable as they enable both the portfolio holder and the second member who will stand in during their absences to be fully informed of departmental plans and issues.

This week we will hear about some of the initial work done on the vulnerable people strategy and I hope get extra clarity on proposals for care for the elderly which was a major talking point in the election campaign two years ago. We have a meeting this week and there will, as advertised, be an extra public meeting next week on Monday 14th September. I'm hoping many will take the opportunity to make their views known on this important subject.

Other meetings for all members include pre Exco and Standing Finance Committee and a session on Friday with Regeneris who have been working on socio-economic scenarios in the case of oil development. I believe that they will be conducting a number of such sessions during their time in the Islands as part of the social effects monitoring programme.

As someone intrigued by language and its development I am both fascinated and sometimes appalled by new words and how they fall into everyday use. The literati must have been the inspiration for the word 'twitterati' but a couple of weeks ago I saw my all-time favourite 'cyberjabberati'. I do not know if it will make it into the Oxford dictionary but it aptly sums up the way some communicate their views.

I'm preparing to leave next week prior to attending the party conferences where we will speak to as many people as we can reach so that the facts about the Falklands are well understood.

Colin Wright with his daughter Wendy and wife Pat

Colin awarded for commitment to Falkland Islanders' rights

THE award of the Queen's Certificate and Badge of Honour to Colin Wright, the Falkland Islands Association's Honorary Secretary, was announced on Falkland Day, August 14, and was presented to him at his home in Shrewsbury, UK on August 31. Former Falklands Governor and now Chairman of the FIA Alan Huckle presented Mr Wright with his award on behalf of His Excellency the Governor Colin Roberts.

Mr Huckle said it was, "a small but moving ceremony at his home attended by his wife and daughter, and the vicar of St George's Church who has ministered to him during his long illness."

The honour, awarded by the Governor on the advice of the Executive Council of the Falkland Islands Government, is to those 'who have, by their loyalty and meritorious conduct, provided services of exceptional benefit to the people of the Falkland Islands'.

Mr Huckle said that Colin Wright well deserved the honour for his, "quiet, unassuming but highly successful service over 10 years for the Falkland Islands Association. "He is wholeheartedly committed to promoting the Falkland Islanders' right to self-determination and helping to counter Argentine propaganda in advancing its illegitimate sovereignty claim to the Islands."

The principal tools for this are the FIA Newsletter and website.

"Colin has been punctilious in making sure that both are well presented and topical, reflecting the political, social and economic progress achieved by the Falkland Islanders since their liberation from illegal Argentine occupation in 1982," said Mr Huckle.

"He has also helped to maintain a substantial membership base in the UK and overseas including a contact list of influential opinion-formers that would enable the Association to generate a significant lobbying campaign if ever there were to be a threat to the Falkland Islands' security or to the Islanders' democratic rights as British citizens."

Mr Wright combines his FIA work with many other voluntary activities, including prominent roles in several charitable organisations, but he has always said that the work of the Association is dearest to his heart.

BFBS DJ Chris pops the question on Pebble Island's Stinker Beach

PEBBLE Island with its spectacular beaches and wealth of wild-life is a particular favourite with many around the Islands, and it now holds a very special place in the hearts of a couple who have spent just two weekends there.

BFBS DJ Chris Keen went to great lengths to make he and his girlfriend Kelly's second visit there one to remember and with the help of Pebble Island farmers Dot and Alex Gould and Lodge owner Riki Evans he orchestrated a romantic wedding proposal.

Chris said he met Kelly on her first night of a six month tour as OC of the MTW section. "I knew she was special," he added.

When Kelly returned to the UK they maintained their relationship and they first visited Pebble when she managed to return to the Islands for two weeks over Easter this year.

On her most recent visit, Chris once again made a Pebble booking and decided it was time to ask that all important question.

With no idea of Kelly's ring size, Chris went with the option of a Pandora engagement ring charm, which he cunningly arranged for her to carry to the Islands herself disguised as a birthday present from his family.

With the champagne chilled it was time to head for Marble Beach at the far west-end of the island with Riki as guide and accomplice.

Arriving at Stinker Beach (Chris did not know the beach had such an unromantic name at the time) Riki told them to have a wander and he'd meet up with them at the other end for smoko.

Chris said he still intended to pop the question at Marble... "but the beach was so beautiful, the sand was white, there were loads of penguins around and Giant Petrels flying overhead."

He decided it was the perfect place, not to mention he was very nervous and needed to get it out of the way.

So, as Kelly was taking pictures of a lone sleeping penguin which had wandered from the colony, he got down on one knee with his little penguin box in hand and said the words he had never imagined coming out of his mouth. The answer was a resounding "yes" delivered with a few tears.

"That sleeping penguin didn't even flinch! He was far-away in dream land," laughed Chris.

The promise was sealed with a glass of champagne with a bemused Riki back at the vehicle.

"What? Already? I thought you were doing it at Marble beach!" was his reaction.

"It was the perfect day and I just want to thank everybody who made it happen and so special.

"Pebble Island is such a unique and wonderful place and is now always going to be in our memories and we will of course have to visit lots in the future," said Chris.

HMS Endurance on the market

THE Royal Navy has put its Ice Patrol ship, HMS Endurance, up for sale. The icebreaker served as the Royal Navy ice patrol ship between 1991 and 2008 before an accident during routine maintenance destroyed a large part of her equipment.

Built in Norway as MV Polar Circle, she was chartered by the Royal Navy in 1991 as HMS Polar Circle, before being purchased outright and renamed HMS Endurance in 1992.

The Endurance was a regular and welcome visitor to the Falklands and was affectionately known as the Red Plum.

She has been out of service since 2008, when she was seriously damaged by flooding in the south of Chile following an error during routine maintenance on a sea suction strainer that nearly sank the ship.

HMS Endurance at work in Antarctic waters in 2007

Helped by the Chilean navy the damaged vessel was first towed to Punta Arenas and then the Falkland Islands where she was later put on a special float and towed back to England.

On 8 April 2009 Endurance arrived off Portsmouth on the semi-submersible transporter ship MV Target

Viewings will take place later this month, but only parties that have a valid Pre-qualification questionnaire will be invited to tender for the vessel and attend viewings. The vessel is moored at Portsmouth and will be sold from there. The ship, originally slated for scrapping is now being sold for 'further use or recycling.'

More about a Falklands Hero

READERS may recall that some weeks ago I wrote about Flt Lt Eric Turner, who was the only Falkland Islander to fly with the RAF during the Battle of Britain. If you read that piece, I hope you were as impressed as I was by the fact that one of our own fought with just a few thousand other men to turn the tide of history. At that time I asked if anyone had more information about Flt Lt Turner. I'm happy to say that two readers did.

Coleen Biggs, the librarian in Stanley, kindly emailed me to add a little more to what we know of the pilot who died in combat at the age of 30. Stanley's local paper reported that Eric had married Marjory Hayward-Rowson on August 1, at Goring-on-Sea in Sussex. A Mr Norval Home was his best man and Eric was based at the RAF depot in Hornchurch at the time.

It was a pleasure too to hear from Robin Pitaluga, who informed me that he is related to Eric. This from Robin: "I did not know him, as he had left the Falklands 13 years before I arrived in them. His mother was Mary Turner, a sister of my father and he had a brother: Leonard (Len) who had been in England too and trained as a mechanic/engineer with the Stuart Turner company which specialised in small marine engines. Len came to work at Salvador with his wife Grace (nee Perry) and son Ronald in 1939. Later, they had a second son Melvyn and he was followed by a daughter, Celia. Len was there until his death following a stroke in 1969."

Eric was older than most of the young men who fought in the Battle of Britain, meaning he had time to marry and, one hopes, to enjoy adult life. I now wonder if he and Marjory had children. If so, they could well be alive and able to add to what is known of their father. No promises, but all going well I will delve into this possibility.

Here comes Corbyn!

The rapid rise of Jeremy Corbyn, from virtually unknown Labour politician to surprise front-runner in the leadership contest, surprised everyone, me included. But perhaps we should have anticipated that someone of his ilk would rise from the post-election mush of the party and the desire of so many members to re-boot Labour according to its socialist principles.

I don't believe this is the start of an inexorable rise to Prime Minister-ship for Mr Corbyn – I might have some worries if I thought it did – but my guess is that when the leadership votes are counted at Labour HQ tomorrow, we will find that Corbyn has won, and his victory will have delivered a categorical two-finger salute to "New Labour" and the Machiavellian Tony Blair, who took the party beyond its principles and the nation beyond the limits of legality.

We may be entering a very interesting period in UK party politics, although I doubt if it will last for long. Coached by the surviving Blairites and perhaps even by the old schemer himself, plotters within the party will soon go into secret session, planning how to stick a stout spanner in the works of the Corbyn machine. And they may succeed, but for a while at least the right wing's dominance of the UK political scene will be weakened and healthy left-vs-right debates will take place for the first time in almost two decades.

Ah, but what about the recent press revelations that Corbyn is – and may have been for some time – a closet supporter of the Argentine government's position in the Falklands dispute? Well, I confess to having been surprised and disappointed by this. Such a principled democrat might be expected to find the current dictatorial and corrupt Argentine government anathema, and to remember with repugnance the murderous right-wing military junta that invaded the Falklands. He might be expected to support the Falklanders' right to choose their government. But a few moments of thought put my mind at rest.

For one thing, Corbyn expressed his views on the issue when they did not matter; he was a left-wing thinker without real influence, and he hated everything that Margaret Thatcher stood for. How could he not have been attracted to ideas that might undermine such an iconic and surviving Thatcherite symbol as the Falklands?

For another thing, assuming he wins the leadership contest, he will soon discover the need to avoid battles he cannot win, both in Parliament and in the press – the Falklands among them. He will be acutely aware that the press can, and will, beat him mercilessly for any indiscretion over principles (such as the freedom of the Falklands) that the nation holds sacrosanct. Corbyn's advisors and shadow cabinet colleagues will make sure that he does not blunder into a Falklands minefield by questioning the established wisdom that discussions with Buenos Aires can never go ahead without the agreement of the Islanders.

So, even while BA's woman in London, the apparently permanently PMT-suffering Alicia Castro, paints her nails a seductive red and beckons the new leader of the opposition to her table, we should not worry. For perfectly good reasons, he will be slapping her hand away from his thigh. The new leader of Her Majesty's Opposition will not be willingly talking about the Falklands anywhere.

In any case – and whether this is good or bad I don't know – it will only be a matter of time before the leftie so many have longed for is replaced by a man or woman who is better suited to today's ideal of a successful political leader: someone who keeps his or her principles under wraps and is merely a good manager.

Europe in crisis

I was very tempted to write at length about the appalling refugee crisis – please note that I avoid the politically loaded word "migrant" – and the paralysis that this has caused the European Union. But, in all honesty, I feel I cannot share any emotion or view that has not already been expressed in the mass media or on social media, and these days you can access both almost as well as I can.

Perhaps I will comment next month, because we can be sure that this crisis will be ongoing; indeed it will have deepened, with serious rifts in Europe worsening and Britain being dragged into the conflict in Syria. Europe's worst crisis since 1945 will not be solved any time soon.

For now, suffice to say that I, like so many other people, feel the deepest of sympathy for all of those thousands of terrified and vulnerable people who are seeking nothing more than what we all deserve: security from chaos, poverty and terror.

Girl-guiding overseas

EIGHT Girl Guides recently enjoyed a month-long adventure of a lifetime. Chloe Knipe tells Penguin News of their time in the UK which comprised two camps (one in Hampshire and the other on the Isle of Man) a week in London and a week with family.

At the first camp, 'Discovery 2015' at Foxlease, Hampshire which had more than 300 attendees, the girls were split into two sub camps Britannia and Victory (all the camps were named after boats real or fictional). Throughout the week they took part in an opening ceremony attended by the chief guide who challenged all the girls to try something new; various activities such as abseiling, kayaking and Zip wiring; a trek through the new forest and a visit to a theme park.

The girls made friends from places such as Luxemburg, Paris, Cyprus, British Virgin Islands, Cayman Islands, Spain, Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Azerbaijan, The Hague and Malaysia. "I enjoyed both camps because I made loads of friends and went abseiling. I also enjoyed shopping," said Ezme.

After a week at Foxlease and a night in Southampton the girls set off to explore London. Monday was spent touring the Houses of Parliament, visiting the National Gallery, Ripley's, believe it or not and M&M world. The day was topped off by a spontaneous trip to the Phoenix Theatre to see Bend it like Beckham.

"My favourite part of the trip was meeting some of the cast from 'Bend it like Beckham'. We all really enjoyed the show even though some of us weren't that excited to go at first," said Layla.

Tuesday was spent visiting London's tourist attractions: Madame Tussauds, the London Eye and the Sea Life Centre. On Wednesday the girls had lunch at FIGO while learning what happens at the offices. The afternoon was spent touring Buckingham palace and a visit to the Guide Shop. On Thursday the girls worked their way up Oxford Street stopping at Selfridges on the way.

At the end of the London trip the girls split up to spend a week with family, but by following Thursday everyone was happy to see each other and start the final part of the trip. The week-long visit to the Silly Moos campsite on the Isle of Man Camp.

Susan and the girls were joined by Jo Ward, a guiding friend who visited the FI guide unit in 2010. Once again the girls were split up into to sub-camps: Fuchsia and Heather this time. During their time on the Isle of Man they learned about Manx tradition and culture including traditional folk dancing, singing and visited the Isle of Man parliament, Tynwald. The girls also had the chance to zip wire, abseil, sail, kayak and canoe; activities they had also enjoyed at Foxlease.

"I really enjoyed canoeing at Mooragh Park, on the Isle of Man the weather was beautiful," Chloe said, whilst Tiphonie's favourite part was going on the pedalo after capsizing her canoe. During the week the girls also went on a coastal walk which culminated in a visit to a lighthouse where they met the chief guide Gill Slocombe who they had met earlier at Foxlease. On the last day of the camp the girls and leaders took a day-trip around the island which included visiting the beach and trying locally made ice cream.

"My favourite part of the trip was the Isle of Man Camp because we made loads of friends and it was awesome," said Awen.

After a night in Birmingham and a visit to Cadbury World the girls' final few days were spent in Swindon doing last minute shopping and lots of packing. "My favourite part was in Swindon when we went to JRC Buffet and got to eat as much as we wanted. The funniest part of the trip is when my shoe fell out of the hotel window," said Merrie.

Zoe's favourite part was meeting new friends at the camps and shopping at West Quay. Whilst Rio's favourite part was canoeing and leaving a pair of shoes in the Mooragh Park Lake.

Right: Zoe keeps smiling as she zips down the wire.

Peter O'Rourke and Wendy Wilson share the delights of their visit to the far west

WHEN noted Swedish naturalist Carl Skottsberg visited New Island in December 1907, he was moved to comment on the isolation of the place:

"I can hardly imagine people more shut out of the world than their inhabitants. Years pass without their seeing any strangers save the crew of the little [FIC] schooner that comes once or twice a year to bring provisions".

Skottsberg's narrative of his visit to the Falklands in 1907 is full of admiration for the Islanders' capacity to bring civilization to the isolation of the camp, their resourcefulness when tackling challenges, and their knowledge of the environment in which they lived. A little over a century later, John and Charlene Rowland, who are presently the custodians of New Island and advancing the work of the New Island Trust, draw on the full range of their knowledge, experience and resources to resolve the often complex problems that daily life on a still-isolated island presents. Charlene spent significant periods of her childhood on various islands around the Falklands and knows the islands well. Both possess a knowledge of the Falklands and its history that is encyclopaedic, and they have a deep love and understanding of the islands, their birds and animals, and of those very special places that become an integral part of, and inseparable from, one's being.

Travelling to New Island was not a straightforward business. Our FIGAS pilot skillfully flew our party to Beaver Island through a brewing storm, where we were met by Leif Poncet. As Leif expertly navigated his yacht 'Peregrine' through rising seas, we passed the Colliers (two jagged, masses of coarse sandstone, shaped like watchful gatekeepers that rise dramatically out of the water) and caught our first glimpse of New Island and the remains of the MS Hanseatic. Accompanied by pods of dolphins and flocks of wheeling and curious cormorants and giant petrels, we arrived at Hooker's harbour to a warm welcome from Charlene and John, followed immediately by steaming bowls of tomato soup, accompanied by freshly baked bread!

A short distance from the New Island settlement, to the north of Queen Victoria Peak, the Rookery was where we caught our first glimpse of nesting Black-Browed Albatross (Thalassarche melanophris). Interspersed between their nests were Rockhopper penguins, who clung to the craggy cliff edges, and vigilant striated and crested caracaras. A sizeable number of juvenile Albatross were still fledging. John and Charlene seemed to know the situation of most of the birds and their progress, displaying a capacity for observation that many who are naturalists by profession spend a lifetime developing.

New Island is endowed with a dazzling array of flora and fauna. The shape of the island, conservation status and geology has meant that the wildlife has largely been undisturbed and unthreatened for many years. Therefore the wildlife that thrives in this environment is unperturbed by, and sometimes curious about, the occasional respectful human visitor. The island is a photographer's paradise, but it is wise to remember that these are wild animals and we are on their territory. Consideration, caution and respect is of course key to their preservation. Hundreds of species of birds, including penguins, raptors, sea birds, ground birds and owls can be seen throughout the length and breadth of New Island. The largest colony of Thin Billed Prions in the world can be found there, the beaches and coves are teeming with Sea Lions and Fur Seals, and the waters around the island offer sanctuary to dolphins and the occasional passing whale. New Island is a must for those who have a passion for nature and wildlife.

Tourism is carefully managed. Although it provides a valued source of income, land based tourism from passing tourist ships is restricted by capacity, and at present, only residents of the Falklands are able to stay on New Island. Conservation is paramount, and New Island is a base for scientific, archaeological and historical research, and continues to support and promote high ethical standards of conservation.

The landscapes of New Island are like a living tapestry, due to the influence of the weather, geology, the sea and the quality of the light, all of which are influenced by, and change with, the seasons. The majesty and sheer presence of the 'Cathedral Peak' at North Bluffon on a clear afternoon in autumn is breath-taking as it rises almost vertically out of the ocean. The changing quality of the light, sky and sea surface throw into relief the towering stone precipices which change colour as the light varies in its quality and intensity. Impregnable and forbidding as they appear, the steep cliffs provide safe homes for many species of nesting birds and ocean-dwelling animals. In contrast, the quiet serenity of the landscapes to be found around Ship and North Harbours in calm, clear weather were quietly mesmerising and strangely demanding of one's complete attention.

The elevated situation of the main settlement enables visitors to experience and appreciate the changing nature of the weather and its impact on the landscape and the water from the comfort of a cosy sitting room. After one brief fall of rain, we were lucky enough to enjoy the sight of an intensely coloured rainbow across the landscape. It made land-fall close to the tip of Sabina Point, so the location of buried treasure is now an open secret! Another point of interest for visitors to the settlement is the MS Hanseatic, which now languishes in the shallow tidal waters adjacent to the Barnard Hut Museum.

Our return journey home to Stanley started as the first rays of daylight appeared, at the settlement jetty, where our visit started, with Leif meeting us there for the journey back to Beaver Island, and ultimately, connection with our flight to Stanley. As the wind speed picked up, our crossing back to Beaver Island was memorable. 'Peregrine' speedily negotiated its way through rising swells under full sail. As successive waves broke across the bow throwing up spray and water, the weather started to turn and visibility quickly closed in. As the conditions worsened, Jerome Poncet confirmed that FIGAS flights had been grounded. The low cloud cover turned to fog, then refused to lift for three days. Despite being inconvenienced greatly by unexpected stranded travellers, Jerome and Leif were extremely welcoming and generous, providing us with warm beds on the famous 'Golden Fleece', delicious home cooked food, fine wines and witty company of an evening. The opportunity to lend a hand with minor tasks around the farm was the least we could do in the circumstances. Three days after leaving New Island, the clouds and fog started to lift. With heartfelt thanks, we bid goodbye to our hosts and boarded the short homeward-bound flight.

Unexpectedly, our adventures continued – our Islander aircraft developed a fault en route! Erring on the side of caution, FIGAS and our pilot suspended the flight at Fox Bay, where we were to wait for a replacement aircraft to arrive from Stanley to collect us. Once again, we experienced hospitality and kindness that was humbling in its generosity and spirit. Shiralee and Andy looked after the three of us as though we were family while we waited on the arrival of a replacement Islander from Stanley. We were deeply affected by the extent of kindness and hospitality shown to us by Falkland Islanders throughout our unexpectedly extended adventure.

New Island is one of the gems in the Falkland Islands' crown. If you have the opportunity or ever get a chance to go there, go! It really will be the most memorable opportunity of a lifetime.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800.. Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system:

Law & Regulation - Jobs

The Government Legal Services is recruiting three key posts. Any persons working in Legal Services at any level must be of high integrity, professional, and competent. These posts will involve you in some of the most sensitive, complex and challenging areas at the heart of Government. You will work with the Attorney General and senior lawyers to tight deadlines on a range of issues including critical government projects.

This directorate is committed to developing and supporting all new staff. We will train you, we will develop your skills, and we will challenge you. In return you must be prepared to challenge yourself, to be the best you can and be willing to learn. Each new non-lawyer member of staff will have a lawyer assigned as a mentor who will be available to help you. You must be committed to continuous improvement and enjoy working in a friendly, supportive and highly professional environment. You will from time to time be called upon to assist across the wider Law & Regulation Directorate, which may include working with the Registrar General with the public registers, land and elections.

Legal Secretary: Reporting to the Office Manager, this role will be to support the Head of Legal Services in the system administration of the directorate, facilitate change and undertake legal tasks commensurate with your training and desire to develop.

Salary: Grade F starting at £19,920.

Paralegal: Reporting to the Head of Legal Services, this is a training and development role for two years. It will introduce you into the legal world. You will be expected to learn and develop legal skills under the supervision of directorate lawyers. Over the two years you will be expected to develop sufficient legal expertise to be recommended for additional training.

Salary: Grade G Starting at £16,812.

Legal Clerk: Reporting to the Office Manager, this is the entry level role into the legal world. You will learn all aspects of work in a legal office and help in the preparation of all aspects of legal work and office administration.

If you work well and prove yourself the only limit to your development will be yourself. Salary: Grade H Starting at £14,883

Please contact Barbara Steen, Office Manager bsteen@sec.gov.fk or David Brown, Head of Legal Services, headoflegalservices@sec.gov.fk in the strictest confidence to discuss any of these roles further.

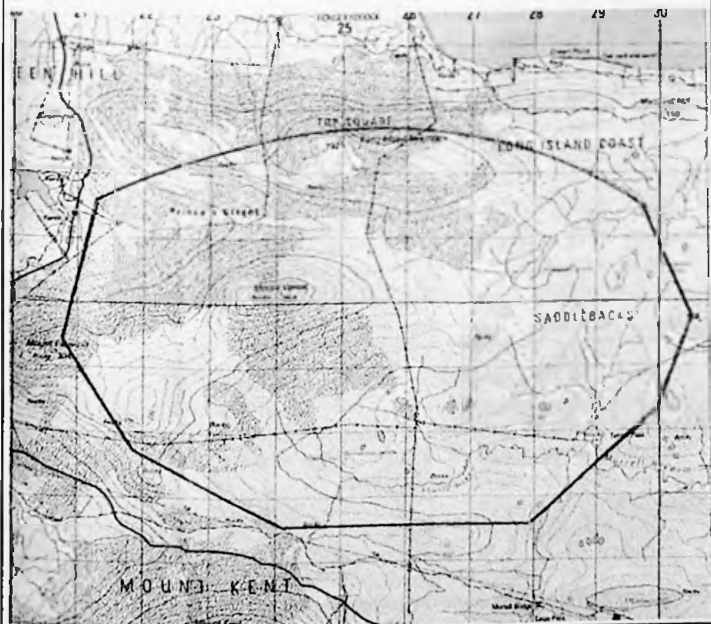

Application forms and job descriptions are available from Barbara Steen.

Closing date: 25 September 2015

In collaboration with SAERI, Shallow Marine Surveys Group, the University of Aberdeen, and the Falkland Islands Government. Closing Date 21st September 2015.

This is an exciting research opportunity for an interested BSc (Hons) or MSc graduate to embark on a career in academic or applied marine ecology. Falkland Islands' coastal marine systems are unique in the region but are to date poorly understood. Over recent years a significant amount of effort has been made to redress this through numerous field surveys and targeted applied research. As such there is now a baseline for asking more complex questions that address modern ecological theory and at the same time having practical conservation applications in our unique part of the world, as set out in the Falkland Islands Biodiversity Framework (FIBioF).

The PhD will concentrate on trophic studies in the intertidal and sub tidal benthic environments across temporal and spatial scales. The ability to dive is not necessary, although there will opportunity to learn these skills.

For further detail please contact Dr Paul Brickie (pbrickie@env.institute.ac.fk) at SAERI.DARWIN House

FIG congratulate new Labour man Jeremy Corbyn

MLA Jan Cheek

"Falkland Islanders and representatives of the Falkland Islands Government will be attending the Labour Party's 2015 Annual Conference in Brighton, and we hope Mr Corbyn will have time to meet with us."

THE Falkland Islands Government has congratulated the Leader of the Labour Party, Jeremy Corbyn MP on his election success.

Mr Corbyn's campaign to take up leadership after Ed Miliband resigned in May, touched a raw nerve with some Islanders after media picked up on a BBC interview from two years ago in which he said a "degree of joint administration," could be used as a solution to the dispute over the Falkland Islands.

During the leadership campaign however, a spokesman for Mr Corbyn told The Telegraph: "Jeremy has long urged a long term negotiated settlement which of course should take into consideration the views of the Islanders themselves, adding, "As a general policy principle we are committed to conflict prevention and conflict resolution."

MLA Jan Cheek said this week that the people of the Falkland Islands were reassured that the policies of the Labour Party had historically supported the right of self-determination.

"In 2013 the people of the Falkland Islands made clear our desire to remain a British Overseas Territory. The right of self-determination of all peoples is enshrined in the United Nations Charter, and in March 2013 over 99 per cent of Islanders in a free, fair and internationally observed referendum exercised that right and voted to keep our relationship with the UK intact.

MLA Cheek said the Falklands relationship with the UK was based on mutual respect, "something which Argentina has consistently failed to afford us."

She added: "We would urge all politicians from whatever party to respect the wishes of Islanders that were so clearly expressed in 2013."

On matters of mutual interest with Argentina, The Falkland Islands Government has made it perfectly clear that it is prepared to sit down and talk with Argentina, "yet it is Argentina who consistently ignores our invitations," said MLA Cheek.

Argentina's president called Corbyn's landslide victory a, "triumph of hope" and branded the new leader, "a great friend of Latin America," referring to his support for a dialogue between the country and the British Government over the Falkland Islands.

"Jeremy Corbyn is a great friend of Latin America and shares, in solidarity, our demands for equality and political sovereignty," said Cristina Kirchner.

The Flying Santa Fund was boosted by almost £1,000 on Tuesday when five hardy soldiers from REME (Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers) based at Mount Pleasant marched into Stanley.

Sgts Gordy Lewis, Terry Elwin, and Paul Adams along with LCpl Liam Roberts and Cfn Michael Reilly (pictured above) took nine and a half hours to complete the 36 miles in wintry conditions, although in true Falklands fashion there was a taste of the other three seasons thrown in for good measure.

They arrived at the KEM Hospital mid afternoon and were glad to receive some minor repair to their feet.

BFBS tv 40 today

Celebrating 40 years of service to the Armed Forces

BFBS TV is 40 years old today, and to mark this special anniversary BFBS TV, BFBS Radio 2 and Forces TV are presenting a series of programmes and movies.

"In 1975 BFBS TV started out as a single station based in what was then West Germany, and has grown to the global multichannel experience we know today," said Adam Hardwick, Head of BFBS TV.

"Over the past four decades we are proud to have offered the best of British documentaries, soaps, sport, news, comedy and children's programmes to our Forces audience to give them a taste of home wherever they are based overseas, or on operational tours."

BFBS TV's story will be told by Forces viewers and archive footage in an exclusive programme, BFBS TV 40: Home on the Box, on BFBS Extra at 7.35pm tonight and on Forces TV at 8.30pm.

Comment by Acting Editor Sharon Jaffray

BFBS TV is celebrating 40 years of broadcast today and I'm sure everyone will agree that the service the Falklands has enjoyed over more than 20 years is greatly appreciated.

We had only just imported a few video players to the Islands pre-82 and it was a considerable time before television would become the norm in homes around the Islands. Who remembers the desperate days of waiting for the Eastenders video tapes to make the rounds and then watching nothing else for nights on end so they could be passed on to the next family?

BFBS TV was first transmitted at MPA and Mare Harbour in December 1986, just in time for Christmas and by April 87 was being filtered further afield and into Stanley with the aid of some typical Islander resourcefulness and a bit of Benny technology.

However it wasn't until 1992/3 that it was extended officially to the Camp settlements.

BFBS TV has come a long way over 40 years and while we may have got off to a slow start we have been with you every step of the way since. A very happy birthday BFBS TV and I hope everyone who has worked so hard behind the scenes gets LOTS of cake.

With thanks to former BFBS engineer Adrian Almond for helping us establish a time line.

HAPPENINGS this week have on the whole been of a positive nature. Slipping back to Monday, the meeting to take a look at the developments and options for Older Peoples Services was in fact, a breath of fresh air.

There was a packed room and lots of constructive comment offered as ways to provide better services for our vulnerable people of all ages were explored.

Normally when there is such a turn-out for a public meeting it is because the masses are thoroughly ticked-off about something and an air bordering on menace can prevail.

It's heartening to be kept up to date on the planning processes and I'd like to thank the Director of Health and Social Services Ian Bainbridge for sharing it with us.

With the level of openness displayed so far, should the project lose momentum or be unnecessarily hindered at some stage, he can rest assured he will have the support of the community behind him.

Community care key, but new facility needed

THE Courts and Council Chamber was full to capacity on Monday evening for an update on the proposed model for Older Peoples Services.

Director of Health and Social Services Ian Bainbridge gave a presentation on progress to date which included possible construction sites and what services could be provided.

These ranged from a three storey building near the hospital with underground parking and a rooftop garden; incorporating Stanley House and the grounds into a suitable facility to more traditional constructions on the old BFFI site, Government House Triangle and in East Stanley near Rowlands Rise.

Once a site was decided upon more concrete plans and costings could be progressed, said Mr Bainbridge.

"We want to get on and do things as quickly as we can. Think about where we are going to be in 18 months time," said Mr Bainbridge, adding, "we want to get some good outcomes for people and improve services."

A reference group had been formed which had looked at the needs and demography of the population and at models which would most effectively lead to the Falklands preferred model.

"It has to be good value for money with outcomes that work for people," said Mr Bainbridge.

It should also look at keeping people healthy, giving them good treatment and empowering them to maximise their independence.

While care in the community and the need to step it up was key, Mr Bainbridge, said there was no getting around the need for a new facility.

Chief Medical Officer Beccy Edwards also stressed that care in the community had to be stepped up. The services model would not work unless there was investment in community care and assisting people to stay in their homes.

"If we get that right we can deal with the rest of it," she said.

MLA Mike Summers agreed that it was fundamental to the entire plan.

Opinion was both for and against the concept of having young and old vulnerable adults within the same environment although it was thought they could add to the community in some aspects.

One member of the public with previous experience of care homes stressed that while the physical design of the facility was very important, the attitude towards working with the elderly and vulnerable was even more important. Both need to be right, he said.

Earthquake in Chile

A MAJOR earthquake just off the coast of Coquimbo in Chile killed at least five people and shook the earth so strongly the tremor was felt in Argentina, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay and even Brazil.

Authorities worked into the early hours of Thursday morning assessing damage in several coastal towns that were hit by flooding from small tsunami waves set off by the quake.

The 8.3 magnitude quake hit off northern Chile on Wednesday night, causing buildings to sway in the capital of Santiago and prompting authorities to issue a tsunami warning for the nation's entire Pacific coast. People sought safety in the streets of inland cities, while others along the shore took to their cars to get to higher ground.

Numerous aftershocks, including one at magnitude seven and four above six, shook the region after the initial earthquake. It is reported to be the strongest tremor since a powerful quake and tsunami killed hundreds in 2010 and levelled part of the city of Concepcion in south-central Chile.

Chile is one of the world's most earthquake-prone countries because just off the coast, the Nazca tectonic plate plunges beneath the South American plate, pushing the towering Andes cordillera to ever-higher altitudes.

Residents of Illapel, near the quake's epicentre, fled into the streets in terror as their homes began to sway.

In the coastal town of Coquimbo, waves of 4.5m (15ft) hit the shore. A tsunami alert was issued for the entire Chilean coast but has since been lifted.

The US Geological Survey (USGS) said the tremor struck off the coast of Coquimbo, 46km (29 miles) west of the city of Illapel at 19:54 local time.

No cruise award, but wildlife may win through

THE Falkland Islands was not fortunate enough to win the 'Best Cruise Destination' award this year, however Tony Mason, Director of International communications for the Tourist Board said being nominated for the category was, "a great accomplishment."

Mr Mason attended the Cruise International Tourism Awards on Wednesday, held at London's prestigious Ham Yard Hotel.

The winner of this year's award was Alaska.

Other destinations nominated alongside the Falkland Islands in the category were, Antarctica, Australia, Cuba, Hawaii, Jamaica, Japan, Miami, New York, New Zealand, Singapore and Vietnam.

Mr. Mason said being nominated in the category alongside such prestigious contenders was a huge accomplishment for the Falkland Islands.

"To make it to the finalist round and be presented at the awards was something we should all be proud of," he added.

The Islands are also nominated in the Selling Travel Magazine tourism awards in the category of "Best Destination for Wildlife and Nature" which will be held in November.

The Falklands won this award last year. Voting closes on October 7 with the award announced online on the 14th.

First flight into St Helena

THE historic first flight into St Helena's new airport landed at 13:50 GMT on Tuesday (September 15).

The aircraft from South African TAB Charters took off on Monday, making its way to Ondangwa, Namibia, then to Namibe on the Angolan coast, performing a series of calibration flights before making the epic first landing at Prosperous Bay airport.

Captain Grant Brighton said, "It feels fantastic and we're privileged to have flown the first plane to land on St Helena and to be part of your wonderful project."

"The trip over was good. It was interesting landing here, a bit windy on the threshold but a terrific runway, surface, airport and facility."

Watching the landing - together with numerous residents Councillor Lawson Henry said, "First of all this is quite emotional - we've waited so long for this moment and it has finally happened. This is history in the making and we're a part of it."

Showing insurance not 'worthless regime' says Chief of Police

Supt Len McGill

"The recent publicity campaign is centred on assisting drivers to comply with their responsibilities under the law and thereby preventing them having to be dealt with through the courts."

REMINDERS from the Royal Falkland Islands Police (RFIP) of the need to produce proof of insurance prior to obtaining a vehicle licence (formerly road tax) has prompted discussion locally as to whether it is really necessary.

Penguin News asked Chief of Police (CoP), Superintendent Len McGill and MLA Mike Summers this week what the value was in having to produce insurance documents when it can be cancelled at any time and given that it is the driver's legal responsibility to ensure they are properly insured, registered and taxed?

Supt McGill said it was not a new subject; the production of insurance before issue of vehicle licence had been the case for more years than he could remember.

The recent information and education initiative, which had just been undertaken, was he said, as a result of the Insurance Company's complaint about the amount of calls they were getting from the Licensing Bureau and stating that they would not receive them in the future.

"This also alerted me to the fact that some of my staff may not have been complying with their responsibilities," he added.

He explained that the value and intent of Regulation 6(4) Road Traffic (Provisional) Regulations Order, was to ensure that at the time the CoP issues a licence, permitting the use on a road of a motor vehicle, it carries a valid certificate of insurance as required under Section 9 of the Road Traffic Ordinance and in accordance with Regulation 6 Road Traffic (Provisional) Regulations Order.

This third party insurance insures the policy holder against liability which may be incurred by them in respect of the death or bodily injury to any person caused by or arising out of the use of the vehicle on a road.

Was it not a stringent, but ultimately worthless regime which caused extra work for the licens-

MLA Mike Summers

"Vehicles can be lethal in some circumstances as we know to our regret. It is absolutely right that the Police do whatever is necessary to ensure they are driven safely, and that drivers have the necessary insurance to protect innocent victims."

ing clerk when it is the drivers responsibility to be insured, Penguin News asked.

Supt McGill replied: "This 'stringent, but ultimately worthless regime' provides assurance that persons injured, disabled, (or killed, they may ultimately die after medivac having incurred considerable costs for example) and who may be unable to earn a living etc, has access to funds that will pay for their treatment, continued supported living, accommodation, and the basic necessities of life. If such insurance were not carried by the owner of a vehicle that caused such a situation then these costs may well fall to the public purse. The cost of such care and treatment can be astronomical."

The production of a valid certificate of insurance did not create extra work for the licensing bureau clerk; "it is the work of the licencing clerk whilst engaged in issuing vehicle licences."

Supt McGill said it was known that an insurance policy can be cancelled just as quickly as it can be taken out.

"The person that does this, if they were involved in an RTC, risks being sued privately for the costs mentioned above, on top of receiving a considerable fine and an automatic driving ban. Such private actions may also leave the person liable to lose all their assets including their home. If they are discovered without a valid certificate of insurance, at any time, they would be liable to prosecution."

"Such an offence may well be aggravated (considered more serious) if it could be shown that they had cancelled their insurance as soon as they had obtained their vehicle licence."

MLA Summers said producing insurance was not only a useful annual check, but could also be a useful reminder to drivers.

Probation order for assault

STANLEY man Ulrik Bjorn Eriksen (48) was given a nine month probation order in the Summary Court on Wednesday after he pleaded guilty to a charge of common assault which took place on July 10.

Mr Eriksen entered his plea on August 12 and the case was adjourned for a pre-sentence report to be prepared.

Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe said Mr Eriksen had been out drinking with his partner on July 9, and after they had returned home a row had escalated which resulted in the complainant receiving a single slap to the left side of her face.

In police interview Mr Eriksen said he had delivered the slap in order to calm her down after she had slapped him four times. He chose not to press charges.

However, he accepted his behaviour had not been reasonable saying, "I should have been an adult and walked away."

Defence lawyer Damien Sabino said Mr Eriksen had not tried to advance self-defence which could have been possible in this case and noted that he had pleaded guilty on his own admission, even though the complainant had made a retraction statement.

Justice of the Peace Paul Freer said the court took a hard line on domestic violence, but in delivering the sentence said that provocation had occurred, it had been a single blow and remorse had been shown. No compensation was awarded in view of the statement retraction, although Mr Eriksen was ordered to pay £150 prosecution costs.

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into her working week

The party conferences just became even more interesting with the election of a new Labour leader and appointment of a much changed shadow cabinet. We are already acquainted with many of them and will hope to meet others in Brighton. When I say we, I mean MLAs and Falklands Representative Sukey Cameron who regularly briefs MPs and attends many events where she builds on the excellent relationship she has with many of them.

I'm travelling this week and using a bit of my holiday to ensure that I'm ready to go on the 26th when we head to Brighton. One of the first steps will be to pick up accreditation which was only posted to me in the Falklands days ago so will arrive too late as Southbound mail seems to take so long. This is needed to get through security into the conference centre. I think it was last year when someone we knew who was not wearing his pass was 'escorted' back to his nearby hotel to get it; security is taken seriously.

The stand, which is of fairly substantial construction, will have been setup in the exhibition area and will just need finishing touches like a quick polish and stocking with all our literature and giveaways when we arrive for each session. The days usually run from about 9am to 5.30 or 6pm after which we may on some days attend one or several receptions and other events which present more opportunities to meet people and talk to them and invite them to visit our stand if they have not already done so. We take short breaks from the stand and sometimes get to go to interesting fringe meetings held in the vicinity but mainly work on the stand throughout as the passing traffic is very busy and we do not want anyone to miss out because no-one is available to speak to them. We hope to speak with many of the newly elected MPs among others. This year we have two MLAs attending with the Representative, with additional help from James Marsh and Krysteen Ormond.

FAKLANDS fishing company Fortuna Ltd has become a sponsor and research partner in a PhD student ship on southern blue whiting.

The Falkland Islands Government fisheries Department (FIFD) and the South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI) are also collaborators in this research project.

SAERI Director Dr Paul Brickley explained that Southern blue whiting was once a very abundant planktivorous fish which inhabits temperate shelf and slope waters off the southern tip of South America.

He said the PhD studentship would be significant to the future management and understanding of the dynamics of southern blue whiting in the fishery in the region.

Stuart Wallace, Managing Director of Fortuna Ltd said Fortuna as a major quota owner had a clear interest in supporting the science which underpins the management of the Falklands Fishery. "We are extremely pleased to have this opportunity to work with FIG and SAERI on a project that will add to our knowledge of this potentially still commercially valuable stock."

Dr Brickley added: "This is a fantastic opportunity for a graduate to embark on a serious career in science and indeed contribute to the management and understanding of the recovery of a once important species in the South Atlantic."

Southern blue whiting move from their vast feeding grounds in the South Atlantic and sub-Antarctic waters to the south-western part of the Falkland Islands' shelf to spawn in September-October. After spawning, the fish spread around the southwest Atlantic to forage and their abundance around the Falklands Islands gradually declines towards austral summer (December/January).

The highest annual commercial catches of about 1.5 million tonnes for southern blue whiting in the Southwest Atlantic occurred in 1983 followed by peaks and troughs and then a relatively rapid decline from 1990. This decline continued for the remainder of the fishery.

Dr Brickley said the southern blue whiting had been so abundant that it used to be the controlling and limiting species on all finfish licence types.

The decline however is thought to have caused an ecological regime shift in the southern Patagonian Shelf where after the collapse of southern blue whiting stocks in 2004-2007, its role was overtaken by the Patagonian rock cod, which exhibited a 20-30 fold increase in catches and CPUEs.

To mitigate the decline, the FIFD in partnership with the fishing industry reduced the pelagic Total Allowable Catch (TAC) from 18,000 to 6,000 in 2010 and 2,000 tonnes in 2013. The FIFD also imposed a seasonal closed area on the spawning grounds to the south west of the Falkland Islands during peak spawning periods in 2010, and anecdotally this has resulted in better recruitment in subsequent years.

"This declining trend and lack of regional data highlights the need for a resurrection the Regional Fisheries Management Organisation (RFMO), or at least have some agreement on data sharing and management. The need to tease out the causes of the decline, outside of over exploitation, is important to informing the resource's management," said Dr Brickley.

Understanding the decline and recovery of one of the South Atlantic's largest fishery is the aim of the PhD. The studentship will utilise data collected by the FIFD, both biological and commercial, to track the decline in abundances and also to examine the resultant changes in population dynamics; use otolith chemistry, from otolith archives going back to the late 1980s, to examine the contributions of different spawning grounds in the Atlantic and the Pacific to adult populations over the course of its rise and fall. Chemistry will also be used to look at its position tropically over that period too. The PhD will also test the effectiveness of the spawning area closures in the Falkland Islands and their contributions to recruitment success seen over the last few years.

Two Islanders were pilots in World War II

IT was brought to my attention that there was a Battle of Britain Commemorative Service in Christ Church Cathedral on Sunday, and in particular, RAF pilots Eric Turner and my uncle Lionel Craigie-Halkett (both Falkland Islanders) were remembered.

I am somewhat disappointed that Graham Bound (Bound Ungagged) continues to ignore the fact that my uncle Lionel (my father's brother), also gave his life in the service of his country as a pilot on a Wellington Bomber (Tail NoT2559) during the Battle of Britain. Lionel was shot down on Friday August 30, 1940. To avoid any confusion for Graham, Lionel was born in Port Stanley on 5th January 1916.

It is poignant to think that the small village where Lionel and his crew's remains are interred in Holland, hold a memorial service in their memory every year on May 4 (Dutch Remembrance Day).

Lyle Craigie-Halkett
UK

Our thanks to Mr CraigieHalkett for bringing this to our attention and also for the additional information (see right) provided about his uncle.

A step forward for the elderly

The meeting held last Monday on the provision of services for the elderly was a step forward and the team who have drawn up the proposals should be publicly thanked. The site is an issue that will continue to be a source of comment, with each of us having our own preference. The site is less important that the project itself and should not be allowed to cloud the issue.

What did come out at the meeting was the plan to keep people in their own homes, living independently for as long as possible. This has been the policy for a long time. However, the resources allocated are clearly not enough and there should be a clear commitment from Gilbert House, in this financial year, to improve and expand the existing services. This would make me confident that the future provision of care for the elderly is more than just yet another report, canvassing a round of opinions that end up on the rocks of budget constraints.

John Birmingham
Stanley

Lionel Craigie-Halkett World War II RAF pilot

LIONEL Craigie-Halkett was born in Stanley on December 28, 1915. His father was Montague Craigie-Halkett, who was born in Surrey in 1883 and his mother's maiden name was Ann Robson from Port Louis.

Lionel's father, Montague, held several positions in the Government of the Falkland Islands from JP, Postmaster General to Colonial Secretary. Recent research has revealed that Frederick Craigie-Halkett, who was Montague's father, also served as Chief Secretary and Governor in the Falklands in the 1880s. There is a memorial plaque in Christ Church Cathedral dedicated to him.

Lionel went to the U.K. to further his education and then joined the Royal Air Force attaining his pilot's licence in 1937.

When WW2 broke out in 1939, Lionel was assigned to Bomber Command. On 24th August 1940 a German bomber, allegedly off course, dropped its load of bombs onto a residential suburb of London. Affronted by this action Winston Churchill assured the British people that bombs would fall on Berlin within 24 hours. The damage was said to be 'minimal' but the psychological effect was enormous. Goering had always assured the German people that 'his' Luftwaffe would prevent that from ever happening.

On Friday 30th August 1940 several bomber aircraft were prepared to fly on a bombing mission over Germany from an airfield not far from Newmarket. One of these aeroplanes was a Wellington, tail number T2559, piloted by Lionel Craigie-Halkett aged 25. The co-pilot was B.S. Cunyngnam age 22, two wireless operators, Sydney J. Haldane aged 19 and Arthur B. Puzey aged 20, tail gunner George E. Merryweather aged 20 and finally the navigator/observer George H. Bainbridge aged 29.

After the Wellington T2559 was loaded with her lethal load of bombs she took off in company of the other bombers at the recorded local time of 20.48.

The final entry in the Operations Record Book states simply 'after leaving base nothing has been seen or heard of this machine'.

It appears that T2559 was not en route to Berlin, but most likely had orders to drop its bombs on a German airfield. As soon as the bombers were sighted the Germans sent their fighters from the Fliegerhorst (air force base) near Arnheim to intercept, which resulted in an aerial battle above Eastern Gelderland. Three British fighters were brought down in flames and it is thought that 15 British airmen lost their lives. What is known for sure is that a Wellington's gunner brought down a Luftwaffe fighter and the two German crew managed to parachute to safety.

Wellington T2559 had crashed in a field between the Dutch villages of Halle and Zelham.

Correction

Last week's Bound Ungagged reference Eric Turners should have read, "...Stanley's local paper reported in 1935 that Eric had married Marjory Hayward-Rowson on August 1, that year at Goring-on-Sea in Sussex.

She and husband Molks starting farming at Johnson Harbour in 2011, and the family has rapidly increased to include their three daughters. "I love living in the Camp and being a stay at home mum, but I also love getting stuck in on the farm too. My favourite job has to be drafting. I find it very entertaining... and mostly talk to the dogs."

A stroll down memory lane

25 years ago

SEVERE weather is suspected to have killed off at least 1,000 sheep on West Falkland, although the full death rate will not be known until after shearing when all stock has been tallied.

Chartres seems to have been one of the worst hit areas with owners Bill and Pat Luxton finding just 300 ewes surviving out of a stud flock of 450.

Other hard hit farms include South Harbour where almost 10 per cent of the hoggett flock was found dead. 58 bodies were found in one snow drift and many others around the edge of a pond which had become frozen over.

Many farmers have been unable to reach the outskirts of their farms because of the snow. Lamb marking is being predicted to be a 'sad story' on some of the farms.

Earlier in the month savage gales blew part of the roof off Joan Middleton's house in Stanley and firemen worked through the night to save it. The north side of the roof was lost, but the firemen succeeded in pinning the south side down.

Meanwhile a somewhat warmer emergency has the firemen back in action when Emma Steen's car catches fire near Stanley Airport.

Mrs Steen was driving to collect her granddaughter Stacey with her daughter and two grandchildren in the car. Smoke appeared from the dashboard as they neared the airport so they grabbed the children and ran. The car burst into flames soon after they were clear.

The Duke of Kent visits the Islands and is proclaimed, "a very nice young man," by 86 year old Grace McPhee. During his visit he unveils a plaque for the new senior school and a cairn near the Public Jetty to commemorate the visits of two princes. He also presents an Explorers badge to 14 year-old Scout, Karl Harris.

A £30,000 Redfire remote-controlled mine detecting/disposal vehicle is destroyed while clearing mines at Eliza Cove. Having located three anti-vehicle mines and successfully retrieved one it detonated another as it returned along the same tracks.

Stanley football team defeat a St Helena team 3-1 in the last match to be played on the old pitch. On the sidelines Gordon Forbes' bull dozers wait to start work on the new senior school.

The UK and Argentine governments sign an agreement to co-operate on off-shore activities in the South West Atlantic.

The joint declaration safeguards British sovereignty and jurisdiction over the Falkland Islands and the surrounding maritime areas.

The agreement which was shrouded in secrecy in the Falklands during the build up to it being signed on September 27, does not apply to maritime areas surrounding South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands.

At a public meeting the Chief Executive apologises for the secrecy saying it had been necessary as any public statement would have immediately found its way to Argentina.

Members of the public are suspicious, not because the agreement is in any particular sense a bad one, but because there is grave doubt based on previous agreements that Argentina will make any effort to keep within the agreement.

Just days before the agreement is signed approximately eight fishing vessels licensed by the Falklands Government are chased out of the Falkland Islands Conservation Zone (FOCZ) by the Argentine Navy Corvette Granville.

The FOCZ is an area established jointly between the British and Argentine governments under the 'sovereignty umbrella'.

The concept of extending the agreement to oil is thought to have made some members of the Argentine military 'unhappy' and some commentators suggest it may have been an attempt by hard-liners within the Argentine Navy to rock the diplomatic boat, before the impending oil agreement

Falklands registered fishing vessel Mila which is part owned by Councillor Mike Summers is sighted allegedly engaging in illegal fishing activities within the Australian Fishing Zone. Cllr Summers says the owners were not aware it was in the vicinity and that it had not been given authority to be there.

The Mila is ordered back to Stanley by the Director of Fisheries and is arrested so that further investigation can take place.

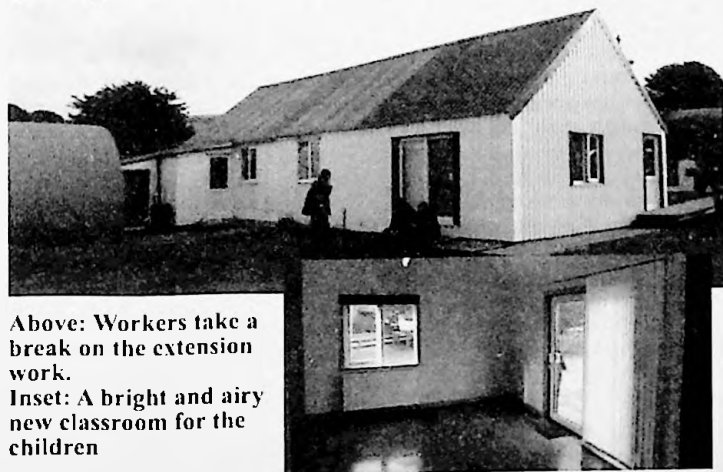

Councillors say they do not plan to hold an official meeting with the former Argentine foreign minister Dr Guido Di Tella on his planned visit to the Falklands on October 14.

Dr Di Tella has become well known over recent years via what was termed his 'seduction policy.'

Cllr Richard Cockwell says, he is just another tourist, "true he is well known, but there is no requirement for councillors to meet him."

The Falkland Islands Defence Force leave their old headquarters on John Street and march to their new base south of the Airport Road.

PH school extended as pupil numbers increase

Inset: A bright and airy new classroom for the children

PUPILS at the Port Howard School will enjoy a light and airy new classroom this summer as the Port Howard gang put the finishing touches to an extension to the school.

Port Howard farm co-owner Critta Lee said the project had been undertaken by his bother Myles and the Port Howard gang adding, "they have done a really good job."

The project was funded by the farm and planned for the record class for many years of nine pupils currently on the register.

Port Howard settlement teacher Kirsty Johnston who is on a two-year contract with the Government Education Department said the new space was great.

"We are able to do so much more actively, especially with the younger ones."

Sally on board Porvenir in Lyttelton Harbour

Ken with the catch of the day

Settle back for a sea faring yarn with Ken Passfield and Sally Poncet as they continue their journey to Australia

THE yacht Porvenir was last seen tying up in the busy seaport of Lyttelton in the South Island. An interesting little town, about the same size as Stanley, much knocked about by the 2010 earthquakes, but slowly finding its feet again.

The port really brings life to the town. Most people we spoke to enjoyed seeing the ships come and go, the sailors in the streets, and overlooked a bit of noise from containers or logs being loaded 24/7. I've never really understood the attitude of the moaning minnies in Stanley who think all port activity should be hidden out of sight around the corner somewhere, ignoring the fact we're an island nation that makes our living from the sea.

We made a quick road trip inland to visit friends, then set sail for the Marlborough Sounds. Sailing in New Zealand isn't always easy – there are stretches of exposed coast up to 150 miles long where once you're out there, you're committed, unlike the Falklands where there's always an anchorage or two to put into if the wind changes. By and large though, modern weather forecasting is pretty good and you're unlikely to be caught out by an unexpected change: you just don't leave harbour unless you know you can make it to the other end.

After a fast trip we made land-fall at Tory Channel at the north-east tip of the South Island, where Queen Charlotte Sound enters the open sea through a narrow passage. The inter-island ferries transit en-route from Wellington to Picton, and there's only space for one ship to pass through at a time. We hit the place at rush-hour and had to skulk around out of the way for 20 minutes while three ferries passed. Then we punched through against the strong tide whilst keeping an eye out for crayfish pot buoys.

Entering the channel was like going through a door into a different world. Sheltered waters, a peaceful anchorage for the night and flat calm.

The Marlborough Sounds are an extensive network of sounds and islands at the top of the South Island. Although some valleys are renowned for wind, the weather when we were there was pretty good for mid-winter – it was often flat calm in the Sounds whilst blowing a hooley 20 miles away in the middle of Cook Strait.

European settlers cut down much of the original forest cover to create sheep farms. Few of these prospered: thin soils eroded away, gorse and other weeds invaded pastures and the high transport costs made farming uneconomic. Today the main industries in the Sounds are tourism and mussel farming, both of which appeared to be booming. There are holiday homes (known as baches) scattered throughout the area, a few have year round residents with boat access only.

We visited Debbie Lewis, who has passed through Stanley a few times; she has a house on the water's edge with a jetty in the front garden where most houses would have a driveway and a deep-water mooring just offshore – every yachtie's dream home.

After a few weeks in the Sounds it was time to think of work – we had arranged to meet up with Brad Myer, who we have been working with in South Georgia on weed control. Brad runs a habitat restoration company in Nelson and we'd planned on spending some time with him to learn about his operation. After a couple of days spent out with his guys surveying weeds in mountainous country covered in thick native bush, we realised that weed control in the Falklands is a doddle in comparison.

For starters, you can drive everywhere in the Falklands (boggings excepted), weeds are easy to see and find, they're not hidden in thick undergrowth and above all thanks to our bracing climate, they don't even grow that quickly so you have time to get a handle on them.

We went back to school too and did a Grow Safe Course on the use of agrochemicals. Perhaps the most memorable part of the course was a day spent in a freezing classroom with no heating and yet two of the attendees were in shorts – what is it with this Kiwi obsession of wearing shorts all year round, even when there's frost on the ground?

Nelson is New Zealand's largest fishing port, and also home to John Bennett and Greg Thorn, well known in Stanley as Captain and Chief Engineer of the longliner San Aspiring. John and his wife Sue took us along to the Blessing of the Fleet, an outdoors event on the quayside with a service in memory of the true cost of fish: all the fishermen who have lost their lives. Yet it was also an upbeat occasion highlighting the importance of the fishing industry to the area. A couple of large freezer trawlers had timed their departures to the fishing grounds to sail out past the crowds and the local inshore boats did a sail-by to finish.

An interesting aspect of the fishing industry is that as well as its local vessels, New Zealand companies also have joint ventures with foreign companies in the same way we do in the Falklands. After a number of depressingly familiar incidents on poorly maintained vessels and crewmen jumping ship to escape abuse and unacceptable working conditions, there was a Ministerial enquiry in 2012 which led to big changes in the law.

Farewell committee

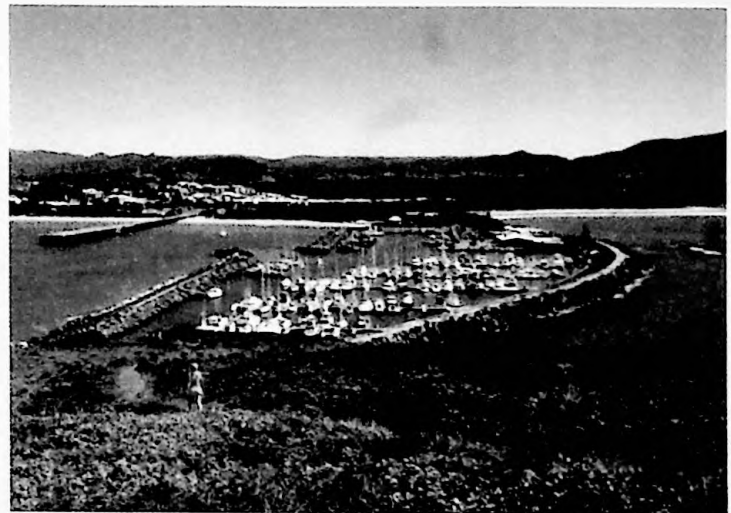

All foreign fishing vessels operating in the New Zealand Maritime Zone will have to be flagged in New Zealand – this means they have to be up to New Zealand safety standards and their crews will be protected by New Zealand labour law.

Critics may carp a bit here and there about the details, but ultimately this change in law says that all seafarers working in the Maritime Zone have the same rights, no matter where they are from. Sounds fair to me – food for thought for the Falklands perhaps?

By mid-August the weather was warming up and we decided it was time to take on the Tasman Sea and head west. We had a great send-off from Nelson with friends escorting us out of the harbour on another yacht. Our last sight of New Zealand was the oil rigs off Taranaki flaring off gas over the horizon at night; it looked like the fiery pits of Mordor or the gateway to hell. Luckily we were going to Australia instead.

Well, the 16 day crossing was a mixed bag of weather, some good sailing breezes, some beautiful oily flat calms and a couple of rather scary thunder and lightning storms. The wind stopped us from calling in at Lord Howe Island so we came directly to Coffs Harbour in northern New South Wales. The verdant green mountains behind the coast made for a great landfall as did seeing breaching humpback whales near the boat on the way in. We arrived in the evening, dropped anchor off the jetty and enjoyed the peace and quiet of being at rest again, looking forward to a couple of months exploring the Australian coast on our way down to Tasmania.

30th Craft fair attracts record entries

THE 30th Annual Craft Fair took place over the weekend, attracting a large number of entries and visitors alike.

The number of entries, at 805, was an increase from last year and, as ever, standards were high with fierce competition in some sections. This included some excellent pieces of both art and craft work from young people aged two to teenage with some particularly stunning entries in the woodwork section.

Hattie Kilmartin was this year's winner of the Sure Trophy for the most points overall. This year also saw a winning first with an entry from South Georgia, Stephanie Winnard, scooping the prize in the photography section.

A steady flow of visitors was treated, not only to the outstanding range of exhibits, but also to spinning demonstrations by the "Spinners and Weavers" and delicious refreshments from the café. New this year, the café was deemed a great success by both customers and organisers as it gave people a chance to rest their feet and chat over drinks and cakes. Funds raised from the café were donated to "Team Tranquil" for activities carried out by the "Crafty Travellers".

Organiser Natalie Smith said: "On behalf of the Falkland Craft Fair I would like to thank our sponsors, the judges and those who kindly helped to display the entries and clean up afterwards. Also thank you to everyone who came to view the show and bought raffle tickets - we rely on the proceeds from admission fees and the raffle to cover the children's prizes and other running costs."

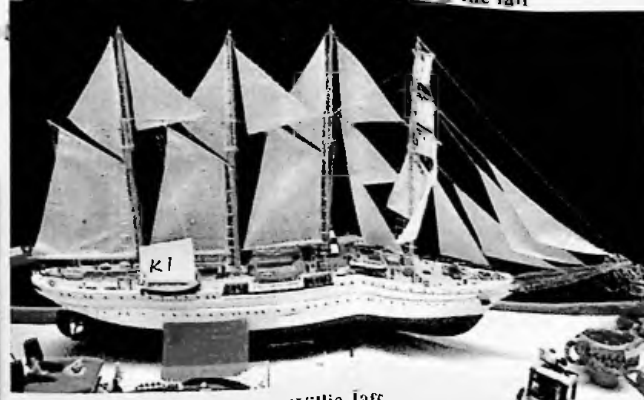

"It was pleasing to see an increase in entry numbers this year. The standard was as high as ever and displayed some of the amazing talent we have here in the Falklands and also South Georgia."

It's time to get crafting and get your entries ready for this time next year! You can find further inspiration from the Falkland Craft Fair Facebook page.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800 - Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF in the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system: Telephone: 28100, E-mail: inspector@police.gov.fk or fax: 28110.

Woolclasser shares his skills

DES Humphrey, a wool training consultant from Australia, has recently visited the Islands to deliver several workshops relating to wool, focussing in particular on the quality of the wool clip.

Des is no stranger to the Falklands having been here in 2005 and was pleased to be invited by the Agricultural Department to return to share his expertise over two weeks. He has more than 30 years experience in the business.

Workshops were held at Fox Bay and in Stanley. The participants, who included farmers, shearers and Agricultural Department workers from across the Islands, were actively involved in classing different samples and having their work assessed while enjoying lively discussions about the branding of wool and the importance of presentation of the fleece for high end markets overseas.

Des told Penguin News that the Falkland Islands already have high standards. The simulated classing helps to reinforce the importance of clip preparation to ensure the continuation of these standards, which are essential to maintain the Falklands reputation in an increasingly competitive world market. He enjoyed working with the groups, finding them very responsive and keen to increase their knowledge.

Agricultural Department staff felt that this was a very valuable course for everyone in the wool industry and were delighted that Des was able to return with a refresher for some adding that it was also excellent experience for the young people that attended.

Senior Agriculture Advisor Ian Campbell said he was particularly pleased to see so many young people and hoped the course would encourage them to participate as part of a quality Falklands wool programme.

Right: Wool classing consultant Des Humphrey at work in the Parish Hall in Stanley.

Below: It is back to school for farmers and other interested parties as best practice in wool preparation is reinforced

Colin and Lizzy win Globe 32/16

THE annual Globe 32/16 darts tournament produced a good turn-out as always with some new faces this year, as some of the top 32 men players were unable to attend.

In the ladies competition as usual there was some shock results and some great close games. The format for the ladies is the best of three straight legs of 501, this remains the same until the final where the match is played over five legs.

Julie Clarke was, according to the points gained from the League, this year the player to beat.

The tournament started for Julie with a very difficult game against Lucinda Lowe who took Julie to the very last dart in the third leg. Lucinda was 100 points ahead of Julie in the third leg and on her double but could not finish.

Sharon Jaffray beat Jane Clement in the first round and went on to beat Julie in the semi-finals.

Meanwhile Ella Crowie beat the on-form lady player of the season, Teresa Clifton, to claim her place in the semi-final.

Ella played Lizzy Bonner who had earlier caused a shock by beating Cherry Robson in the early stages. Lizzy went on to beat Ella to face Sharon in the final.

In the mens competition, a little more predictably, the top four seeded players made it to the semi-finals, but not without close games and shock results.

Len Ford lost two sets to nil to Adrian (Bean) Minnell, and Martyn Gilson-Clarke beat Chris Lloyd in one of the best games that I watched on the day. Martin was awesome in that last game to win two sets straight.

Roy Shepherd at the same stage was beating Darren Plato, Colin Smith was beating Adrian Minnell and Richard Bonner beat Ally Bonner to fill the semi-final spots.

Colin was to play Richard and Martyn to play Roy. Colin beat Richard 2-0 and Roy won a tighter competition 2-1.

The ladies final was played over five legs and on this occasion Lizzy was just too strong for Sharon and claimed her first victory in the Globe 16.

In the men's final Colin had it tough as Roy, winner of two other finals this year put up a good fight for it but Colin came out the winner three sets to one.

As always with the Globe competition good dart players usually come to the top as they have time to get back into the game which is the beauty of a sets competition.

Thanks must go to all the competitors this year also to Cathy Jacobsen Jnr who helped me when the going got tough, and to the staff of the Globe who kept us all well watered and fed for the whole day.

Congratulations to Don Pick the landlord of the Globe who continues to provide great prizes and a great competition.

End of season medal for Tim

ON Sunday the last Decor Services sponsored monthly medal, before the new season begins, was played for at the Stanley Golf Club.

On a bitterly cold morning 12 hardy souls turned out for a competition made all the tougher due to the strong wind.

Four groups of three players set off with a shotgun start in the Stableford competition, but no one tearing up the course, in fact far from it. The winning scores were just 29 Stableford points.

In this competition points are awarded depending on the score for each hole. It was designed to speed up play - as soon as a player can no longer score a point he can pick up his ball.

DECOR

There was to be a count back on this competition with both Kevin Clapp and Timmy Bonner scoring the same points. On a count back Timmy won the competition having scored better on the back nine holes.

Our thanks go out to Decor Services for their continued sponsoring of this monthly competition.

Two fishing companies face prosecution

PROSECUTIONS are to be brought against three fishing vessels suspected of breaching licensing conditions in Falklands waters.

Three vessels and one other vessel not involved in Tuesday's hearing before Senior Magistrate Clare Faulds have been under investigation for several months.

Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe said that prosecutions are now being brought, not just against the masters and owners of the vessels, but also against the local charterers as well.

The fishing vessels involved are Figaro, Playa Pesmar Uno and Playa Pesmar Dos.

Trawlers Playa Pesmar Uno and Playa Pesmar Dos are both owned by Pesqueras Marinenses SA and operate under the agency of Seafish; each vessel has an estimated value of £2.5 - 3 million. The third vessel Figaro valued at £1 million is owned by Freirmar SA with Sullivan Shipping acting as the local agent for the company since the 1980s.

The charges being brought include unlicensed fishing, breaches of fishing licences and misreporting of catches and, if the charges are admitted or proved, the penalties could include not just substantial fines, but also forfeiture of the catch and the vessels themselves.

At an earlier hearing in July an application by the fishing companies to have the vessels released to return to fishing grounds was granted with all three vessels paying £200,000 security.

Mr Rowe said at the July hearing that to give a flavour of how serious allegations of unlicensed fishing were, the maximum penalty could reach £625,000 as well as imprisonment for up to three years for the responsible individual.

The Senior Magistrate decided on Tuesday to continue the security order she had made which also includes conditions such as reporting all catches, not just those made in Falklands waters.

A quantity of fish is currently in storage after it had been seized earlier in the investigation.

The Figaro had some £200,000 market value of non-licensed fish, while the Playa Pesmar Uno and Dos had an estimated £86,000 and £36,000 respectively.

Standing Finance Committee yesterday approved further funding of more than £36,000 to cover some of the storage costs for that fish.

The funding is in addition to nearly £60,000 that has already been found from elsewhere in the Fisheries Department budget.

The case will be back to court on November 19, and the lawyers involved have agreed to co-operate with each other.

Senior Magistrate Clare Faulds said it was a complex case with effects on all of the parties and needed careful management.

Islanders' voices matter FIG launches social media campaign

THE Falkland Islands Government has launched a new social media campaign focussing on putting Islanders' voices at the forefront.

Starting yesterday a series of short films and pictures will appear on the Government digital media channels on Twitter, YouTube and Facebook.

The campaign aims to dispel some of the mis-truths circulated by the Government of Argentina and highlight that the people of the Falkland Islands are the key stakeholders in their future.

A number of Islanders feature in the campaign's short videos and photographs which carry the hashtag #MyVoiceMatters.

Some of the #MyVoiceMatters content is in Spanish, with the hashtags #MiVozCuenta and #MiVozImporta and are aimed at the Spanish-speaking audience throughout the Americas.

Everyone can join in the campaign by retweeting or sharing the images and videos which will appear on FIG's media channels over the coming weeks. Check out <https://www.youtube.com/user/FalklandsGov>; FIG Twitter: @FalklandsGov and the Falkland Islands Government Facebook like and share to add your voice to the campaign and show that as a people we really do matter.

Comment by Acting Editor Sharon Jaffray

MANY will have noticed the Bactec de-miners back at work over the last 10 days or so and will also have felt just a tad sorry for them as they soldiered on through what has to be some of the worst weather September has thrown at us for many a year.

I always feel guilty when I see their bright orange protective-clothed figures spread out on the hillsides as they meticulously prod their way inch by inch clearing the area of the mines laid by invading Argentine forces some 33 years ago.

No matter that they are cheerful when they meet up in a social environment and even joke about the weather. "I wear my wardrobe when it is cold," one Zimbabwean told me earlier this year as the previous phase drew to a close. He also shared his desire to settle in the Islands and his appreciation for the equality within the community he had been afforded during his stay.

My guilt stems from the concept of anyone having to go to work each day weighed down by helmets, masks and vests, not to mention the spinal boards propped against the minefield fence.

These men go about their skilled work not able to make even the slightest slip-up because in the past some workers clad in nothing more protective than a pin-stripe suit and a bowler hat arguably made complete cock-ups of their jobs and failed to read the writing Argentina was painting on the wall.

I can fully understand Patrick Watts' anger (see letters page) that MLAs took the decision to congratulate Jeremy Corbyn on his recent election given his stance on the Falklands in the past. But, I also appreciate the etiquette and the need to acknowledge his opinion and offer to discuss the issues further.

Mr Corbyn may even accept an invitation during the Labour Party Conference in Brighton next week to visit and see for himself how we live... we could perhaps show him how a pin stripe suit stands out against an orange background.

THANKFULLY I am on the home stretch now with the absent editor due to return on Saturday's flight. But after a month clambering around rock faces and getting into scrapes in Brazil it will no doubt take some time to get her to adjust to the real world. While it is nice to have a free rein (or should that be reign) for a few weeks, it will be good to have the crazy lady back... even if it does mean she will crank up the heating and then accuse her office mates of being of a 'certain age' when we dare to complain. Welcome home madam editor.

Building on agriculture links with Uruguay

SENIOR Agricultural Advisor Ian Campbell was one of a delegation of Islanders who attended the Prado Agriculture Expo in Uruguay this month.

Mr Campbell said the reason for attending what he described as "a very interesting show highlighting many aspects of Uruguayan agriculture," was to see what could be of use here in the Falkland Islands.

Animal genetics and genetic technologies are available, as are animal feeds, animal health treatments and pasture seeds etc. In Uruguay they have dual purpose sheep and a strong meat focus in both sheep and beef cattle.

Mr Campbell said it was an excellent place to make contacts for purchasing any of these products, and with the current shipping route it should be easy to arrange delivery.

"Uruguay is potentially one of the cheapest places as far as freight prices in getting particularly bulky goods to the Falkland Islands," he said.

As well as attending the Expo Mr Campbell took advantage of the opportunity to make other relevant contacts.

Uruguay is already a Falklands supply source for fresh fruit and vegetables, eggs and dairy products and Mr Campbell contacted relevant departments to ensure this importation continues without any unfortunate glitches or hold ups.

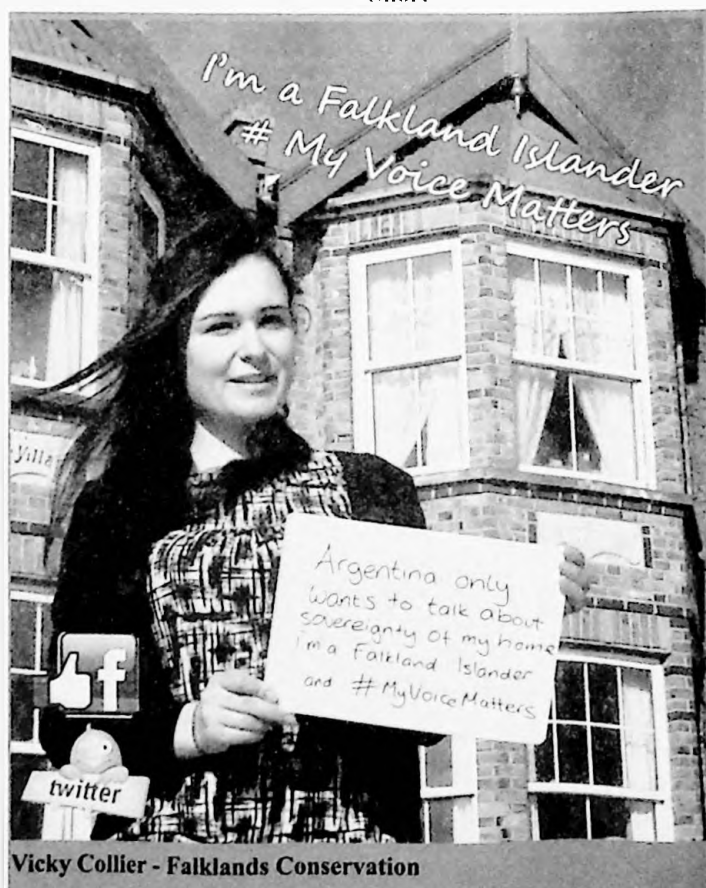

Along with Meat Company Manager John Ferguson and Rural Business Association representative Paul Robertson, he also spent a day touring state of the art wool scour plant, Lanús Trinidad.

He said this was not only interesting, but also very topical on top of the recent wool classing training days held in the Islands by Des Humphreys. "It also meant we were able to drive into the fertile green pastured areas of Uruguay, which I think came as a surprise to us all."

He said Lanús Trinidad had bought Falkland Island wools in the past and was keen to do so again in the future.

"Quality is what they like about our wool and that is why we must never stop working towards maintaining that reputation," he said.

Cause of death unascertained

ON Wednesday morning Her Majesty's Coroner, Clare Faulds, concluded the inquest into the death of Edwin Garcia Valiente with the cause of death unascertained.

A Filipino national, Mr Valiente was a crewman on the jigger An Sheng where he had suddenly collapsed on April 26.

Coroner Clare Faulds read out statements from the master of the An Sheng, from a crew member who had seen him collapse, the doctor who had attended the vessel and from the RFP officer who had identified the body.

Mrs Faulds also read out extracts from a report by the Home Office pathologist who carried out a post mortem examination.

That examination did not find any signs of injury or obvious signs of illness. Toxicology tests were also negative. There was no obvious cause of death but there was also no evidence that the death had been anything other than natural.

Coroner Clare Faulds said that nothing would be gained by further enquiries and that the cause of death would have to remain unascertained. FIRSPN

PS4 theft

MOUNT Pleasant man Daryl John Phillips (24) pleaded guilty to a single charge of theft which took place on August 13.

The case was adjourned until September 30, for the Probation Officer to make an assessment.

The Summary Court heard that Mr Phillips who has been in the Islands for four years had stolen a Sony Playstation 4 from the Rockhopper Facility at MPA and had sold it on to a Stanley resident.

When the buyer became aware that there had been a PS4 stolen, she took it to the Police and it was identified as the property of the Rockhopper Facility.

The buyer was left £250 out of pocket and the equivalent compensation was requested by Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe. He also asked for £250 prosecution costs as Mr Phillips had originally denied the theft.

Licence restored

STANLEY woman Ellen Rose Davis will have her driving licence returned on November 20 after her successful application in the Summary Court on Thursday. Ms Davis was disqualified for drink driving in January 2014.

Case adjourned

STANLEY man Martyn Gilson-Clarke had his case adjourned until November for a pre-sentence report to be prepared after he admitted drink driving and driving without due care and attention in the early hours of August 22.

De-miners working four times faster than 2010

De-miner at work on Sapper Hill

DE-MINING and ground clearance work has got off to a flying start despite the cold and snowy weather of late. Programme Manager Guy Marot confirmed on Thursday.

Phase 4B which involves work on five areas commenced just over ten days ago and minefield number 33 (opposite Pony's Pass) is expected to be completed this week.

Mr Marot said the Bactec team was operating about four times faster than in 2010 when the project started and this was mainly due to techniques having improved as well as the understanding of how the mines have been laid. "The Argentine records have been quite consistent throughout," he said.

Water, jetty, road and school projects progressing well

GIVING an update on a range of projects currently underway, Director of Public Works Colin Summers said all were progressing well.

At the alternative water supply to the west of Two Sisters Mountain, concrete works are now completed at the dam site. However there is still approximately one kilometre of pipe work to complete.

Mr Summers said resources have been diverted from this project to complete other priorities such as the temporary classrooms, Ross Road and Public Jetty. Works would recommence when weather improved and resources become available, he said.

Although weather had recently delayed the placement of concrete on Ross Road, works had continued and it was anticipated that all would still be completed in time for the first large cruise ship on November 3.

Work on the new and old sections of the Public Jetty had taken place in parallel in recent weeks, said Mr Summers, adding that 75 per cent of the timber piles were now installed and one section of the timber deck had been reinstated. The new section is also progressing well with two bays left to install.

It is anticipated that the jetty sections will be completed for the start of the tourist season but the bank seat (concrete section) may not be completed.

"It has been agreed with the Tourist Board that the carpark will be cleared and work suspended for the ship arriving on November 3, but that works can continue on the bank seat after that date," Mr Summers told Penguin News.

Regarding the temporary classrooms within the Stanley House grounds Mr Summers said he was extremely grateful for the efforts of all involved who were working hard to meet the deadline.

"Works will not be completed on the outside play space and this was always the case. However the materials have been ordered and this will be progressed as quickly as possible," he said.

Tourism pre-season meeting

A MEETING to kick-off the tourism season, held at the Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday evening, was well attended by representatives from across the industry. A variety of topics were discussed including improved signage, issues over infrastructure and attractions, the closure of parts of Ross Road on days of large cruise ship visits, "clash days" of cruise visits, work permits for seasonal workers, the importance of the FITB website in promoting all aspects of tourism and the progress of plans on a second flight.

Also mentioned was the new role of Tony Mason, the Director of International Communications, now based in the UK to better enable promotion of the Falkland Islands as a tourist destination to a UK audience.

During October, visits will be made to camp by representatives of the FITB to talk about tourism developments. Training opportunities were also promoted: in conjunction with the Training Centre a "World Host" course on customer service and a new look "Tour Guide" course based around the latest edition of the Tour Guide handbook will be happening next month.

The suggestion that now the status of the FITB has changed to that of a statutory corporation, a Tourism Association should be set up was met with approval.

Speeding and phone fines

TWO road traffic offences were dealt with in the Summary Court on Monday.

Travis Ian McGill was fined £500 after he pleaded guilty by post to driving at 46 mph on Ross Road East.

The offence took place on August 29, less than a month after Mr McGill had passed his driving test.

He was also ordered to pay £85 costs and had his licence endorsed.

Ryan Buckett was fined £120 after he admitted by post that he had been using his mobile phone while driving a Sure vehicle on August 31. He was spotted by an off-duty police officer and later contacted. He was also ordered to pay £85 costs and had his licence endorsed.

Calibration completed

THE calibration flights at St Helena Airport - led by Flight Calibration Services Limited working with TAB Charters were completed on Wednesday. The Beechcraft King Air aircraft was scheduled to depart St Helena for Namibia between 5am and 6am today, ten days after its arrival.

MLA Gavin Short shares a glimpse into his working week

I spent the last fortnight in South America, mainly in Uruguay at the Expo Prado with the Falklands delegation. I took the decision to arrive at the show before the main Falklands delegation so that we could have a presence there before the main group arrived on Sunday. I have to confess that my first day was rather slow and I thought it was going to be a boring week, but I was quickly disabused of this idea on Friday when I staggered home at 9pm wondering what had hit me. I was overjoyed that John Ferguson's flight had arrived Friday afternoon as I had spent part of the day being closely questioned about breeds of horses, sheep and cows here in the Falklands. The Falklands team were John Ferguson, Eugene and Jill from SAAS, Paul Robertson representing the RBA and Ian Campbell from the Ag Dept plus Barry Elsby and Jessica Campos. The Falklands stand attracted a large amount of interest especially after the Argentines tried to have us evicted and someone put online a story that we had been closed down. This was then picked up by the Uruguayan press who took a great interest in us and we got some unexpected but splendid free publicity, which only added to the interest and numbers of people coming to talk to us. Jessica gave interviews to various radio and newspaper outlets and Paul was still giving interviews on our last day. 407,000 people visited the show and 75,000 of those came through the British pavilion.

Even from the first day we were popular, on the opening day of the Prado, before I arrived, the British Embassy put our material out on our stand and during the morning a lady was observed to enter, sweep everything off the table into a bag and leg it. We either had a fanatical collector of everything "Falklands" or a visit from the "opposition".

My other activities in South America included meetings with politicians, talking to two road building companies in Punta Arenas and perusing workers camps in Punta Arenas and Santiago plus taking a good look at 40 foot containers that have been adapted as living accommodation and also a possible tie in with a technical college in Punta who produce mechanics, electricians etc with the view of some of their students visiting the Falklands during the summer months so that they can gain practical experience.

Taking the peace

Argentina sin-binned for using sport and religion as political tools

RUGBY Sin Fronteras (RSF) this week took its campaign for "peace" to Britain – via rugby between British and Argentine veterans of the 1982 war.

A group of some 54 Argentines travelled to the UK, of whom 10 were veterans; others were family and supporters and outnumbered British attendees by six to one.

Falklands supporter Peter Pepper went along to watch the match and was astonished by the overload of emotional hype. It was filmed by Argentine TV and other foreign media but there was no British TV or other media present.

RSF is an Argentine group that organises rugby matches between opposing factions around the World in search of "peace" through rugby. But it has concentrated on the Falklands, making itself thoroughly unwelcome in the Islands.

They initially said they were introducing rugby to the Falklands, where it claimed rugby had not been played before. In fact, rugby had been played in the Falklands before, especially by the Royal Marine detachments pre-1982 and was given up mainly because the old rugby pitch is still in an Argentine minefield.

By the time of its last visit, RSF had made itself so unpopular in the Falklands that it had to agree not to return without a specific invitation.

Another Argentine tactic has been to involve the Pope. As an Argentine cardinal he was a strong supporter of the Argentine veterans and claim, but he should be neutral now.

"Despite this, and typically, the RSF team went through Rome on its way to Britain and got the Pope's blessing on their activities," said Mr Pepper.

"Peace does sound like a Christian virtue, but when calls for it come from the side that is causing all the trouble, it's not. And "peace" as Argentines use the word is "peace" on their terms – by political concession from Britain," he added.

The match was held on Monday, (September 21), which is International Peace Day. It coincided with increased interest in rugby in Britain because of the Rugby World Cup. It was held at Esher Rugby Club in Surrey.

The two teams were each a mixture of veterans from both sides supplemented by others, so there was no specifically British or Argentine team.

"Sadly, the match was overshadowed by endless hype about

"peace" from RSF.

"And after the game there was even a "Push for Peace" – a rugby scrum movement beneath a banner reading "I Declare Peace Unto You."

Most of the British veterans were former Royal Marines, but other services were represented too. They were led by David Beattie. It was Mr Pepper's view that he and his team meant well, but knew little about the difficult current political climate, or RSF's tactics. "As Britons, they took the view that peace had been established in 1982. They didn't understand what "peace" means in Argentina – and didn't know about RSF's bad reputation in the Falklands. They saw it simply as a non-political reunion of former enemies."

But their action led to worries amongst Falkland Islanders and their supporters. Patrick Watts, former Chairman of the Overseas Games Association (FIOGA) commented: "Peace was restored in 1982. It's quite sad that British veterans should have unwittingly, been drawn into an Argentine propaganda exercise."

Current FIOGA Chairman Mike Summers said: "RSF used their previous visit to the Falkland Islands for overtly political purposes. That, together with unauthorised approaches to children, made them unwelcome in the Islands."

"We are not at all opposed to reconciliation between former combatants, but hope that veterans will be cautious about being drawn in to the Argentine narrative on negotiations about sovereignty of the Falkland Islands. Falkland Islanders have made it clear that we value our relationship with the UK. There are no negotiations to be had on sovereignty, though we remain open to discussions on other issues of mutual interest."

Mr Pepper said that none of the Argentines could give a clear idea of what they meant by "peace". "Just calling for this is like gesture politics. It's what follows that is important," he said.

Juan Bautista Segonds, head of RSF, said it meant harmony and respect for others. But there can be little doubt that they have a political agenda.

Mr Pepper concluded, "What RSF have really achieved is the opposite of what it pretends. It has taught Islanders and their supporters that sport with Argentina cannot be trusted. Like every other type of contact with Argentina it is used politically – and is dangerous."

RSF filmed the match to complete its video record: The Other Path to the Islands.

The title speaks for itself.

Argos and Noble complete farm out

ARGOS Resources Limited has confirmed the completion by its wholly owned subsidiary, Argos Exploration Limited of a farm out agreement with Noble Energy Falklands Limited and Edison International S.p.A in respect of its Licence PL001.

The Company announced the farm out in April this year, noting that completion was subject to shareholder, government, regulatory and partner approvals. All required approvals have since been received allowing the transaction to complete.

The agreement will allow exploration drilling on the license, which covers an area of approximately 1,126 sq km in the North Falkland basin, to proceed as part of the current 2015 drilling program.

Ian Thomson, chairman of Argos, said, "We are grateful to all those who have helped secure the various approvals required to bring this transaction to its successful completion. The innovative nature of the farm-out terms means that there is no material shareholder dilution or further material shareholder funding required by the company for any future investments in the license. We now look forward to the drilling of the exploration well on Rhea, which we expect to commence in the fourth quarter of this year. We believe that success at Rhea will de-risk other prospects in the license".

Gun club meets Police Chief

CHIEF of Police, Superintendent Len McGill, has met with the committee of the recently formed Falklands Firearms Association.

He said the meeting was "most convivial with excellent open discussion".

Items discussed related to a 2009 Executive Council Paper, records, applications, prohibited weapons, the recent amnesty and audit of Firearms Licence holders and other smaller matters brought to the discussion by committee members.

Supt McGill said the outcomes of the meeting for him were first and foremost, "direct involvement in a local interest group, sharing of concerns and positive suggestions, the provision of information to allay concerns and misconceptions and a willingness to work together, to provide guidance to all firearms licence holders and those applying for a licence, on processes, firearms law and their responsibilities within it." He thanked the committee for the invitation and meeting and for future involvement with the Falkland Firearms Association and its members.

BFBS Big Salute - raising funds for military charities

FIVE brilliant charities, more than 150 items up for grabs and ten hours of live on-air coverage; it's time for the 2015 BFBS Big Salute auction!

This year's items go online today (Friday September 25) at www.bigsalute.com/auction and on eBay. There are seven days to place bids, until all auction lots close live on air on BFBS Radio worldwide on Friday October 2.

All proceeds go to the tri-service charities supported by the BFBS Big Salute: Blesma, The Limbless Veterans, Blind Veterans UK, Combat Stress, FAB (Families' Activity Breaks) and Veterans Aid.

"Petrol heads are spoilt for choice, as passes to Brands Hatch, a Land Rover Experience, a tour of the Aston Martin Factory, and a ride in an Ariel Atom are amongst the items on offer," said Ernie Rowe, Head of BFBS Radio UK.

"If sport is your passion, there's a four-ball voucher for The Royal Birkdale Golf Club, tickets and tours of Lord's, plus loads of signed shirts, balls and memorabilia from sporting icons."

"This year there are special items from the stage, screen, and music worlds. There's a private cinema showing for 28 people, a meet and greet with Status Quo, a tour of Pinewood Studios, passes to watch the filming of Celebrity Juice, or tickets to see West End shows and go backstage to meet the stars. Signed DVDs, CDs, and two unique autographed guitars are also in the mix.

For more details about the BFBS Big Salute, and to see 'selfie' films by beneficiaries from the five charities, to donate cash or buy a wristband, go online to www.bigsalute.com.

Retirement Pension amnesty

THE Falkland Islands Government has agreed an amnesty period on outstanding contributions towards individual's Retirement Pension.

In normal circumstance contributions which are in excess of a year overdue have a 5% pa interest charge added to them.

For some individuals who have not made contributions for a significant amount of time the cost to fill their gaps will be large.

In order to help make sure that as many people have as many contributions as possible, and can therefore receive a larger pension at retirement, no interest will be charged if individuals commit to a payment plan during 2016. If persons contact the pensions office now they will still uphold the interest free contributions.

People can contact the pensions office and they will work with members of the public to create suitable and realistic payment plans in order for people to make payment for the overdue contributions. As long as individuals follow the payment plan they can make contributions at the original contribution rate for that year.

Correction to FC art exhibition article

THE second paragraph on page 10 in the Conservation art exhibition should read:

Our apologies for the extra words which have appeared in the text.

1. What is your most prized possession? A book I doodle in. A tad sad that.

3. If you had a motto, what would it be? Love the "Be stronger than your excuses" poster at Hillside Gym. Cliche but a great mantra!

4. What is your happiest moment? I am happiest when surrounded by awesome views and good people. I love adventure and a sense of freedom.

17. What is your nickname and why? I rather enjoy "H-bomb", but "bruja" (witch) is more common these days thanks to the poor weather and accidents / breakages associated with my presence offshore.

11. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be? I'm itching to travel all over but I would love to see the Great Barrier Reef. I quite fancy New Zealand's fjords too.

13. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it? "Free" by Emile Sande. This song embodies the whole chasing freedom thing for me but I never know whether to feel happy or sad when it comes on.

15. What's the best book you have read recently? I've recently re-discovered Douglas Adams. The man is a true literary genius and no other author makes me actually laugh out loud.

19. Who would play you in a film about your life? I'd love to say Sandra Bullock. The woman has an amazing figure and she's inspirational. I'd also love to imagine Jennifer Lawrence solely because should I ever win an Oscar, I'd also most likely fall over my dress.

2. If you could change something about yourself what would it be? Lots, but I feel a more productive way of thinking of it is "What would you like to improve?" There's always room for improvement.

FIG should not congratulate Labour Leader

I WAS shocked and disappointed when I saw the headline in last week's PN which read: 'FIG congratulate new Labour man Jeremy Corbyn'.

Apart from his well-known policy of fraternising with the 'enemies' of Britain, Corbyn has long adopted a pro-Argentine stance with respect to the sovereignty of the Falklands, and this began in 1982 when he was an outspoken opponent of the British Government's recovery of the Islands from illegal Argentine occupation. He described the dispatch of the Task Force as 'a Tory plot to keep their money-making friends in business'.

He had also frequently, against the wishes of the Falklands population, called on various British Governments to negotiate with Argentina over the sovereignty of the Islands.

As recently as March 2013 when we held our internationally recognised Referendum, Corbyn was the only British MP to attend a so-called Pro-Dialogue Conference in London. But this was no more than a propaganda exercise organised by the Argentine Embassy to deflect the impact of the overwhelming vote of 99.8% by the population to retain our British sovereignty.

ence in London in 2013 Corbyn reportedly hugged and kissed his friend, Argentine Ambassador Alicia Castro, as she delivered her usual tirade of incorrect historical details and aggressive rhetoric against the British Government's commitment to non-negotiation over the Islands.

Moments after his election as the new leader of the Labour Party was announced, President Cristina Kirchner spoke of Jeremy Corbyn as a great friend and as 'sharing Argentina's demands for political sovereignty'. The Argentine Ambassador in London Alicia Castro worryingly referred to the new Labour Leader as being 'one of us'!

Corbyn has frequently advocated 'shared sovereignty' and 'joint administration' (with Argentina) of the Falklands and I find it particularly strange that this man who purports to be a strong supporter of human rights appears steadfastly to ignore the desire and rights of the Falkland Islands population who wish to remain British.

I have, since MLAs sent Corbyn their message, had several calls from concerned members of pro-Falklands groups in England who work hard on our behalf.

One person said that he was 'stunned and dismayed' by the message and that he thought that the 'congratulations' could easily be misconstrued by Corbyn as being a message of support, from the Falklands Government, for his 'shared sovereignty' proposals.

I feel that Gilbert House has been misled and ill-advised on this occasion and as opposed to sending their congratulations to this much despised man it would have been more appropriate to have maintained a policy of 'stony silence'.

Patrick J. Watts MBE

Assembly Members chose not to respond directly to Mr Watt's comments, but provided a copy of the letter sent to Mr Corbyn which was signed by MLA Mike Summers on behalf of the Assembly. See below.

Dear Mr Corbyn,

We write to congratulate you on your election as Leader of the Labour Party.

The Falkland Islands people and Government have been grateful for the cross-party public and political support that we have received throughout the UK. Many members of your party have visited the Falkland Islands, or met with our representatives, to fully understand the issues we face, and to see for themselves the growth and development of the Islands. Mr Derek Twigg MP is the current Chair of the Falkland Islands APPG and Mr Chris Bryant MP was most supportive as an FCO Minister in the last Labour Government. We hope that this close working relationship shall continue and deepen under your leadership of the Party.

As you will be aware, the Islands right to self-determination is enshrined within the Constitution HMG agreed in 2009. This fundamental human right was exercised in 2013 when we held a referendum on our political future, with 92% turnout and 99.8% of voters wishing to remain an Overseas Territory of the UK. This position ensures continuity of the close cultural, political and economic ties we hold with the people of the UK.

It did not appear that the Overseas Territories were widely mentioned during the leadership campaign, however some of the press reported on statements you have made about the Falkland Islands in the past. In due course, we would welcome the chance to discuss these with you in more depth.

We look forward to meeting you and members of your Shadow team at the upcoming Party Conference in Brighton: this year will mark the twenty-eighth year of the Falkland Islands Government taking a stand at Conference.

Our Representative in London regularly briefs UK MPs on matters relating to the Falkland Islands, and we always stand ready to meet with you.

We wish you all the best in your new role.

Both pilots merit our admiration and gratitude

I READ with interest and some sadness Lyle Craigie-Halkett's letter and the accompanying article about his uncle, the RAF bomber pilot Lionel Craigie-Halkett. This brave man, who died on one of the earliest bombing missions over German occupied Europe, is most certainly a heroic Falkland Islander.

Lyle felt that I had failed to mention his uncle in the two pieces I wrote in my Bound Ungagged column about the Battle of Britain. I did indeed concentrate on the story of Eric Turner, whom I described as the only known Islander to fight with the RAF in the Battle of Britain (those last five words being important in this context). Perhaps this is a matter of interpretation, but I have always believed that the Battle of Britain, which ran through the summer and into the autumn of 1940, was the RAF's fraught but ultimately successful fighter aircraft operation to stop the Germans gaining air supremacy over Britain, which would have led to invasion.

The no less heroic RAF bombing campaign is generally thought to have begun after the Battle of Britain. But, as Lyle explained, his uncle died taking part in a bombing raid in the summer of 1940, while the fighters were still engaged in the Battle of Britain. Real history rarely conforms to our attempts to simplify.

Perhaps I made the wrong judgement call, but I was writing about the 75th Anniversary of the Battle of Britain, and Flt Lt Donald Turner, was - as far as I know - the only Falklands-born fighter pilot directly opposing the German bombers and their escorts.

But these are technicalities. We now know the stories of two inspirational airmen. They flew very different aircraft on very different missions and, arguably perhaps, in different battles. But both merit our admiration and gratitude.

A DREAM for four and half years is realised for Uruguayan businessman, Gustavo Oneto, when the inaugural flight of his Air Atlantic Uruguay service, touches down at MPA. The aircraft, a specially adapted Hercules C160 transport, on charter from the Uruguayan Air Force, carries 24 passengers who are accommodated in regular airline seats. During what is described as a comfortable, if noisy flight, they enjoy "a very good breakfast." It is hoped that a weekly service will commence with fares expected to be $700 US return.

The American Government offers to supervise a mine clearance operation in the Falklands. Governor, David Tatham, says the Americans had suggested a feasibility study into clearing minefields which should be undertaken by a US contractor.

The Argentines hope that the Labour Party under new management will be positive about their policy of trying to establish dialogue with the Falklands. However, these hopes are dashed by comments made by Labour politician, Michael O'Brien, who had recently visited the Islands. "I do not think that there's any appreciable difference between the policy now being conducted by the Conservative government and that which would be conducted by a Labour government as far as the Falklands are concerned."

BAS are also ready to begin a busy season with RRS James Clark Ross bound for the Falklands, travelling via Montevideo. The RRS Bransfield is due in Stanley later in the year while the BAS air unit Twin-Otters and the Dash-7 are also expected in the Islands.

Stanley triumphs in a closely contested squash tournament against the Dumbarton Castle and Colin Smith takes the title from Gary Hewitt in the Victory Bar Individual Darts Tournament.

onstrated by manager, Brian Corner, and visitors are given a guided tour all the way from holding pens, up to the sheep, pig and cattle lines to the gigantic freezers at the end. The tour also includes the tasting of frozen "mutton chips" which receive mixed responses from members of the community.

Bad weather causes a delay of three weeks to progress on the construction of the Infant and Junior School. Councillor Cheek advises that the project is now due for completion at the end of January 2002.

Councillor Cheek is also preparing for attending the Party Conferences. She comments "I hope that people don't regard that time as wasted. Admittedly we can only talk to hundreds of the thousands who pass by the stands but surely, by drip feeding accurate information and current views of Falkland Islanders, we can make sure that government and opposition are better informed."

THE Falklands' carbon footprint is shrinking as fuel consumption at the Stanley power station has been reduced by two thirds over the previous year. Environmental Planning Officer, Helen Otley, says it is quite probable that the Falklands are the only UK entity to demonstrate a significant drop in fossil fuel usage.

However the news is not all good as the increases in some parts of the world will still impact on the Islands in relation to climate change. The State of the Environment Report indicates that there is unlikely to be any climate warming in the Falklands, indeed scientists suggest that the initial strong melting of Antarctic ice will result in cooler water and air temperatures.

The "Yomp for Life" team make it back home two hours early to a fantastic welcome at the Liberation Monument. Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

HOW silly of me to assume spring was on the way. What a suck-in the last two weeks have been! I don't think a day has passed without a spot of snow or sleet on the ground.

I've been delighted to see that most of the rosemary and lavender plants have sailed through the winter unscathed, at least those that were in raised beds and planters anyway. It does mean they should put quite a bit of growth on this year and be sizeable plants before the next winter hits them.

The last of the potatoes to come up a couple of weeks ago were making pretty good, sturdy shoots, which just goes to show that all potatoes grow quite happily without any chitting.

I failed, once again, to clean the ground and plant potatoes in the autumn. I'm sure it would be a great success and a wonderful time saver in the spring, when everything else is demanding immediate attention. Perhaps this coming season?

Meanwhile, the early and second early potatoes in the tunnels were starting to show their noses, so have covered those over with a bit more compost for their own safety. Early potatoes are pretty great things to grow if you don't have a lot of space in your garden, especially under cover, as you can start them early in the season, dig them out and plant another crop to harvest in the late autumn. They will even grow quite happily in a large container.

Main crop potatoes, on the other hand, are really only worthwhile if you have quite a lot of space, for they occupy a fair amount of ground for a long time and, in a bad year, might not repay your time and space very well at all.

Bill had been hankering after a batten fence, to replace the existing 'ranch' type one, for a few years now. The matter became urgent when we noticed parts of the old fence weaving rather badly in the winds last year and it is now taking shape rather nicely.

It was a good time to cut down all shrubs, mainly Escallonias and Fuchsias, which had become rather large and straggly over the last few years and eventually, far too hard to get at too. It has left the front of the garden looking a little bare but some food and a bit of warmth should get the shrubs going nicely again, meanwhile, the weeds are very much on show.

The styrofoam boxes in the tunnel are looking quite healthy. The brassicas and various salad plants are starting to make growth at last as the days grow longer. The carrots which are growing in bottomless boxes on top of the borders in the tunnel, (to give better drainage) are growing strongly as are, surprisingly, the parsnips.

Normally I would buy fresh seeds of those every year for they do not keep well, but because I planted them early with the view that I could plant more later if they failed, I used last year's seed and they have done very well.

It is far too early to start putting seeds outside but, inside it's a different story, and every space is becoming occupied as guttering and trays get filled with peas and other goodies such as leeks and onion seeds to get ahead for the coming season. And within the borders, empty areas have got rows of early turnips in, the white ones are the earliest but I prefer the golden ones for flavour.

All over-wintered plants have been sitting on mesh suspended well above the soil to keep all beasties away, and just to make sure, they too have had ant powder liberally sprinkled on them. At least suspended in this way they are reasonably safe from slugs and earwigs, leather jackets have flying parents though, and so might well be hatching amongst the plants.

Next pleasant day I hope to get outside and clean around and feed the fruit trees, a large 'snack' of fish blood and bone or Growmore will set them up nicely for the year ahead. The fruit shrubs also need food, however they will have to wait until the soil around them is a little drier, making it more comfortable to crawl amongst them.

The tomato seedlings on the windowsills are looking all right but they have to be turned every day to keep them straight. Last year I covered the inside of a shallow box with foil and then placed the seed pots in it. This reflected light all around them, but so far I have been too idle to do the same this year. A few mirror tiles placed around the seed trays would be even better.

Conservation fund raising artwork goes on display at the Museum

FALKLANDS Conservation and the Falkland Islands Museum and National Trust welcomed guests to the opening evening of the Charity Ball Exhibition 2015 which leads up to the auction of artwork at the Falklands Conservation's ball, held tomorrow night.

Chief Executive Officer of Falklands Conservation, Ester Bertram, dressed according to advice given by thanked organiser Nadia Smith, exhibitors, guests, sponsors Consolidated Fisheries Ltd and the Museum and National Trust for hosting the event, at which the first sealed bids for auction items were placed.

She encouraged visitors to take a good look at the pieces on offer which include paintings in a variety of media, lino prints by students of the Falkland Islands Community School, a thrush papercut, a polar memorial photograph, an evening bag incorporating a stunning pale maidens motif, a gold King Penguin charm necklace and a wine rack fashioned from a pallet.

Other auction items are a fantastic cruise on any 10-night voyage with "Ocean Expeditions" with destinations including South Georgia and the Antarctic Peninsula, dinner for 12 at Government House and a snorkelling trip with dolphins, courtesy of the Shallow Marine Surveys Group.

Sealed bids close at 4.30pm today (Friday) so you may still have chance to snap up an item of Falklands art."

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falkland and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falkland. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falkland. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falkland and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falkland, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800, Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF. In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system.

Seabed bryozoans with grow check lines

BAS research discovers seabed-life captures carbon as Antarctic sea ice continues to melt

COLONIES of tiny filter-feeding Antarctic marine creatures (bryozoans), that appear to be thriving in response to a reduction in sea-ice cover, are playing an important role in carbon draw-down according to new research published on Monday in the Cell Press journal Current Biology.

A British Antarctic Survey (BAS) investigation into biological change on sea beds of six continental shelf areas around Antarctica analysed bryozoan skeletons that were collected during ship-borne research cruises.

Data from more than 20 years included photographic studies that helped calculate how abundant they are. The most recent research cruises on board the RRS

James Clark Ross used a custom built high-resolution camera lander.

Less sea-ice stimulates more growth in the algae that feeds the bryozoans, providing longer meal times. The data revealed that the annual production of carbon in the bodies of these bryozoans has increased due to a combination of the animals growing more, living for longer and being more abundant. According to author Dr David Barnes from BAS these animals now take up 75,000 tonnes of carbon more than 20 years ago.

Dr Barnes said the results from this study were an important step towards improving understanding of the impact of environmental change in Antarctica. "It is well-known that the Southern Ocean is an important 'sink' for atmospheric carbon dioxide, but it was not realised that the seabed played such an important and increasing part."

The changes to marine life in Antarctica's continental shelf areas may help evaluate life's role in carbon draw-down, he said, adding that if the increased carbon capture applied to other seabed life then millions of tonnes of carbon from the atmosphere may be being transported to polar sea beds. "This is equivalent to tens of thousands of hectares of tropical rainforest."

An unexpected find was that the South Orkney Islands (the world's first High Seas Marine Protected Area) was identified as a place where the bryozoans were thriving most. A new international, BAS-led scientific cruise to the South Orkney Islands MPA in early 2016, should give researchers a close up look at why that particular location is so important.

Dr Barnes concluded: "The rain forests on land you can see are important with respect to the carbon cycle and climate change, but two-thirds of our planet is ocean, and below it the life you can't see is also very important in climate responses."

The research was funded by the Natural Environment Research Council (NERC), the Darwin Initiative (DEFRA) and the Pew Charitable Trusts.

Environmental Planning Department Falkland Islands Government

Extension of time to:

Building Regulations Statutory Consultation
The Building Regulations 1999, (S.R & O. No. 26 of 1999);
as amended 2003.

17th July – 31st October 2015

Purpose of consultation: We are reviewing the Falkland Islands Building Regulations which came into force in Feb 2000, and has stayed in its original format until the present. Inevitably opinions, ideas, materials and construction methods evolve and will change over time. To reflect this, it is good practice to review Building Regulations on a regular basis and make changes where deemed necessary.

The purpose of this consultation is to receive feedback from the Building Industry and the public in general. The areas for discussion included in this consultation are the main areas of revision proposed for the forthcoming revision of the Building Regulations 1999. There are other revision proposals but they are of a more minor nature and do not represent a significant shift in emphasis from the original Regulations. It is anticipated that it should take no more than half an hour to read and comment on the proposals. These revisions have been approved by the Executive Council for Public consultation. At this stage they represent draft proposals and are not a statement of FIG policy.

How to View Documents: The main consultation documents (including a response form) can be viewed in hard copy during normal opening hours at the Environmental Planning office (St Mary's Walk Stanley), Post Office, Public Library and the FIGAS terminal. They can also be viewed on-line at www.fig.gov.fk/cpd

The supporting evidence base documents can be viewed in the Environmental Planning Office (EPD) and on the above website.

How to comment: Comments must be made in writing and received by the 31st October 2015 (a response form is available from the EPD office or on-line). They can be submitted by the means set out below:

- Post: Environmental Planning department, St Mary's Walk, Stanley
- E-Mail: buildingadvisor.planning@taxation.gov.fk

Public meetings: Although comments must be made in writing, we will be holding a series of meeting to set out the proposals and to answer any points of clarification regarding the content or process. Details of these will be advertised in due course.

Thank you in anticipation
 Andrew Broughton
 FIG Building Advisor

Changes to Airbridge flights

THE Ministry of Defence has notified the Government of a number of unavoidable cancellations that will affect travel on the Airbridge over Christmas and New Year.

The MoD has advised that these changes are necessary to cover Christmas and New Year operational changes and mandatory Civil Aviation Register maintenance checks.

Flights during the following periods will be affected: December 23, 26 and 30; January 2 and 23.

"The Airbridge is a vital link for the community" said Director of Central Services, Matt Bassford.

"It is unfortunate that these cancellations fall over a time when there is significant demand for flights from students, families and tourism. However, there will be additional seats available on flights throughout this period and we are co-ordinating with the Falkland Islands Government Office in London and the MoD to try and minimise the impact on travellers."

Weddell's back in hands of Islanders

FALKLANDS marine services sector company Byron has purchased Weddell Island from its previous owners. A spokesperson for the new owners confirmed: "This transaction has enabled Byron to take a rare opportunity to return Weddell Island back into Falkland Islands ownership." Summer tourist season arrangements will be managed by Martin and Jane Beaton. "Byron continues to evaluate options on how best to manage the island for the longer-term," said the spokesperson.

CK keeps mum but PM speaks up for Falklands

WHILE Argentine President Cristina Kirchner was unusually quiet on the subject of the Falkland Islands at the United Nations summit in New York this week, UK Prime Minister David Cameron on a visit to Jamaica urged Caribbean countries to stand up for the rights of self-determination of small islands.

Addressing the Kingston parliament at the end of a short visit, Mr Cameron hailed the "shared values" of the UK and Caribbean nations and the importance of "standing up for the rights of small islands, including the Falklands, to enjoy the self-determination that has been so hard won in the Caribbean."

Mr Cameron made the comments after meeting world leaders at the annual UN summit in New York. At the talks, Venezuelan President Nicholas Maduro repeated a call for dialogue between the UK and Argentina over the Falklands.

Assembly Member Mike Summers told Penguin News it was to be hoped that Mrs Kirchner's decision to leave out any mention of the Falkland Islands from her UN speech would, "leave the way open for her successor to have a more open and constructive approach to relations with the UK and the Falkland Islands."

It was the first time in her eight appearances at the meeting of world leaders she omitted the subject entirely and it was also her final address as president as Argentina prepares for an election later this month.

MLA Summers said the Government was grateful to the Prime Minister for reminding the Caribbean countries and territories that the right to self-determination had played an important role in the development of all our countries. He added: "Respect and mutual support is an important element of the Commonwealth Charter, and should not be sacrificed for political expediency."

He said it was important to correct the false version of Falklands history portrayed by Argentina, adding, "but the real strength of our argument continues to lie in the fundamental right to self-determination set down in the UN Charter, and supported by many of our friends and allies."

Meanwhile, he said the 'I'm a Falkland Islander #MyVoiceMatters' social media campaign launched by the Government last week had brought to the attention of a wider audience the fundamental untruths behind the Argentine sovereignty claim, and the misleading call for dialogue hiding a wish to colonise the Falkland Islands. FIG's Twitter page has gained another 500+ followers since the campaign began. The Falklands 'Facts and Fiction' booklet has enjoyed wide circulation in New York enabling interested parties to take a fresh look at the realities, said MLA Summers.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

I HAVE to 'fess up, that this time just over a month ago my passion for the Falkland Islands had reached an all time low. Weeks of dreadfully cold, snowy, wet and windy weather had finally taken its toll on my relationship with this land - and that from someone who regularly quotes the old Scandinavian saying, 'there's no such thing as bad weather just bad clothing'.

(When my car was stolen and crashed some time ago, I was later more upset to discover my Helly Hansen padded and waterproof boiler suit was missing from it than I was about my poor crunched little jeep.)

But going back to my mightily diminished ardour for these isles of the sea, it was true to say our love affair had weakened, it had shrivelled, slackened and subsided. I'd go so far as to say we were barely on speaking terms. All of those quirky little habits that had so entranced me in the early years were fair setting my teeth on edge. So when I had the chance to escape momentarily I did so with a degree of enthusiasm that was damn near indecent. I danced away with nary a glance over my shoulder, my mind wide opened to the delights of exotic Brazil and all of the fabulous adventures awaiting me.

And so they did await me, and marvellous they were - well most of them, and those that were perhaps a little too exciting (a minor car accident or two) were still 'experiences'.

In amongst hot weather, exciting rock climbs, plentiful fresh fruit, caiprinhas and beaches were a few moments, however, that caused me to hark back to reliable old home.

A sad faced woman and her baby begging in Belo Horizonte, desperately dilapidated but still inhabited housing on the outskirts of Sao Paulo, and a time I felt personally vulnerable having taken a wrong turning in a city. Each of those moments and others, were enough of a reminder that life in the Falklands wasn't just a chilly old ball and chain, but a place that offers security, safety and freedom; something not always readily available to others around the world.

FORMER Governor Nigel Haywood made the comment on page 5 that, "so many visiting scientists have completed work on the Falklands, and then simply vanished, taking valuable data sets with them. This is something that must change." The point sparked a memory that something was actually being done about this; as such I contacted Dr Paul Brickle at the South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute who assured me that it is changing and there is a system in place.

In memory: Friend of the Falklands Colin Wright

It is with regret that we report the death of Colin Wright, Honorary Secretary of the Falkland Islands Association (FIA), on September 30, 2015. He will be sorely missed by his many colleagues and friends.

Colin was a man of many interests and, on his retirement after 31 years of service in the West Mercia Constabulary, he gave his time and energy to various voluntary organisations.

He had a love of poetry and was a member for many years of the Betjeman Society, becoming its secretary in 2005 until 2013. The highlight of his involvement was probably the unveiling in 2007 of the now much-loved statue of Sir John Betjeman in St Pancras station, which Betjeman had helped to save from demolition and redevelopment.

Possibly inspired by Betjeman's love of England's parish churches, Colin became involved in 'Caring for God's Acre', which started in 1997 as a pilot scheme helping to protect rural churchyards in the Shropshire hills.

Colin first became interested in the Falkland Islands through his study of the early Antarctic explorers and he followed the 1982 conflict closely. He became more deeply involved when he visited the Islands in 1996 and 1998 on two specially organised photographic trips to study the Islands' wildlife. This prompted him to join Falklands Conservation and the FIA. When Sir Rex Hunt stood down as FIA chairman at the December 2004 AGM, Colin offered to serve as FIA Membership Secretary but the incoming chairman, David Tatham, asked him to take on the role of Honorary Secretary instead, which he duly accepted. He subsequently took on the role of Membership Secretary when the incumbent, Ted Clapp, retired from the post in late 2007.

As such, Colin was crucial to the success of the Association in its work to support the principle of self-determination for the Islanders. He organised and recorded committee meetings with quiet efficiency and offered his own thoughtful suggestions on the way forward for the Association. He inaugurated a series of articles 'From the Secretary's Desk' in the FIA Newsletter and helped to modernise the FIA website, including introducing a Twitter feed. He also organised a series of events for Association members, such as a dinner on board the SS Great Britain and visits to the National Maritime Museum, RHS Wisley, and the botanical gardens at Kew. Every December, he organised the Battle Day service at the Cenotaph in Whitehall and in December 2014 managed the centenary commemoration of the WWI naval battles of Cornel and the Falkland Islands in St. Martin-in-the-Fields, which was a great success.

Other highlights of his term of office included the attendance of Baroness Thatcher at the Battle Day ceremony in 2007 and the memorial service at St. Clement Danes for Sir Rex Hunt in 2012. The award of the Queen's Certificate and Badge of Honour, announced on Falkland Day on 14 August 2015, was a public acknowledgement of his quiet, unassuming service over 10 years for the benefit of the people of the Falkland Islands.

Colin, born in 1938 in Enfield, Middlesex, leaves a wife (Pat) and daughter (Wendy), who can undoubtedly be proud of his many achievements. Colin bore his illness with indefatigable good humour and perseverance. He organised a pilgrimage trip with friends to walk part of the Camino de Compostela de Santiago during a respite from the effects of his cancer but, even though he had reluctantly to pull out because of his illness, he still travelled to Spain with them to see them off from Santiago and walked the last stage of 12 kilometres on his own to say a few prayers in the Cathedral.

Colin Wright gave much to this world. We mourn his passing and will remember him with deep fondness, respect and admiration. The Bible (Matthew 25:21) says it all: 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant'.

John Chester

MAJOR General John Chester, who has died aged 71, took a leading role in the liberation of the Falklands in 1982.

In early 1982 John Chester was the newly appointed brigade major at Headquarters, 3rd Commando Brigade, the brigade's principal staff officer, and right-hand man and alter ego to its resolute commander, Brigadier (as he then was) Julian Thompson.

He was awarded an OBE for his role in the Falklands War.

His wife survives him with their two sons; one who joined the Paras and the other the Fleet Air Arm.

Court news

TYLER James Benjamin (19) was sentenced to 12 weeks in a young offenders institution and banned from driving for two years in the Summary Court on Tuesday.

Mr Benjamin had admitted a total of seven road traffic offences which related to two separate incidents.

The first was on August 15, when he drove from the Globe and along Davis Street narrowly missing a cyclist and then swerved across the road several times before ending up in the ditch near the ByPass junction near Stanley Services.

A road side breath test gave a reading of 106 mg per 100 ml of breath (35 mg is the legal limit) and police officers who had witnessed the erratic driving had to assist Mr Benjamin from the vehicle. He said he had no idea of how he had got in the ditch or of what route he had taken from the Globe.

It was later discovered that he did not have insurance to drive and had not registered his Mitsubishi vehicle F151E.

Two weeks later on August 29 and while still on Police bail, Mr Benjamin was again apprehended by the Police near Michele's Café and failed a roadside breath test. A Camic reading recorded a lower reading of 47 mg of alcohol per 100 ml of breath. On this occasion he had four passengers in the vehicle. He still did not have any insurance to drive.

Justice of the Peace Anton Livermore said the offences were so serious a custodial sentence was justified.

For driving while unfit and reckless driving 12 week sentences were ordered to run concurrently. For the two counts of no insurance five day and two week sentences were handed down.

Mr Livermore said for the charges of failing to wear a seat-belt and register the vehicle the court would have looked to a financial penalty however this was not considered appropriate.

Referring to the second offence Mr Livermore said there would be a 12 week sentence for drink driving and two weeks for the second offence of no insurance, all to run concurrently. He said Mr Benjamin had shown a blatant disregard for the law of the Falklands and ordered £150 prosecution costs be paid.

Mr Benjamin's licence was endorsed for all offences.

STANLEY men Andrew James Felton (24) and Jacob David Riddell (22) appeared in the Magistrates Court on Wednesday both charged with burglary.

The case was adjourned until November 11, to allow defence lawyer Damien Sabino to listen to the police interview tapes.

He said that neither defendant had a lawyer present when they were interviewed and he needed to ascertain whether there was any conflict in representing both at future hearings.

Crown Prosecutor Simon Rowe said the alleged offence had taken place early in August and had taken some time to come to court because of the Senior Magistrate being out of the Islands.

The further delay in the case going back to court is due to the lift being installed in the Town Hall and the Court being out of use for all of October.

Both men were released on bail.

DARYL John Phillips (24) was sentenced to 40 hours community service on Wednesday after he admitted the theft of a Play Station 4 from the Rockhopper Facility at Mount Pleasant.

He was also ordered to pay £250 compensation to the person he sold it to through Facebook site Falklands Bring and Buy.

Mr Phillips lost his job at Mount Pleasant following his conviction and is due to leave the Islands on October 9.

His former-employer is providing food and accommodation to him and he will carry out the community work at MPA prior to his departure to Saint Helena.

Defence lawyer Damien Sabino said that due to his clients gambling problem he did not have any funds available, although he was due some salary prior to October 9.

Senior Magistrate Clare Faulds waived the contribution towards prosecution costs of £150, but said the compensation had to be paid by October 8.

"We have facilitated Mr Phillips as far as we can. He has made his bed, now he must lie on it," she concluded.

ARTHUR Leonard Pitaluga Turner had the conditions of his gun licence being returned finalised in court on Wednesday.

Mr Turner had his licence returned after he appealed against its revocation following convictions of assault occasioning actual bodily harm in April.

His appeal was based on the need to use a firearm for farming purposes.

Senior Magistrate Clare Faulds said Mr Turner was not to be in possession of or use a firearm beyond land or buildings of which he is the owner or occupier, within a five mile radius of Christ Church Cathedral without prior written permission of the Chief of Police and added that the licence was subject to automatic revocation on conviction of the licence holder after September 30. She said she had made it clear in her earlier judgement that the licence would be revoked if any offence contained legal elements of the use or threat of unlawful violence or the consumption of alcohol.

SAMA scarves in Falklands wool

NON-combat post traumatic stress disorder sufferer Neil Wildman-Whitten is in the process of creating woven scarves in the colours of the South Atlantic Medal Association SAMA (82) and made with Falklands wool.

He told Penguin News this week: "I've just had agreement to work with SAMA(82)."

Almost 30,000 service men and women, and civilians have been awarded the medal.

He said: "I have created a scarf in their house colours and for each one sold, a donation of £5 will be made to the organisation."

"I use Falkland Islands wool, have Falkland Islanders as friends and have been fortunate to visit this amazing place many times, so to be able to show support to those who liberated the Islands means a great deal."

Try out the Blue Bus

AS the inclement weather drags on do not forget that the Blue Bus runs each week and is available to anyone who might have mobility difficulties.

Other than in extreme weather conditions, the bus runs every Friday afternoon, touring the shops of Stanley, as requested by the passengers, John Birmingham told Penguin News.

Mr Birmingham said: "If anybody has not tried out this service, now is the time as Spring approaches. Adrian, the other driver and I, are also always on the lookout for volunteer drivers." For further details please contact John on 52834.

Sheila's new face of Rose Bar

THE re-opening of the historic Rose Bar took place on Tuesday under the new ownership of Islander Sheila Harvey. It was a busy evening in the newly painted bar with the first drink 'on the house' with plenty of regulars and new faces enjoying the evening.

The bar, previously owned by Rag and Tracey Macaskill has operated in the same building, under the same name, longer than any other licensed premises in Stanley. Evidence shows that the Rose is in its 150th year this year, as it is thought it was licensed as the Rose Bar to Thomas Aldridge in 1865.

MLA Jan Cheek
shares a glimpse into
her working week

AS was clear from early on the Labour Conference this year is proving particularly interesting. On the train down from London on Saturday I was sitting across the aisle from one of the labour 'old guard' who was at first wary of me, taking me for a Tory. I think I convinced him that I am not allied to any one party and we were amused by the arrogant enthusiasm of a few young men attending their first conference and sure they already knew all there is to know. To give them their due they all took time on the first day to visit the Falklands' stand.

As I write on Monday evening we have had a very busy and useful couple of days with many visitors to the stand, all new and much praised. I was particularly pleased to welcome Alan Johnson having just enjoyed reading the second volume of his autobiography and looking forward to reading the first. We welcomed Hilary Benn and David Hanson who both hold important shadow roles and also Chris Bryant a former minister. We have seen Ian Murray the sole surviving Labour MP in Scotland who visited the Islands a few years ago and retains a strong interest. Among our first callers were a brace of peers: Lord Dubs who spoke up for us as far back as 1982 and has been a long time supporter. He was swiftly followed by Lord Foulkes another long time supporter. Other visitors have included many old and new friends, journalists, party members and casual visitors. Some stay a minute or two, some for half an hour. At times five of us were busy.

Over lunch time on Monday I attended a very interesting fringe meeting on constitutional reform aimed at retaining the union which makes up the United Kingdom. Distinguished speakers from the major parties suggested that reaction to the Scottish referendum by unionists had been too little, too late and that a good debate needed to start without delay. A similar event will take place in Manchester next week and I intend to attend that also. It has relevance for us as we are currently an overseas territory of the UK, if the UK splits where will the OTs stand?

Domestic violence and abuse

The first in a series of articles relating to the Family Law Review public consultation

IN the second half of 2014 a working group comprising government departmental representatives, private legal practitioners and courts and judiciary met and looked at priorities for future amendment and updates to family law topics. Since then, the Revised Laws Project has commenced under the Law Commissioner, Ros Cheek, which will bring together the laws of the Falkland Islands in an accessible way and make recommendations for future updates in the fullness of time. The work of the Family Justice Review Working Group focussed on early changes which could positively affect children, families and relationships.

The group identified a set of priorities, one of which was domestic abuse law. At present, the Matrimonial Proceedings (Domestic Violence) Ordinance applies in the Falklands and this offers the opportunity to a private individual, without any recourse to the police, to apply to the court for a 'non-molestation order', an injunction to protect themselves (and, where relevant, their children) from being molested or having violence used against them by their spouse, or partner with whom they live as husband and wife.

Additionally, the new Children Ordinance 2014 introduced the possibility of the family court making 'exclusion orders' when making emergency or interim orders for the protection of children, so that the person who is considered to pose a risk to the child may be excluded from the family home, rather than the child being removed. This is not always appropriate or sufficient, but may be a useful tool, including where domestic abuse poses a threat of significant emotional and sometimes also physical harm to a child.

A civil injunction can also be granted for an 'occupation order' to exclude the other party from the matrimonial home or from a specified area in which the matrimonial home is included. This means that the victim of the violence can remain in the home, with any children, while the perpetrator of the violence can be ordered to make other arrangements. Where there has been actual bodily harm, then a court may attach a power of arrest. This allows a police officer to arrest a person who breaches the court order. A copy of the injunction would be lodged at the police station, so that, even though the order is a civil order, an arrest can be made where appropriate and the person brought before the judge.

These civil orders are useful in the combatting of domestic violence and abuse where there are barriers to the effectiveness of police actions. Victims may suffer many incidents of violence or abuse before reporting the matter or seeking help through the courts. In some circumstances, a victim may decide that it is better to continue to suffer in silence. However, seeking the advice of a solicitor and obtaining an injunction can be an effective means to provide a safe, calm period to make plans to re-organise one's life to minimise the risk of the abuse recurring. This can be almost impossible to do where the victim feels there is a continuing threat of repeat behaviour and repercussions.

For those who cannot afford a solicitor, free legal aid is available.

We are proposing to improve the protection available to vulnerable adults and children who suffer from domestic abuse.

We welcome your views on how your law should be improved and we will be suggesting options to you during the consultation that you may wish to consider.

There are various improvements which could be made to the existing law, for instance regarding applications in an emergency without notice to the other party and orders as to how the home should be paid for and maintained while an occupation order is in force. The breach of an injunction could be made a criminal offence.

The main drawback currently however appears to be that only a husband or wife, or a person currently living with their partner as husband and wife, can make such an application. An option for changing the law would be to widen the group of those who can apply, to include for instance ex-partners, intended spouses, persons who are or were in the same household (other than lodgers, tenants or employees), relatives, parents of (or people holding parental responsibility for) the same child and people involved in the same family proceedings, in order to recognise the many forms which domestic abuse can take.

A public consultation is planned during October on policies for this and other legal changes for children, families and people's relationships. Please look out for the questionnaires online and at the usual outlets and let us have your views.

Coffee morning raises £3k+ for Macmillan

THE Falkland Islands Museum hosted a coffee morning in aid of Macmillan Cancer Support on Friday raising £3237.84 by the close of play.

The event lasted from 9.30am through to 4pm and was busy throughout. Supporters chatted over delicious cakes, tea and coffee, generously donated by members of the public.

Museum staff were kept busy selling and folding raffle tickets at high speed for the grand draw, with prizes ranging from Christmas lamb, Christmas cake, artwork of many styles, lunches, fruit, a pilates session and an aquarium to name but a few.

Organiser Andrea Barlow was overwhelmed by the support for the event: "People in the Islands are incredibly generous," she said, adding that the turnout and support had been beyond her expectations.

She said she believed it was probably the first time that an event had been held in the Islands in support of Macmillan.

It is a worthy cause, she said and reminded that the charity offers help to Falkland Islanders whilst overseas, including financial assistance.

"So why shouldn't we help them?"

Those sampling the wares described it as a "wonderful spread", "very tasty" and more poignantly as a "timely fund raiser."

People were pleased to be able to support family and friends through the contributions that they made.

Mrs Barlow received an email from Macmillan Cancer Support thanking her for organising the event. "The money you've raised will make a real difference to the lives of people affected by cancer. This is the highest amount I've seen on any email so far today by quite a way. Well done to everyone involved."

Falklands butterflies subject of former Governor's PhD

FORMER Governor Nigel Haywood has been awarded a Vice-Chancellor's scholarship at Bournemouth University to study for a PhD on the Falklands fritillary, the Islands' only resident butterfly. The full title of his dissertation will be Biological and ecological factors in the conservation of the Falklands fritillary, Yramea cytheris cytheris. He will be looking at the butterfly's genetics, and trying to understand how the various colonies of the butterfly on the Islands inter react with each other.

He told Penguin News: "I'm delighted to be given the opportunity to help conserve the Islands' butterfly, which is a welcome sign of summer to so many people. Any work on conservation has to be underpinned by good science."

"This project is an important first step as so little is known about the fritillary; even its life-cycle is a bit of a mystery."

Mr Haywood did some work on the butterfly while he was Governor. He said he regarded it as an omen that the Governor's kneeler in the Cathedral has a Falklands fritillary woven into it. He will be working closely with Falklands Conservation and SAERI and is keen to ensure that all his work is available for future work on the Islands. He said "so many visiting scientists have completed work on the Falklands, and then simply vanished, taking valuable data sets with them. This is something that must change."

"Data collected on the Islands should be readily available on the Islands for Falkland Islanders and visitors alike."

Mr Haywood is planning four field visits to the Islands over three years, with the first next January.

He added "I know Islanders have been asked before for details of any butterflies they have seen, but I would really welcome any information anyone would be prepared to send me. In the first instance, details of date, time and location would be very helpful."

1. What is your most prized possession? My passport - I love to travel and have been fortunate to visit a large number of countries and seen some amazing places around the world.

2. What is the best piece of advice you have ever been given? There is always someone worse off than you in this world. I like this saying because when you feel that everything is going wrong and everyone is against you look at what other people are going through. Sometimes it makes your problems seem trivial and petty in comparison.

3. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea with? Right now my Mum. I miss her lots when I am away and she loves her tea.

4. What is your happiest moment? Becoming an Aunt to my beautiful nieces and nephews. I have three older brothers all of whom have children and I am very proud to be part of their lives, they always make me smile.

5. What in your everyday life drives you crazy? The internet speed here. The internet being metered means I am unable to stream or download movies, and keep my apps on my phone up to date. I use Skype a lot to keep in contact with friends and family when I live abroad and I am always over my account limit. It drives me crazy.

6. What is your nickname and why? Smiler. Because I am always happy and smiling apparently.

7. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it? Don't Stop Me Now by Queen. It reminds me of a number of my friends back home who have very interesting dance moves to this song. It makes me smile every time I hear it.

8. What is the one, single food that you would never give up? Fruit. I struggle with not having a large variety of fresh fruit to hand here. I really miss passion fruit which I am yet to find here in the Falkland's.

THE Falkland Islands Government and Falklands Post Service Ltd launched a new on-line shopping service for philatelic products on Tuesday.

In addition to an extensive range of philatelic products relating to the Falkland Islands, the website also has a full range of products from South Georgia and British Antarctic Territories. This now includes Year Packs for all territories from 2014 onwards.

Managing Director of Falkland Post Service Andrea Clausen, said it was an exciting development for the joint venture with the Falkland Islands Government.

"It means that customers from around the world are able to browse and purchase philatelic products that capture an essence of the unique wildlife, history and landscapes in this part of the South Atlantic."

Lack of political awareness

MAY I take this opportunity to convey a response to a letter sent by Patrick J Watts MBE about the new UK Labour Leader published in Penguin News on September 25.

Last Sunday (September 27 2015) I took the opportunity to speak to MLA Jan Cheek at the Labour Party Conference and in my conversation with her I affirmed the appropriateness of the correspondence from FIG to The Rt Hon Mr Jeremy Corbyn MP. It was a well crafted letter.

Sadly, Mr Watts misses the point about the correspondence and demonstrates a complete lack of political awareness (and for that matter betrays a level of personal spite for a man who I assume he has never met). Your readers will have read the letter sent and signed by MLA Mike Summers and I challenge anyone to say it does not set out a clear and balanced summary of the political landscape for the Falkland Islands people.

Finally, I thanked Jan for taking the time to come to UK to put the case for the Falkland Islands people to the Party Conferences. She is a great advocate and ambassador for the Islands.

Revisit manifestos

I WONDER if it is too early for me to suggest a revisiting of our MLAs' various manifestoes and pledges made before we elected them in to office? Perhaps it might be interesting to compare this with their portfolios after they came to office as well. All too often we hear complaints of what they have and haven't done, particularly over contentious issues, like the roads, and calls for them to be ousted, along with promises of "I won't be voting for him or her again," only to vote them back in after viewing the prospective MLAs.

It is almost two years since we voted and there has been much change, both here and internationally. The last election saw the increased use of social media to raise awareness in a wider audience and some of our MLAs have continued to utilise this to greater effect, enabling us to converse with them and discuss issues that affect us directly. In terms of transparency this has given those of us with an interest a platform through which we have had a degree of involvement. I think this has been valuable and helpful in making our criticisms and plaudits plain at the time rather than a couple of years later. Equally, it has also enabled our MLAs to give vent to their frustrations.

Recently I made a point on social media that, if we felt that our elected representatives had not achieved what they said they would, they ought to be made to stay a further four years during which they should at least start the key project that got them elected in the first place.

Perhaps I was being naive, their being in salaried positions paid for by the electorate, but I do feel that they ought to be made accountable for promises made in return for our, "tick in the box."

Chilean researchers visit

A SCIENTIFIC collaboration with the South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI) brought four Chilean researchers to the Falklands this week.

Coming from Universidad de Magallanes in Punta Arenas (Dr. Claudio González-Wevar and Sebastian Rosenfeld) and from the Institute of Ecology and Biodiversity of Universidad de Chile in Santiago (Dr. Elie Poulin and Ms. Mathias Hüne), they visited our Islands to sample the coast.

The group also gave a public talk at the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday.

Their studies, funded by the Chilean Science Agency CONICYT are dedicated to the knowledge of marine biodiversity in the Austral Ocean with special emphasis in the relationship between the fauna from the Falkland Islands and the Patagonian region. They specifically work with marine molluscs and fish to evaluate the genetic differences or similarities between populations from both areas to evaluate the pattern of connectivity between Falklands and Patagonia faunas through marine currents.

Specimens will be collected around the Falklands at low tide and by scuba diving near the coast, with the logistic support of SAERI. This field trip will also complete a broad sampling effort on the scale of the whole Austral Ocean that included until now the Patagonian region, Antarctic Peninsula, South Shetland, Crozet and Kerguelen Islands.

Such studies, reconstructing the phylogenetic relationships between geographically distant taxa, will permit to understand the dynamics of the origin of new species in the Antarctic and Subantarctic regions.

Such collaboration between Chilean and Falkland's institutions illustrates the joint effort that has been promoted among countries involved in the development of science and conservation of the Subantarctic and Antarctic regions.

Sunny wedding for Isla and Derek

DEREK McDonald and Isla Livermore were blessed with rare sunshine on the day they made their wedding vows in front of Canon David Roper at Christ Church Cathedral on Saturday.

The couple were driven to the church by Gerard Jaffray in a fire engine and appropriately Isla's dress, Derek's tie and the buttonholes reflected the fire engine theme with burgundy touches.

The bouquet and buttonholes were created by Jan Miller.

The couple were supported by Maid of Honour Jo Hay (who also made the cake) Best Man Rudolfo Tellez, and Soraye and Keagan as Bridesmaid and Pageboy. Isla's sister Verity travelled from the UK to attend the wedding.

After the wedding the couple along with friends and family enjoyed a reception and party at the Narrows Bar.

The couple asked that their thanks be passed to all of the above along with Lisa Martin for catering, decorations and organising and Mandy for assisting with the catering; also Lee Martin for checking the Groom and Best Man were nerve free and for giving the Bride away.

They said thanks to Kerry Middleton for photography, Stacey Steen for hair and makeup and Lisa, Lee, Jo and Rudolfo and everyone who attended the wedding and supported them.

Falklands receive award at Labour Party Conference

THE Falklands stand at the Labour Party Conference in Brighton was awarded second place for the Best Commercial Stand on Tuesday.

The new-look Falklands stand had attracted a large number of visitors at the Conference in sunny Brighton this week.

Rosie Winterton MP visited the stand to present the award.

Falkland Islands Government Representative in London Sukey Cameron said she was delighted to receive the recognition after 28 years attending Labour Party Conferences.

Throughout the week the Falklands representatives had the opportunity to meet a number of new Members of Parliament, the Shadow ministerial teams and delegates.

Ms Cameron said: "The change of leadership in the Party has bought a new atmosphere to the Conference, but support for the Falkland Islands and our right to self-determination remains solid."

FICS go pink in support of CSAT

THE Falkland Islands Community School (FICS) held a 'pink day' on Thursday and raised more than £370 for their chosen charity.

Shackleton house has adopted the Cancer Support and Awareness Trust (CSAT) as their charity for the year and began in style by encouraging all students and staff to wear pink for the day, pay a donation to the cause and indulge in specially-baked, scrumptious pink buns and snacks at break-time.

Students learned more about the role of CSAT during an assembly at the start of the week.

More than £370 was raised from the day's events and house leader Wendy Wilson said she was very pleased with the students' efforts.

"We're very proud of our students and the support they gave to this worthy cause. Well done Shackleton house," she said.

Students themselves described the day as, "good fun" and for a "good cause."

They were pleased to be raising money for charity and even the boys are reported to have enjoyed painting their nails pink.

FICS staff were really pleased with the level of support and thank everyone who contributed.

Dancing the night away at the Conservation Ball

Tracy Desjardins and Wayne Jaffray

Carole Goss, Tara Hewitt and Veronica Frans lead the crowd in the Cha-Cha Slide

THE Falklands Conservation annual Charity Ball, sponsored by Consolidated Fisheries Limited (CFL), has been heralded a roaring success by the organisers this year.

It was a year for new records as more tables than ever went on sale giving even more people the opportunity to attend the evening.

'Celebrating the South Atlantic' was the theme for the event (with a little artistic licence on some of the tree branch decorations) with giant white balloons, silver painted willow branches, fairy lights, snowflakes decorated by Watch Group members and icicles made from recycled plastic bottles.

Guests were greeted on arrival with a live acoustic performance from Penny Nichols and Paul Jays whilst enjoying a glass of complimentary champagne donated by the Falkland Islands Co Ltd. The Malvina House Hotel prepared the meal using local ingredients such as snow crab, toothfish and lamb. Complimentary wine donated by the Seafish Chandlery completed the dining experience.

The opening speech was given by Falklands Conservation's CEO, Esther Bertram, who highlighted the inspiring characteristics of the Islands and its people which she has experienced since arriving in the Falklands with her family.

Charismatic and entertaining co-hosts Simon Marlow and Chris Keen of BFBS expertly steered the evening and even cajoled the audience into an attempt to break the 'Falklands Record' for largest group on film doing the 'Cha Cha Slide.'

The auction raised some £13,000 and this year's star item, a 10 night Antarctic cruise with One Ocean Expedition of the winner's choice, was secured by Acting Governor Sandra Tyler-Haywood for the bargain price of £9,000 - the cruise is valued at £20,000.

All funds raised will help support Falklands Conservation's mission to engage and empower the people of the Falkland Islands and to take action to conserve biodiversity, and to manage landscapes and seascapes for the benefit of nature and people.

At the time of going to print FC staff were hopeful they had raised more than £20,000.

Nadia Smith and Vicky Collier display the art work

Esther Bertram chats with Jeff and Julie Halliday

After the auction guests danced the night away with music performed by local band Pushing South, a six piece band with brothers Clayton and Duane March on lead and rhythm guitar, Pete King on the drums, Saul Zuvic on rhythm guitar and Chris George on bass. Carole Goss added a female touch with great vocals.

Organiser of the Ball, Nadia Smith said: "We are so excited that the Ball was such a success and that it still creates a buzz in the community, with tickets selling out in six minutes this year."

She said it was a challenge to think of a new 'wow' factor each year for the decorations, "but I think the balloons and willow branches looked fantastic."

She thanked Consolidated Fisheries Ltd for their leading sponsorship of the event, which they have done now for more than a decade."

The raffle was drawn early Monday morning. Dan Whitney was the lucky winner of the star prize, a luxurious 19 night Falklands/South Georgia cruise for two people, generously donated by Lindblad Expeditions/National Geographic.

Nadia added: "I would also like to extend a special thank you to everyone who contributed to the success of the evening: the event wouldn't be possible if it wasn't for the support of the local community."

Full thank you list and raffle winners on the back page.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800... Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Motocross - first race of 2015

WITH September playing host to the worst weather - ever - the days leading up to the first motocross of 2015 was cold, bleak and wet; the Ponds track near Fitzroy, still in winter mode.

In stepped the stars of the show, the Saints from MPA, breathing a touch of magic with the help of some heavy duty yellow machinery, making the track both rideable and safe.

Preparation is key to success when racing motorcycles and it was clear from the outset, this had been visibly ignored. Regan Newman arrived at the track, unable to fit into last years race boots, due to extended feet syndrome. Parents, your kids grow longer in a year, deal with it.

Most of the adult riders soon realised they hadn't paid enough attention to their physical fitness, after a few practice laps, arms altered shape into what resembled rock hard, lumpy cucumbers, rendering them unable to control forward thrust.

As always first on the starting grid were the passionate juniors, with a choice of machinery ranging from 50 to 250cc. Travis Jaff fray defending his number one plate soon stamped his authority on the first race: riding more confidently than ever. Newcomer Dara Patric rode on Travis's back tyre for the full race. Chico Thomas-Hayes clinched third place having battled with veteran racer Regan Newman all day.

The second event was launched in much the same order, except Dara was on a mission, to win the second race and take the overall for the day. With this simple plan set in his mind, he overhauled Travis on the second lap and checked out, taking a superb win on his very first meeting.

Lane McKay rode well taking fifth place with the luckless Lachlan Crowie putting on a brave face, whilst secretly wanting to kick his bike into an abandoned car tyre for losing its coolant without permission.

Six riders lined up for the Clubman race with Ryan Perry and Shaun Kendrick dominating the pack. Lex Yon showed he had the speed but an angry spill kept him from a podium position.

Darren Taylor rode consistently well to take a well deserved third place.

Always exciting racing, nine experts blasted up the start straight like a cacophony of fuming blue buzzers. Sean Moffatt having 'prepared' all year for this race quickly gained control of the racing with a superb display of speed and power, flying over the new double with skill and panache.

Scott Henry-Roberts not far off the pace took two close seconds with Dylan Stephenson taking third on the podium.

Ones to watch in the next race will be Robert Ferguson riding his new YZ125, James Tyrrell as he picks up the pace of the experts, Zoran Zuvic on his new 350KTM (when it arrives) Lachlan Crowie on his rejuvenated Suzuki.

We always have many people to thank after a race and sometimes we inadvertently forget someone, so apologies to anyone I have missed out.

Thanks to: The sponsors Life-styles Ltd., Chief marshal Clare Crowie, Ian Francis for medical cover and all the lap counters and marshals without whom we could not hold the event and lastly the FIC for the use of the land.

Jimmy Moffatt

12 runners for 5k points race

SUNDAY'S first monthly points race of the new season, saw a turnout of 12 runners competing in all divisions.

It was good to see Ros back competing again, and it was also welcome back to Sally Ellis and the McKee family. I was expecting to see a good turnout of runners from the de-miners, however Sunday was a work day; hopefully next time.

We also welcomed ultra-distance runner Paul Reader who came down from MPA to run with us after seeing the ad in last week's Penguin News.

The run was led from start to finish by 'inform' local veteran runner Richard Short who crossed the line in 18.57. A storming run to continue where he left off from last season. 'Cleggs' Ross was next across the line in 19.51. A great effort by Cleggs who tells me he needs more time on the road as most of his training is done on the treadmill. (I think the new shoes also helped). They were followed by Steve Butler (22.27) and Paul Reader (22.51).

Rounding out the top five was junior runner Hamish McKee, who turned in an outstanding effort in finishing in 23 minutes flat.

First lady in was Sally Ellis in a time of 24.30 and 6th overall.

Juniors, Dean Ellis (25.25), Lucas Ferriby (25.46) and Richard Short Jnr (27.27) were next.

Our only junior girl Flora McKee came home in 28.26 along with Dad Richard McKee and Aunt Ros Cheek.

A big thanks to our marshals on the day, Emma, Fran and Paul, all of whom braved the cold conditions to support the club's monthly run.

Remember the club hosts a points race every month. Anyone is welcome to enter the points races. Entry into these races allows you to build up points for the season in your category (Senior Man and Woman, and Junior Boy and Junior Girl). You earn points for the end of season Senior Club Cups donated by the Standard Chartered Bank and Junior Shields donated by the Running Club.

The points are based on where you finished and how many were in your division. For Example: 8 runners in your division. The first runner gets 8 pts, second 7pts, and so on down to the 8th runner who gets a point.

So after the first race of this season the points stand at:

Senior Men: Richard Short (5) Cleggs Ross (4) Steve Butler (3) Paul Reader (2) and Richard McKee (1)

Senior Women: Sally Ellis (2) Ros Cheek (1)

Next event: Man versus Horse Race, Sunday November 1.

Head teacher offer awaits response

AN offer of the position of Head Teacher Falkland Islands Community School has been made to an individual and a reply is currently awaited, confirmed Director of Education Tom Hill yesterday.

An offer of Deputy Head Teacher Falkland Islands Community School has also been made and accepted he said.

Mr Hill also noted that there had been a number of very reasonable interviewees for the posts and he had "pocketful" of alternatives if circumstances lead to anyone backing out.

In the meantime a very experienced interim Head Teacher had been hired and would begin in December. The person was an education consultant of many years said Mr Hill and could run the school until the second week of April if required. If the new Head Teacher was able to join the school earlier than anticipated then the interim Head would support the former and, "I've got plenty of other jobs for him," that would include taking forward work established by Schools Improvement Partner Ursula Norbert recently said Mr Hill.

Mr Hill also explained that a school inspection planned for November had been moved to February 2016.

He said: "We share the inspector with the Ministry of Defence schools and they have staffing constraints in November."

In Mr Hill's report to the Education Board yesterday he said the two additional classrooms on the Stanley House garden site had progressed at a good rate. He added, "however last Friday the school was given notice that there would be a further two week delay."

Scientists and South Georgia representatives at Government House on Tuesday evening

Scientists flock to Falklands for vital South Georgia future research strategy

FIFTEEN scientists from institutes around the world gathered in the Falklands this week to assess future scientific requirements for South Georgia.

Project manager Dr Vicky Peck from the British Antarctic Survey based in Cambridge explained that the South Georgia Future Science project wanted to identify what the scientific needs of the island were and how they could best be facilitated.

The Falklands was recognised as the best place to access South Georgia from and so the group travelled south for a packed programme which due to the delayed LAN flight on the weekend has become even more intense as they attempt to complete the planned work shops and field trips in a shorter time.

Significant changes are currently taking place in South Georgia with climate change and just north of South Georgia there is an intense Phytoplankton bloom which is the most concentrated in the Southern Ocean.

Known as the South Georgia bloom the photosynthesis is releasing a lot of CO2 into the atmosphere and also converting into a lot of algal material on the surface. "It's a significant area and we are questioning whether with climate change there is the potential for that bloom to change in any way," said Dr Peck.

The krill which is the main source of food for Antarctic wildlife feeds on the plankton so it is a primary source of food.

While Dr Peck said she did not think there was any way of protecting the 'bloom', they would like to understand why it is where it is, what the related processes are and the consequences of climate change.

There are already facilities on South Georgia for scientists to work from with the BAS and Bird Island bases and technology now allows for observation systems for the weather and the many other elements connected with the changes in South Georgia, explained Dr Peck.

Using remote sensing there may not be a requirement for more people to go to South Georgia which may include placing transmitters on the heads of elephant seals to monitor them while they are off doing their foraging.

"This could tell us what the temperatures are, where the krill is and other relevant information needed to assess change."

She added that they wanted to be as sympathetic to the environment as possible, but at the same time find out as much as they could.

The South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI) have hosted the visit while it was privately funded by the Mamont Foundation which was established in 2007 to fund the exploration of the Polar Regions in order to better understand the earth.

MLA Michael Poole said it was a great project with SAERI doing exactly what it was set up to do.

While the research was focussed on South Georgia there were clearly environmental and economic benefits for the Falklands too, said MLA Poole.

"SAERI is looking to reach and work with all the South Atlantic islands, but the reality is with the historic connections and environmental links with South Georgia, it is naturally going to be the first among friends in this region."

Comment by Deputy Editor Sharon Jaffray

AN interesting point raised as an aside in the Planning and Building meeting this week was the lack of visible, physical house numbering around Stanley.

This has undoubtedly become more apparent with the flush of new builds in the Sapper Hill area, not to mention some of the more tucked away infill constructions within the town. But it is not a new issue - there are two number 5 Brandon Roads which you can imagine must be pretty irritating for taxi and bus drivers, but it could be a very serious issue when it comes to the emergency services.

We've all heard of ambulances struggling to find particular properties and the Chief Fire Officer said there had been occasion when his department had to get a name to locate an incident because there was no house number. I once gave the Police instructions to an address which even included some detailed directions past some very well known garden gnomes and still watched the car shoot past on different streets. My own short stint at taxi driving mostly consisted of establishing who had been the residents of a property some 30 years ago (when as kids we had delivered Christmas cards for pocket money) and then mentally working to the present day. A method which kicked off some good yarns with the older passengers, but was a tad confusing for the newbies.

It's our National Tidy Up Day on Sunday and while not everyone will be able to get out and about to do their bit, ensuring that you have a visible house number would be a good help and could be a lifesaver one day.

At home I have a number 7 on the wheelie bin, but even then a call for a taxi is usually followed up with, "... the only one with a natural stone wall... yes that's right, and the ruddy big Ford tractor in the front yard, you can't miss it chay."

I WAS pleased to hear that legislation for the Abattoir to comply with EU regulations was not going to impact on the traditional farm gate sale of lamb, mutton and beef and that there was no political will to do so. More than a decade later the farmer in me still recoils in horror at the meat shelf prices and I much prefer to ring up and order meat from friends or help out with a few gathers for some succulent island beef and there is nothing quite like having a lamb delivered to the door on Christmas Eve in return for some lamb marking.

Some of the Falklands traditions are just too good to be messed with.

British Government will never sell out Falklands says Foreign Secretary

PHILIP Hammond has issued a firm hands-off warning to Argentina by insisting the government will "never sell out" the Falkland Islands.

The Foreign Secretary insisted the "bullying and harassment" against the Islanders must stop, adding that it was counter-productive and "shameful."

He also warned Spain against the "unlawful and inexcusable" violations of Gibraltar's territorial waters as he claimed Labour in government under Jeremy Corbyn would risk the sovereignty of Britain's overseas territories.

Speaking in Manchester at the Tory conference, Mr Hammond said the right to self-determination is being challenged not only in eastern Europe and the Middle East, but also near Gibraltar and in the South Atlantic.

He told delegates: "Let me say clearly to our Spanish friends - we agree on many things and we want to work with you in the many areas where our interests coincide."

"But violations of Gibraltar's territorial waters by Spanish state vessels are unlawful and inexcusable. The people of Gibraltar have an inviolable right to remain British."

"We will maintain that right, for as long as they wish us to."

He added: "While I'm speaking Spanish, let me clarify something for President Kirchner of Argentina - whatever the Labour leader says, this Conservative government will never sell out the Falkland Islanders."

Mr Hammond recalled how the Falkland Islanders voted unanimously - 99.8% on a turnout of more than 90% - to remain British in a recent referendum.

"The bullying and harassment to which the islanders continue to be subjected is shameful - it's counter-productive, it's wrong and it must stop."

"The Falkland Islanders have every right to develop their economy."

Ashley Fox, leader of the Conservative MEPs in the European Parliament, who also represents the South West of England and Gibraltar, told delegates: "Let us send out a clear and resolute message today to the people of Gibraltar - as long as you want to be British, no matter what intimidation, bullying and threats you may face, we will stand by you, we will defend you; the Conservatives will never betray you."

Permission for prison block extension granted

FIVE applications were considered at Wednesday's Planning and Building Committee meeting with two refused and three granted as per the Planning Officer's recommendations.

Temporary permission was given for the two cabin high modular prison block extension and provision of three parking spaces.

Executive Council had approved the outline permission in September last year.

Head of Planning Steve Butler said that there had not been any policy changes that would warrant refusal and that the development was included within the Development Plan 2015.

Permission was granted for a two year period from the date of occupation when unless the permission was renewed the extension would cease to be used and be removed from the site.

The outline application to build another house at 7 Ian Campbell Drive from Ian and Valerie McLeod was refused on the grounds it would lead to over development and would create privacy issues for both properties.

Also refused was the Lighthouse Seamen's Centre application for a new dwelling in the south part of the garden at 2 Drury Street as it would exceed the 25 per cent property footprint as well as parking and access from Pioneer Row being problematic.

Geoff Pring's outline application to sub-divide the plot at 5a Ross Road West for residential infill development was approved following a lively debate about whether there was a need to provide two parking spaces for the established house which has access from Ross Road. Further parking spaces are also available off Race Course Road. Mr Butler said that parking spaces could be addressed through conditions when a planning application was received.

Atlink Ltd's application to site a watch keepers hut for access control on FIPASS was also granted temporary permission with conditions and it was noted that there had been a similar hut on that site in the past.

Progress on nurseries

BASED on "good" work undertaken by the Early Years group under the Chair of Rhianon Didlick Smith, the Director of Education Tom Hill is to take a paper to Executive Council in November, produced by himself and Paul Jays that will examine initial ideas relating to the future of nursery education in the Falklands.

Mr Hill said he did not want to spend months of work on a more detailed paper only to take it to ExCo and discover there was no will to take the work forward.

He indicated that this initial paper would examine needs, the current situation, and the principle that a move forward on legislation impacting on nurseries was what MLAs wanted. He noted that there would also be the financial element because it, "won't happen without money."

MLA Elsby agreed that a "clear steer," was required from MLAs.

Mr Hill emphasised that nothing should be done to the detriment of local businesses and working parents and that change must be well thought out.

It is planned that the paper will be examined by the Board before going to ExCo in November.

Ordinance

Mr Hill also noted that he was, "half way through," updating the Education Ordinance in conjunction with Board Member Karen Lee and representatives from the Attorney General's Office.

Attendance

Mr Hill said he had taken a spot check of attendance across both schools on October 6 and this had been 94.5 per cent. Low attendance on first and last days of term did occur but this was very normal in an island setting.

Promoting child safeguarding

THE Falkland Islands Government promoted closer co-operation and information exchange on child protection and safeguarding issues with other British Overseas Territories and Crown Dependencies at the recent British Overseas Territories Attorneys-General Conference held in Anguilla last week.

Falkland Islands Attorney General, Peter Judge, presented the Islands' proposal for closer work on these issues between the Territories and the UK to the Conference, chaired by Solicitor General for England and Wales, Robert Buckland, QC, MP.

The Falkland Islands' work of FIG featured prominently amongst a wide range of important international issues discussed during the conference

Farm kill supported assures MLA Rendell

MEMBER of Legislative Assembly Phyl Rendell assured at a recent meeting of the Agriculture Advisory Committee that she and her colleagues were in complete support of 'farm kill' continuing.

Farms have traditionally killed mutton, lamb and beef for local consumption without any regulation in place apart from the correct disposal of offal in line with the Hydatid Ordinance.

Recent legislation approved by Executive Council to comply with European Union (EU) predominantly affects the Sand Bay Abattoir, however there were a few parts which had raised concerns with farmers that it was, "a slippery slope to not being allowed to kill on the farm," said Rural Business Association representative Donna Minnell.

The number of animals a non-designated slaughter house could sell or gift to the local market would have a cap on it and there was a need for SRM (specified risk material, such as spinal cord) to be removed from some carcasses for consumption in areas yet to be specified.

Not including animals for on-farm consumption (ie dogs meat and mutton for the farmhouse) Senior Vet Steve Pointing said there seemed to be agreement among those farmers he had received feedback from that 240 sheep and 12 beef per year was not restrictive.

Lambs under 12 months and beef under 24 month do not require SRM removal.

It was noted by the committee that the need for legislation was not driven by the Abattoir or the Meat Company, but purely by the need to comply with European Union regulations.

FIH to Travel Mart Latin America

FALKLAND Islands Holidays represented by Jenny Luxton and Sue Smith attended the 39th Annual Travel Mart Latin America Tourism Business Development event in Guatemala this year.

Ms Luxton said: "We had 35 scheduled meetings and several extra calling by."

"We went on three tours and this gave us a great opportunity to meet other suppliers and buyers enabling us to promote the Falklands with potential business partners. We found this very helpful and our paths crossed throughout the week."

She added that more Americans seemed to be attending the event, "this was useful for us since we meet many Europeans at Experience Latin America."

"There was tremendous interest in the Islands, largely as an add on to South America which is very useful, hopefully people visiting for one week will want to return for another visit."

Scouts cut sods on Peat Cutting Monday

THE Falkland scout group learned about the Falklands hardworking past on the bank holiday with a demonstration of peat cutting on Peat Cutting Monday.

Peat was once the sole means of heating and cooking in the Falklands, and in an article some years back Falklands historian John Smith explained that it began in the Falklands on February 17, 1764, "when Dom Pernety, a priest accompanying the French aristocrat and explorer Louis de Bougainville on his expedition to the Falklands was seeking a suitable spot to set up their camp.

"The most urgent need was fuel for the fire, a serious problem in a land without trees.

"Fortunately Dom Pernety came across an eroded bank of earth at Port Louis with the soil on its exposed face having been dried by the wind to a crisp, almost coal like state. He returned to their camp with several blocks of the stuff with which he very shortly had a bright and cheerful blaze underway."

Falklands culture celebrated

CULTURAL diversity in the Falkland Islands will be celebrated with a whole day of events on Saturday.

It will begin with an event, comprising presentations, displays and smoko in the Museum in the morning followed by displays, a huge variety of food, fun events, traditional games, a magician, a display by the MPA dog section, a bouncy castle and music in the FIDF hall from 1.30pm.

Entry and food at both events are free but donations will be very welcome. Most of the food will be home-made by supporters, some from Camp, but organisers have also received generous donations from Shorty's Diner, Malvina House Hotel, Tasty Treats, the Narrows, the Waterfront Cafe, FIMCo and the FIC.

At 7pm there will be a chance to enjoy (or learn) the Circassian circle with Lisa Martin, the Chilean Cueca with Claudia and Ricardo, or line dancing from Saint Helena.

The day will finish off with a Family Dance at the FIDF hall from 8pm with music from Falkland, Chilean, Saint Helenian and Filipino groups as well as Mel Lloyd with some country music. Entry fee is £2 on the door for adults but children are free. Last entry is 10.30pm and it is a BYO.

The group's first event was a very successful multicultural music evening in Government House, "but we hope this Saturday will be even more successful," said MLA Barry Elsby.

"Jessica Campos and I have just returned from a two week MLA visit to Uruguay and countries in Central America, promoting the modern Falkland Islands."

"We were well received in all countries, especially Uruguay, and the one fact that stopped people in their tracks was when we told them that our last census showed a population of almost 3,000, but born in 53 different countries."

"This is the history of the Islands, be they Alazias, Betts, Fords, Gualas, Henrys, Jones, Larsens, McLeods, Petterssons, Poncets or Zuvics, they are all Falkland Islanders."

"So, if you have never had a Camp smoko then come to the new Museum between 10am and 12. If you want to learn more about the different cultures in our Islands then come to the FIDF hall to see the displays, films and try smoked Falkland trout, lamb tongue pate, Upland Goose sausages, salt beef from Camp, Chilean empanadas, Saint Helenian plo (pilau) and Filipino chicken and pork specials."

MLA Jan Cheek
shares a glimpse into
her working week

MANCHESTER has lived up to its reputation for being a bit grey and damp but the conference is proving very busy and lively. To get in and out over the last two days has meant facing the baying demonstrators outside who are indiscriminate as they hurl abuse, and in some cases eggs and other missiles at everyone, assuming that we are all 'evil Tories' or more colourfully described enemies of humanity. One individual was overheard saying 'but I'm a Guardian journalist!' However, it appears that he was damned by association. There are also long queues for security checks, much more stringent here than they were in Brighton. Once inside we meet with great friendliness as we did at the Labour conference in Brighton where we were assured repeatedly that the Labour party policy supporting self determination for the Falklands and Gibraltar is unchanged.

Manchester Central is a large, airy and open venue and we have a lot of traffic past our stand with many stopping to ask questions or simply to chat. We've met a number of MPs including some of those recently elected. These include at least one gentleman I had met several times without even having an inkling that he was a prospective and now a successful candidate. This proves again that we need to give time and courtesy to all comers - we never know what role an earnest, callow youth may achieve in years to come. Many people remember us from previous years and luckily, though I often forget a name, I always recognise familiar faces and can often recall enough to conduct a reasonable conversation while I dredge the memory banks for a name. Our most senior visitors up to the time I write this late on Monday evening have been the Foreign and Defence Secretaries. We've also seen many who have visited the Islands, all with fond memories of their time rekindled by the wonderful images on our tv screen and striking new stand.

The two most popular brochures seem to be 'Our Islands our home' and the matching volume on our history. There has also been a great deal of interest in oil and its potential development and many questions on how to get to the Islands. Between us we've covered many of the early evening events and a number of fringe events. We've talked informally to a number of journalists which I hope has ensured that they will be well briefed should the Islands become headline news for any reason.

Children: Special guardianship adoption and safe workers

The second in a series of articles relating to the Family Law Review public consultation

The Family Justice Review Working Group considered the benefits of introducing Special Guardianship Orders in the Falkland Islands, of modernising adoption law (including asking for an International Adoption Convention to be extended to the Falklands) and of introducing law to compel all those who work with children, whether government, private sector or volunteers, to undergo proper background checks.

Adoption creates new legal relationships between the child and the new adoptive family. The rights of the natural parents are extinguished. Natural parents, in a larger community, may typically have no contact with a child except through letters which are sometimes stored until such time as the child may be able to understand what has happened. Alternatively, there may be an open adoption where the natural family and adoptive family stay in contact for the benefit of the child. This has its drawbacks, but can be made to work. Open adoptions are likely to be more suitable for situations where a parent willingly gives a child up for adoption, rather than when the court orders an adoption against the wishes of the parents.

In circumstances where the Crown applies for an order to protect a child, adoption may be a necessary outcome if the child is very young and needs to be protected from people within the natural family. This can only happen if the court is satisfied that no other option will do to protect the child. This is something which presents particular challenges in the Falklands because it is difficult to maintain anonymity and segregation in a very small community. An international adoption may have to be considered. It may be risky to arrange an adoption with another country where international standards do not apply. Another country may refuse to deal with us because we ourselves do not currently have the International Convention extended to us.

The Falklands operate under the UK's Adoption Act 1976 which is old-fashioned and no longer applicable in the UK. There are disadvantages of this law. When the court makes an order in favour of the Crown, 'freeing' the child for adoption, the parents lose all their legal rights. The authorities would then begin a search for an adoptive family for the child, and would have no legal obligation to give the parents any update, unless 12 months had passed without a successful placement. Secondly, only married couples or single people can apply to adopt under the old law, but unmarried couples are not included.

A modernised law could rectify these shortfalls. Parents could be allowed to challenge a court decision to 'place' a child for adoption right up to the making of an adoption order. A wider range of people could be permitted to adopt. The Falklands could ask the UK to extend the 'Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Co-operation in respect of Inter-Country Adoption' to ensure safe adoption to and from overseas, when required or desirable.

Special Guardianship orders are for children who cannot live at home with their natural parents for whatever reason and live permanently with a relative, friend or other person. Currently, such orders do not exist in Falklands law. Where special guardians care for a child, the natural parents do not lose their legal 'parental responsibility'. This means that a child is not given new legal parents and will still be aware of who their real family is. Parents are likely to stay in contact, even though everyday decisions in bringing up the child will be made by the special guardians, to the exclusion of the parents. This could be considered more suitable than adoption for the Falklands context.

Finally, the Working Group considered the introduction of law to safeguard vulnerable groups to be of the highest importance. This law could oblige all those who apply for a job working with children (or vulnerable adults) to undergo enhanced criminal and background checks, to protect the children in their care. At present this is not enforceable in respect of those working as volunteers or for private companies, such as nurseries. Barred lists of those considered unsuitable to work with children as a result of disciplinary matters could also be introduced.

There is new law due to commence on November 1, relating to acquisition of parental responsibility (PR) for unmarried fathers. Section 7(1)(a) of the Children Ordinance 2014 states it will be possible for a father to acquire rights and responsibilities in respect of his child by registering as the child's father on the birth certificate, even though not married to the mother.

Peat Cutting and the Bog Blues

PEAT Cutting Monday. Now that's an evocatively, if inaccurately, named public holiday if ever there was one.

The tradition of menfolk heading off to the bogs clutching well sharpened spades on the first Monday of October probably goes back to the pioneering days, when the very sustenance of life and the viability of the colony depended on excavating thousands of cubic yards of sticky and smelly mud.

These days, of course, no such compulsory work awaits Islanders as the sun makes its reluctant return (particularly reluctant this year, I am told). If anyone still cuts peat, they do so because they want the exercise or perhaps need to show cruise ship tourists that life was once, not so long ago, quite difficult. I bet those who still take a grindstone to their spade (hole drilled in the middle of it to break the peat's suction) and slope off to the bog on PCM number no more than 10 or 20 in Stanley, with perhaps a few more in the camp.

These days most older people chose to remember peat cutting rather than experience it, and I'm sure many recall it with a shudder. For the umpteenth time this PCM, some old timers will have told their children or grandchildren what it was like in the bad old days before most people were rich enough to afford fuel oil, kerosene and gas. "Yeah, yeah, granddad, we've heard it all before," the youngsters will mutter, and then go back to their X-Boxes.

This early October public holiday was really a bit of a swizz.

Yes, you didn't have to go into work, but you were expected to labour twice as hard as you would normally at the peat bank. It now really is a holiday, with the old title retained just for reasons of nostalgia and to remind us of the "good old days" (those of rampant tuberculosis and hydatid disease).

Perhaps I'm laying on the cynicism a little too thickly, as I wasn't traumatised by my experience wielding a peat spade. My parents didn't send me off to the bog as soon as I started shaving, as many kids were. Most years they would pay someone to cut the 150 cubic yards or so that we needed to get through the next 12 months.

I recall, though, that we did sometimes "rickle" the stuff (now that is an interesting peat-related word which, along with "no-blings" and peat "mould" is presumably vanishing from the vernacular). And I did have to throw it into the shed when great loads of it were dumped in the yard by one of the hauliers driving their 1950s vintage lorries.

Just occasionally I had something to do with the actual cutting. Some years Dad would make a token effort to get a few yards out, and on those occasions I would (reluctantly) go along to the bog with him. Once, to our horror, we arrived at our PWD-allocated bank to find that the Governor, Sir Cosmo Haskard and his wife were slaving away with spades at the adjacent bank. And they were taking it pretty seriously too. "Afternoon, Nap," Sir Cosmo said cheerily in his clipped colonial-administrator's accent. (Dad was at the time the Assistant Colonial Secretary, so the Governor was on first name terms with him, although, I don't believe it worked the other way.)

"I always thought you local chaps were rather lucky with all this compulsory exercise. I must say we're rather enjoying it." With that, Sir Cosmo took another swing at the bank and rolled another three sods out before pausing for breath. Keeping up with the Haskards was no small thing, and several hours on, they showed no sign of quitting. However as soon as London's man in the Falklands and his lady had cut enough and were heading home for tea, Dad's spade was wrapped in hessian and thrown into the boot of our Hillman Minx.

Later, as a spotty youth, there was the odd occasion when I gave a friend a hand at his bog. We would place cans of beer at (very short) intervals along the bank and when we reached one it would be time for a break. Sometimes we didn't bother to complete the required distance. Eventually, perhaps slightly inebriated, I would utter a phrase like, "Bloody hell! Is that the time? I'd better get back to town because I promised to plant great aunt so-and-so's spuds." Truth be told the only thing that I'd be planting would be my backside in an armchair in front of a fire fuelled by peat that another person had cut.

Peat cutting could be a test of masculinity and strength. Pat Whitney, as I recall, was a peat bog hero. He could move along that three-foot-high work face like a demon, excavating a swathe about 50 yards long before even stopping for tea. What a man. But the legend of Pat Whitney apart, there's no room for nostalgia in this story. Every phase of the peat story was unpleasant; from excavation to the emptying of the ashes from the Rayburn range (they invariably blew back in your face as you took them to the ash drum). Even when the peat was burning and supposedly cooking one's dinner, it seemed to do so with a resentful attitude. "Why did you not leave me in the ground for another thousand years so that I could evolve into anthracite," a sod might have said. Indeed. How good it would have been to leave it in the ground. Peat may have been the fuel that made colonisation possible, but I for one am happy for it to be remembered largely by the name given to a public holiday.

Democracy allows opinions

I REFER to Paul Parkinson's letter which was published in last week's Penguin News and which was in response to my letter of September 25.

He is probably unaware of the fact that I, and other readers of Penguin News, did not have the opportunity to read the full text of the MLA's congratulatory message to Jeremy Corbyn until it was published in full in the edition of September 25 (My letter was written on the 20th).

In the edition of September 18, we were only able to read the words 'MLA's congratulate Jeremy Corbyn' and my letter was based on this headline.

I note that Mr Parkinson makes no attempt to refute my assertions that Jeremy Corbyn has for the past 33 years urged the British Government to engage in talks with the Argentine Government on the sovereignty issue. As far as Argentina is concerned this means only one thing; a transfer of sovereignty.

It is quite absurd for Mr Parkinson to suggest that I, "betray a level of personal spite for a man who I assume he has never met."

Farewell from the Reverend and one regret

THIS is the last edition of Penguin News I will be here for as I return to the UK next week, and it is with mixed feelings that I leave. I am disappointed that it has not worked out for my wife and I, but circumstances have not been in our favour and we have no real option except to leave. Happily I have been able to secure a new post in Norfolk starting next month. The year has been both rewarding and fascinating in these islands; we have enjoyed visiting both people and wildlife in camp and on a few of the smaller islands. Falklands' hospitality is second to none and my new parishioners will have some high standards to live up to! The role of Rector brings me into close contact with people at vulnerable and joyful times in their lives, and it has also been a privilege to lead the 1982 commemorations as well as the centenary of the Battle of the Falklands in addition to supporting families through bereavement and in the celebrations of life. Thank you for allowing me into the innermost parts of your lives.

There has been much to celebrate and much I will miss. But there is one particular issue I regret I have not had time to pursue, and that is the absence of religious studies in the schools. The decision taken some time ago to remove RE from the syllabus is disappointing and I suspect came about because of particular personalities and a misunderstanding of the purpose of RE. I am especially concerned that 16 year old students are sent to study in the multicultural soup of the UK with no understanding of world faiths where they will be mixing with people from around the world, some of whom may hold extreme views. A good RE syllabus will teach about all the major faiths. Whilst there may be horrible things done in the name of one religious group or another, we cannot deny that the ethical principles on which most of our society is based have come through the Christian faith and if we do not have at least a little understanding it becomes very difficult to accept others who are different, or understand why some people act in certain ways. I believe that the government is doing the young people of these islands an injustice by not offering a complete education.

Perhaps in the past there was a lack of understanding between teaching about faith and proselytising. If we teach music we do not expect students to become musicians, although some may, but all will have some understanding when they encounter music. When we teach RE we do not expect students to become religious, although some may, but all will have some understanding when they encounter religion. Surely even avowed atheist MLAs can understand the difference?

There are some difficult challenges ahead for you and I hope that the Falkland Islanders' traditional values along with a can-do spirit will stand you in good stead, and I wish you health, prosperity and independence in the years to come.

Marine spatial planning - ensuring the long term future of Falklands economy and beauty

Written by Dr Amélie Augé, spatial ecologist at SAERI, leading researcher and manager of the 2-year Darwin Plus-funded project 'Marine Spatial Planning for the Falkland Islands'.

The ocean around the Falkland Islands is very productive, hosts many marine species, and is still in excellent condition compared to most other parts of the world. The long-term economy of the Islands depends almost entirely on this prolific and healthy marine environment. Commercial fisheries and tourism are the two main current activities that, if managed sustainably and safely, will provide long-term economic security for the Islands. In comparison, oil exploitation will be a fixed-term economic benefit and is, by default, not sustainable because it relies on a non-renewable resource that will run out.

New and expanding marine activities should therefore be managed co-ordinately and soundly to ensure fishing and tourism can still thrive along with potential new sustainable activities. Marine Spatial Planning (MSP) is the process of developing a strategic plan to manage marine activities and ensure that economic, environmental, and also cultural values are included in the decision process.

The easiest description for MSP is, "land-use planning - for the sea". Most people understand the need for land-use planning. For instance, it avoids someone building a house and realising two years later that, next to it, was the only suitable plot for a sewage treatment plant. Planning is all about looking in to and thinking about the future. Keeping the marine environment healthy and safe is crucial for the long-term economy of the Falklands because it will keep providing fish and squids and habitats where they can reproduce and grow, but also because it will allow charismatic wildlife attracting tourists here to thrive. Though, it does not end there.

An often-forgotten link to the marine environment is cultural. Watching the waves, walking on the coast with the kids or the dog, admiring a sunset over the ocean, and visiting a historical wreck are examples of personal enjoyment the sea can bring to us. The beautiful areas that you cherish also require management to ensure that they are still there for future generations and stay clean. Finally, another benefit provided by efficient MSP is increased marine safety because the aim of MSP is, overall, to decrease the risks of maritime accidents by managing where things happen. Imagine if a boat grounded next to your favourite spot, threatening the life of the crew onboard, while having oil and rubbish cover the coast. Would you have thought that asking that boat to travel only a few kms further from the coast (taking that boat maybe an extra 30 mins) would have been too much then? Well, this is exactly why MSP is so important, because it provides the tools to FIG to think of future risks and act now to manage them so that no one has to be sorry in the future.

The Falkland Islands currently have no MSP in place at the exception of temporary fishing closure areas. With an increasing level of human activities in the ocean, in particular for oil exploration, but also for shipping traffic for instance, the need to identify areas sensitive to safety and environmental risks has been wisely identified as a priority by the current government. The Islands

Plan 2014-18 states as an action to "Implement appropriate [...] marine spatial planning frameworks to ensure the preservation and management of [...] marine environments of the Falkland Islands". In July 2014, a two-year project funded by Darwin Plus (a UK Government grant scheme for the UKOTs) was initiated at SAERI to produce scientific data and a best-practice framework needed for FIG to implement an MSP process here. The project webpage contains more details and reports you can download: <http://south-atlantic-research.org/research/current-research/marine-spatial-planning>. The project is conducted with a strong stakeholder engagement that has included public consultation and local workshops, meetings with MLAs and FIG staff, and a steering committee with local stakeholder representatives. The spatial data gathered and mapped so far are, for example, shipping traffic, military exercise areas, pleasure boating areas, and anchoring areas. Wildlife data are also gathered and analysed. Areas of potential conflicts are then identified by overlapping the spatial datasets, which can reveal where risks exist, for safety and/or environmental damage. All data, results of analyses and recommendations will be provided to FIG that will then decide what MSP will look like in the Falklands. SAERI provides objective scientific tools to FIG to help them make appropriate decisions for a sustainable future and ensure long-term economic wealth and clean enjoyable marine and coastal environments of the Islands.

An interesting example of established MSP can be found in the Shetland Islands where, for the last 12 years, a team based at the local university has worked on MSP providing scientific tools that helped the government managed new development, including for oil, aquaculture and marine wind turbines, by making informed decisions. You can check out their website here: <http://www.nafc.uhi.ac.uk/departments/marine-science-and-technology/strategy/marine-spatial-planning>.

For more information, questions or interest in being involved in MSP in the Falkland Islands, Dr Augé can be contacted at SAERI by phone 27374 or email AAuge@env.institute.ac.fk.

The map shows hourly locations of all ships and boats (grey dots) around the Falkland Islands over one year (May 2014 to May 2015). During that period, over 1,500 different boats used the Falklands' marine area, including 119 oil tankers. The data come from the AIS system run by Sure in Stanley (thanks to Mark Street for providing the raw data from this system).

Planting perfect potatoes

AN article by Ross James from the Department of Agriculture

Many folk will remember the great potato famine of 2014 when people were reduced to buying tins of potatoes after local stocks ran dry.

On a walk through Stanley or camp you will see many gardens and poly-tunnels with a crop of potatoes growing in them. Some varieties have been passed down through the generations and are revered and cultivated with much care.

Other potatoes fare less well. The reason some people have more luck with growing potatoes than others is partly down to the soil and what has been grown in it previously. Some potato pests and diseases such as Potato Cyst Nematode can lie dormant in the soil for several years, just waiting for a crop to infect.

If you have problems growing potatoes in your garden get in touch with the Department of Agriculture and we may be able to diagnose the cause by testing your soils and identifying any potato pests and diseases.

Some varieties of potato are more resilient to pests or climatic conditions than others and so it could be worthwhile looking at planting a different variety to suit your garden and your taste.

Many diseases have been unwittingly introduced by people planting ware, instead of seed potatoes. For those of you who don't know the difference (and you are not alone) ware potatoes are the type we buy to eat, and seed potatoes are the type we plant.

Ware potatoes can carry all kinds of diseases which might not make them bad to eat, but if released in to the soil could harm subsequent crops of potatoes and other vegetables.

Seed potatoes on the other hand, are produced in very controlled and clean environments from germ stock which is guaranteed free from diseases.

There are a variety of reasons why people choose to plant ware potatoes. It can be difficult to find seed potatoes for sale at the right times, and in the varieties you want locally, and until now it has been costly and complicated to import them.

To address this issue and to encourage people not to plant ware potatoes the Department of Agriculture has been working on a new simplified seed potato import protocol. Under the new system people can import up to 5kg of certified British seed potatoes simply by applying to the DoA for an import permit (costs £4) and ordering seed potatoes online or over the phone directly from the supplier. The potatoes MUST be certified British seed potatoes and additionally must have been produced under the 'Safe Haven' scheme and bear the red tractor logo. The potatoes should be sent by airmail directly to the DoA where a phytosanitary inspection will be performed to double check that they are pest and disease free, before they are passed on to the customer.

It is hoped that by simplifying this process and making the import of quality seed potatoes easy and cost effective, more people will be encouraged to do so, and fewer will resort to planting ware potatoes. The greater choice of seed potatoes will allow people to experiment with new varieties and find new strains which will thrive in our soils.

For full details, or to apply for a personal seed potato import permit, contact the Biosecurity Officer, Department of Agriculture on email biosecurity@doa.gov.fk or by calling 27355.

Expressions of Interest for Saint Representatives on Ascension and Falkland Islands

Enterprise St Helena is looking to appoint two individuals, one on Ascension and one in the Falkland Islands, who would be keen to act as a representative for the Saint population on each Island and would be pleased to receive nominations from St Helenians who wish to be considered for taking the role.

The representatives will be the point of contact for the dissemination of information by SHG/ESH and liaison officer for Saints on both islands between the St Helenian community and SHG/ESH. Brazil (slightly) off the beaten track Tips for your wallet and comfort

WHILE it seems a little callous to recommend a trip to Brazil simply because the state of the economy is good for the tourist's pocket it's far from the only reason you should visit, but bearing in mind how much it costs to leave Falklands' shores, a cheaper final destination should not be sniffed at.

I'm no expert on Brazil (who could be; it's enormous) but myself and my partner Jonny ventured a bit beyond the cities and sampled a variety of accommodation. So my aim is simply to offer a little information and a few tips particularly in relation to your pocket and ease of travel.

To suggest where you visit in Brazil would be a bit presumptuous; we based our trip around rock climbing (bouldering to be exact) and that dictated our choices. Your choices will be based around your interests, but I'll mention a little about the places we chose later.

First of all - yes it is cheap at the moment. I mean crazy cheap. We hired a car for around 21 days and it cost us about £7.50 a day. The car was ethanol fuelled and as such only cost £20 to fill up "completar," (apparently you don't say "fill her up chav"). It was something of a gutless little wonder, but did the trick, and despite a couple of shunts and plenty of slidey clay tracks (necessary for climbing trips) survived beautifully in one piece.

We hired the car online and also purchased excess insurance separately online. Although some of the other insurance websites offered slightly cheaper deals we opted for one with the Falklands on the pull-down menu for 'place of residence'; as although we could have purchased the insurance as if we were in the UK, we were concerned it would cause a problem if we needed to make a claim.

On the day we picked the car up, just outside São Paulo airport, the company did attempt to sell us more insurance, but we knew there was no need. The company only froze around R$ 700 (about £110) on the Visa card in case of repairs required. Despite returning it with a big dent in the door and some scratches, (most carefully disguised by a kind valet cleaner) they said the price of fixing it wouldn't cost anywhere near the £110.

Of course whether you actually choose to drive in Brazil is up to you. The highway between Belo Horizonte and São Paulo was absolutely fine with great scenery too (and I'm sure it's the same between all of the big cities) but everything else can only be described as terrifying.

Sometimes it's the state of the roads, sometimes it's the lack of a central reservation on a motor way, but always it's the driving style. Imagine a Grand Prix race... OK that's Brazilian driving. In the UK if you hog the middle lane you're an inconsiderate idiot. In Brazil it's the high speed survival lane where you can look out for unexpected incidents coming from either side.

We saw lorries flipped on to their sides, cars crushed under artics, and written off vehicles sitting sadly on roundabouts. Fifteen people were killed in a coach crash just outside the small town we were staying in the first week we were there.

Unless you're used to that kind of driving it's exhausting and intimidating. Not that I'm trying to put you off driving. Hmm.

Accommodation

Despite meaning primarily to stay in pousadas (guest houses), after a first week in a four star hotel for eight days at under £250 total (which included a buffet breakfast) we realised we had the option of ignoring the pousadas if we wished, and stay only in hotels.

However, eager to try out alternative accommodation we discovered the majority of pousadas were charming. An ensuite bedroom, a fridge, fantastic breakfast (some better than the hotels) and most with a small swimming pool and a bar: some for as little as £25 a night (although we usually opted for peace of mind) depending on location, facilities and time of year. In fact accommodation was so plentiful that when moving on we often didn't book the night's accommodation until the same morning.

Of course if you're young and unfussy there's the hostels and campsites which are also plentiful and will cost next to nothing.

Food

Food is an interesting subject and also very cheap. I'll be honest with you, while I loved Brazil, its scenery, its beaches, mountains and people, the restaurant food often seemed less than inspired (but then we were often a bit off the beaten track). I'm quite certain Brazil's top restaurants and steak-houses could blow your mind with exquisite nosh, but the average hotel and restaurant, outside of the cities, seemed to involve overcooking everything, which was odd bearing in mind their great reputation for barbecued food.

On the other hand, the buffet 'per kilo' restaurants, where your food is weighed before you are charged can be incredibly good value and you can pick and choose what you want to eat; and thus miss out the leather chicken filets. Prices can be as little as R$16 (£2.80 per kilo) but if you choose an expensive a la carte city restaurant where the practice has also become popular, it could cost around R$ 60 (£10.68 per kilo). It is usually priced per 100gms so you do not have to have the whole kilo.

Brazilian specialties we tried included the delicious fish stew, Moqueca, also the traditional black bean and meat stew, feijoada, and the spicy sausage was fabulous. Brazilians cook cakes as well as my late grandmothers, and don't get me started on the incredible variety of coffees. Jonny purchased a Bialletti stove top coffee pot because he couldn't bear to give up the coffee, and so far I've been treated every morning to Brazilian espresso.

I also fell in love with their national booze, Cachaca distilled from sugar cane.

Local beer and liquors are very reasonably priced. A Caipirinha (the famous Brazilian cocktail) in a good hotel in a town outside Belo Horizonte, was R$8 about £1.30 but in the pizza parlour in the same town only 65p. A bottle of beer was also usually around £1.30 in most places. While the favoured beer in the regions we were in was Brahma and Skol, we both preferred Bohemia with its slightly richer flavour.

In fact if you're a bit of a beer buff there are great choperias to try international ales. I discovered my favourite Pale Ale ever in São Paulo; from the USA brewery Sierra Nevada.

Communicating

We're all a little spoilt I think from our holidays in Santiago where every other person speaks English and where most of us can cobble together a bit of Spanish. But how many of you can speak Portuguese?

Learning a little bit of Portuguese before you go would be helpful; and get a good translation app for your mobile phone.

English is spoken a bit in the cities but not that much in the more rural areas. After countless confusing moments, I got in the habit of translating particular needs into some notes in my phone and then showing them to the people I needed to communicate with (not outside, but such as at the front desk). I did attempt to speak Portuguese but struggled with the pronunciation. Many Brazilians do understand a fair bit of Spanish though so we often defaulted to a language we named Spanglagueuse.

Some other tips

● If you're heading straight for the sticks from the airport bear in mind cash-points might be hard to find and some can't be used unless you have a Brazilian card. The exchange rate at the airport was good when we were there so get your Reals, if you want some, before you head off. Obviously you can use your Visa card pretty much everywhere but a bit of cash is handy.

● You can use the Chilean plug adaptor in most hotels (certainly in the states of São Paulo and Minas Gerais anyway). We also used a UK phone charger in the cigarette lighter socket in the hire car. A must for your mobile if you are using a TomTom app.

● Pull up at a fuel station and somebody will pump your fuel for you. You can use your card to pay usually without leaving your car if you wish.

● Despite websites claiming you can't hire a car with a debit card - you can. The Visa debit card is treated as a credit card. If they ask in the shop if your card is credit - say yes.

● Obviously carry your driving licence with you when driving and ensure you have your car registration documents to hand as the police do random checks (if you're stopped at a highway check point present registration documents first - it's probably what they want).

● Our most used apps were Brazil TomTom (but check out how to use it carefully before you go and don't trust it slavishly when you are there) Booking.com, TripAdvisor and Yelp.

● While we found restaurant staff occasionally impatient with us dumb foreigners, Brazilian people generally were incredibly honest, kind, helpful and friendly if we needed any kind of assistance.

● Tips are usually included in bills. Apart from that it's not a big tipping culture.

● Do your clothes shopping in Santiago on the way home, but get your gifts in Brazil; Cachaca, coffee, girlish accessories, Havanais flip flops and chocolate definitely.

● The water is soft, the hairdryers a bit flaky and the atmosphere a bit humid. Ladies plan your hairstyles accordingly (and gentlemen with big hair). Jonny couldn't really relate to my distress.

● Do not assume it's always hot and sunny - they have a rainy season remember.

● If you end up near Belo Horizonte, a visit to the stunning Inhotim gardens with its a world-class collection of contemporary art is a must.

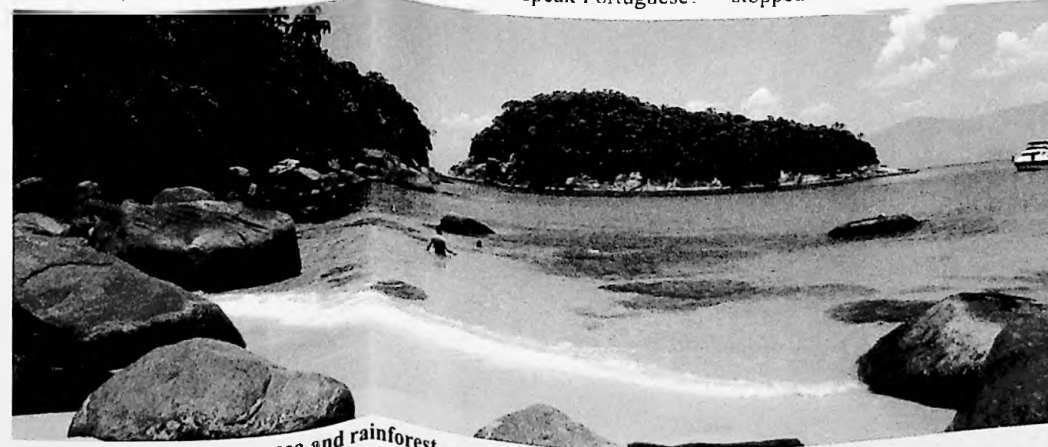

Where to go?
Wherever you want. Brazil has it

Pay by the kilo restaurants are brilliant and cheap and have healthy and vegetarian options

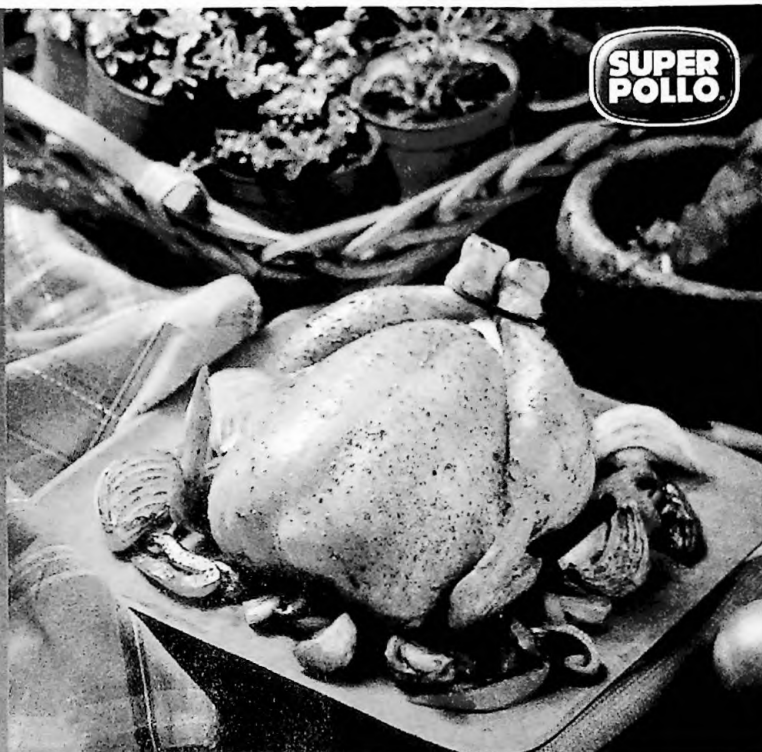

This guest house (pousada) in the beautiful and historic port of Paraty cost about £30 per night. It included a buffet breakfast, small pool and bar, parking and a large room with ensuite bathroom. A four star hotel outside of a city might cost exactly the same as we discovered in Sabara near Belo Horizonte - but prices change depending on the whether it is high season or not.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:
Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800... Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

WE all complain about the weather, and did we not all look forward to last Friday when we had been promised 10 degrees?

And yet not that many years ago we took temperatures of eighteen to twenty degrees at this time of year for granted.

Who knows, we may feel that again sometime, meanwhile we will grumble but get on with it.

When we travel, be it Chile or the UK I always look, with a certain amount of envy, at the beautifully manicured lawns in the parks, the very straight and upright trees and the wonderful gardens. But, I know that none of that is for me, to pop bought plants into carefully selected spots and know that they will thrive and do all they should is just, well, boring. Where is the challenge in that? Then too, the lovely parks and seating areas seem to be inviting you to sit and eat your picnic, sadly wasps and bees and many other pests, including human ones, can spoil all those activities too.

No, call me a stick in the mud (no pun intended) but there really is no place like home and this is the only place I would want to live in, regardless of the weather which, let's be honest could be a whole lot worse.

Having said all that, outdoor seeds remain safely within their fridge for the time being; what's the point of expecting seeds to germinate in snow or rain? They are more liable to rot than to come up.

Faced with yet more cold, windy and altogether miserable weather and with boredom and squabbles quickly setting in, I took the three kiddies here at the time to the peat shed. We were armed with pots of paints, stacks of paintbrushes and rags and, of course, all the garden ornaments which were really looking pretty tacky by this time.

We all turned to with a will, not to mention artistic aspirations, and in next to no time there was paint everywhere, some even managed to make it to the right places and, within the lines.

They do look fresh and better for their coat of paint, and the wonderful thing about outdoor ornaments is, they never need dusting. The delightful surprise last week of having an ornamental wheelbarrow dropped off on the gravel 'island' was the icing on the cake. This has now been placed on one of the borders with a couple of planted up pots in it, the pots look a little large for the barrow at the moment but when the trailing plants (hopefully) make their way over them it will look quite natural, thank you John, you know who you are.

Trying to get on with some more weeding the other day I found loads of dandelions growing amongst the roots of shrubs and other established plants. Quite impossible to remove without lifting the host plant. I found a squeeze bottle filled with weed killer (if a little soap remains as the wetting agent, good, if not, a very small amount should be added) is the perfect way to squirt the weed killer on the unwanted plant leaves without the danger of spraying the leaves of a treasured one, and much easier to control in a breeze.

It has been quite a busy time, all the tomato plants have now been pricked out and, as usual, more germinated than expected. They are now sitting in the front porch to catch as much light as possible, meanwhile, in the tunnels, the brassicas have also been pricked out, this time by one of the grand-children. Jasmine is in her element working with soil, it took her very little time to understand the need to hold the small plants by their leaves and not their stems and also to bury the stem up to the seed leaves, and make them root well in this way. In fact this applies to most plants and the tomatoes also need the chance to root as far up the stem as possible giving them more stability and better feeding chances.

Each time I feel that I really must get out there and prune the roses, some sixth sense tells me to wait, and sure enough, we either get a frost or very rough night straight after. However, the Buddlias did need to be trimmed back as well and this I have finally done.

The roses will get done this coming week, weather permitting, though as they are sprouting very well now they really need some attention in the way of tidying and feeding. That is becoming a must.

The rhubarb root which had been under a pot since much earlier in the season had some wonderful pink juicy shoots on it and I could not resist picking some stems the other day, wonderfully tender and tasty but not very numerous so I thought I would cook them to eat together with a rice pudding. A delicious combination.

Bill has cut the grass around the house, this has been a fairly high cut for the first one, as too short at this stage would probably chew the grass which is still quite damp. He also put up the trampoline net on that day and was later seen falling over when he had a surreptitious bounce.

The dahlia tubers have been put in a pot to grow, hopefully they will provide material for cuttings.

Recipes for the Falklands

Potato and bean tortilla

The hens are starting to lay again now and what better way to use up left overs than a tasty tortilla. This recipe uses raw potato, but it is equally good with cooked. Many different ingredients can be added and I particularly like a bit of spicy or chorizo sausage and some chili to spice this recipe up a bit.

Ingredients
500 g potatoes, peeled and chopped into small cubes
1 tin red kidney beans, drained and rinsed
2 onions, peeled and coarsely chopped

2 tbsp olive oil
4 eggs
100 ml milk
1 pinch chilli powder parsley, chopped

Method
Heat the oil in a large frying pan and fry the potato pieces for about 10 mins, turning them regularly. Season to taste and add the onions and beans and cook briefly. Mix the eggs and milk together and stir in the chilli powder. Pour the eggs mixture over the potatoes and cook, covered, over a low heat. Serve sprinkled with parsley.

Exercise Condor Yomp 2015

A GRUELLING 75 mile march 'Exercise Condor Yomp '15' will be undertaken by 12 personnel from Information Systems and Services (ISS) South Atlantic Islands, starting October 27 and finishing on October 31.

The intrepid group will yomp across East Falklands from Port San Carlos to Stanley, carrying approximately 20kg of kit.

The exercise loosely replicates the route and conditions undertaken by 3 Commando Brigade (3CdoBde) 33 years ago.

The exercise will promote unit cohesion, endurance and good soldiering skills and help the troops gain a greater understanding of the Falklands said a spokesperson for the expedition.

Money raised will go to support the Royal Signals Benevolent Fund (RSBF) and the South Atlantic Medal Association. The RSBF has made life better for many Signallers past and present as well as their dependants.

LCpl Blackburn from ISS said: "Taking part in an event such as this enables us to experience the terrain and challenging climate our forebears had to endure. It allows us to test our physical capabilities, along with the importance of working as a team in order to complete our target. The team has put in hours of training to make sure we are prepared and we are looking forward to getting stuck in and raising money for a good cause".

Collection buckets are going to be placed around MPC for people to give whatever change they can to support the charities and provide encouragement for those competing in the arduous event.

Donations can also be made electronically by going to www.just-giving.com/ex-condor-yomp15, or to donate directly to the charities Google Royal Signals Benevolent Fund or SAMAS2 and follow the links on their web-pages.

FLOORING & TILING

THE Decor Services Limited October Medal was played for on Sunday and the winner on the day with an excellent score of 67 was Tony McMullen.

Troyd Bowles recorded a 70 to take second place.

Despite fairly strong winds throughout the morning, scoring was reasonably good overall, with four players on 71 or better.

The Club Captain then presented Tony with a certificate of Honorary Life Membership, in recognition of his contribution to the club over many years.

Finally on the day, The Seniors trophy for the 2014/15 season was presented to Tim Bonner.

The club would like to thank Decor Services Limited for their ongoing support, and to let all our sponsors know that they are welcome to place advertising on the course during their sponsor days.

This Sunday (October 11) the club is holding a Three Ball Team Alliance stableford competition.

Salvage rules apply to Argentine yacht

RULES of salvage will apply to the Falklands' Patrol Vessel's recovery of the abandoned Argentine yacht La Sanmartiniana, Falkland Islands Government (FIG) Attorney General Peter Judge confirmed to Penguin News yesterday.

He also said if the vessel is unclaimed it will ultimately become the property of the Crown.

Asked if FIG will be entitled to a reward commensurate with the value of the yacht if the owners wish it returned, Mr Judge said: "No. We cannot currently quantify the amount but the Government (Receiver of Wrecks) will be able to recover all fees and costs and the rules of salvage will also apply."

La Sanmartiniana was towed to Stanley by Falklands Patrol Vessel Protegat late last week and is now under the jurisdiction of Receiver of Wrecks Mick Floyd. It is his job to assemble "the jigsaw, establish the owner and go down the proper route," said Mr Floyd.

He said it was likely to be a lengthy process.

The yacht which belongs to the Argentine Peronist political group La Campora headed by Argentine President Cristina Kirchner's son Maximo Kirchner, was found on October 7, in the Falklands Outer Conservation Zone (FOCZ) 143 miles from the Islands.

Late that day FPV Protegat picked up an unidentified radar target in the south of the FOCZ. On closing on the target it turned out to be the yacht La Sanmartiniana. The vessel was reported as abandoned on September 17, in the vicinity of Isla de Los Estados (Argentina). It had reportedly suffered mechanical problems.

The nine crew had been safely transferred to a fishing vessel.

Protegat towed the yacht to Stanley where it was tied up and sealed at the east end of the floating port FIPASS.

A FIG press release noted on October 8: "Leaving it to drift would result in it continuing to be a hazard to navigation and maritime activities in the conservation zone."

Penguin News was told the following day that the vessel looked dirty and worse for wear but intact, although Mr Floyd said this week that it could not properly be described as seaworthy.

He explained that as Receiver of Wrecks he was obliged to follow the UK's Merchant Shipping Act 1894 adopted by the Falkland Islands Government.

His objectives under the statutes of the Act comprise the preservation of the property and the restoration of that property to the owners, along with processing information with respect to the wreck.

The yacht is moored safely at the east end of FIPASS, "secured and sealed," in order to protect the property, and all items of value have been removed and are locked away under Mr Floyd's control.

It was scheduled that the yacht be examined yesterday (Thursday) by a Biosecurity Officer and the water inside pumped into containers. Mid week it was still considered unsafe to walk around.

Because the vessel was sealed it was unknown whether the yacht captain's claim of mechanical failure was correct.

Harbour Master Malcolm Jamieson commented that he understood the owners had made some indications that they wished the yacht returned to them. He said: "How and when this happens remains unclear..." and reminded that it was under the jurisdiction of Mr Floyd.

The yacht still belongs to the rightful owners, it is up to them to issue guidance or instructions as to how they would want to have their property returned to them, he also indicated.

Expanding on his original answer Mr Judge told Penguin News: "In relation to the wreck, the salvage 'rewards' and the Receiver's costs, these will be determined in accordance with the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 (in its application in the Falkland Islands) and sections 224 and 255 and schedule 11 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 by which the Falkland Islands complies with the International Salvage standards set out in the 1989 International Convention on Salvage."

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

WHILE I don't believe in karma or fate any of those other odd superstitions I think we might accurately tag the Sanmartiniana yacht saga as, at the very least, ironic.

The reasons why are of course pretty clear to Falklands residents already, but an ungraciously gleeful part of me feels obliged to out line them on paper.

An Argentine yacht, under the authority of La Campora - a political party headed by the Argentine President's son Max Kirchner - which recently spent time sailing the Argentine coast as part of a propaganda project about sustainable use and sovereignty in the South Atlantic, is abandoned by its crew and left to float around. Its owners subsequently make vague noises about it maybe having erm sunk or erm something (not the most environmentally friendly approach to a missing vessel) only for it to be rescued by the Falkland Islands Government from causing a shipping hazard and/or causing contamination.

That's right Max, the people your mum says are in the process of violating the South Atlantic natural resources and potentially contaminating the environment.

And on the matter, how has it slipped her mind that Argentina both fish, and drill for oil in the same seas that we do?

So what's next. Well much as most people (including some very anti-Kirchner Argentines on my Twitter feed) would like to send it back to the owners in a small ash smudged box, being the awfully British and well behaved lot that we are, the next steps will be dictated entirely by our laws.

Still I'm thinking at the very least we can reasonably hope that salvage statutes will decree that a sheepish looking individual must eventually turn up with a brown paper bag full of cash (no pesos thanks) and a mumbled thanks in exchange for their grubby vessel.

HAVING sent to print the letter on page 7 by Ernest Spencer we then, a little too late, thought it prudent to ask FIG if it was in fact correct that Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn had 'snubbed' the MLAs at the recent Labour Conference. We were assured that party leaders did not normally visit the Falklands stand, apart from once by Mr Cameron on the occasion of the Falklands 25th year at the conference.

Still I suppose it might have been nice.

"The method of calculation and determination of the level of fees, charges and 'rewards' is, unsurprisingly quite complex and I am afraid there is no easy rule of thumb for determining what these will be at the time a vessel is reclaimed (if indeed it is)" said Mr Judge.

Asked if the legal procedure would be costly to FIG, Mr Judge said: "There is no legal procedure in terms of court type proceedings. There is a procedure set out in the legislation which will, if the vessel is claimed, ensure FIG recovers any costs. If the vessel is unclaimed it will ultimately become the property of the Crown."

According to the Buenos Aires press last week the vessel had meant to challenge Falklands' authorities by sailing into the Islands waters, covered in Argentine flags as part of a political stunt a few weeks away from the presidential election on October 25.

Falklands is best wildlife and nature destination

THE Falkland Islands have won the award for 'Best Destination for Wildlife and Nature' in the Selling Travel Magazine, Agents Choice Awards 2015.

This is the second year in a row that the Falkland Islands has won the award.

Other destinations nominated were Alaska, Azores, The Galapagos Islands, Ecuador, Botswana, and South Africa.

The competition in the category was high and more than 1,000 travel agents worldwide voted in this year's awards, making it the most successful awards programme for Selling Travel Magazine to date.

Mr Mason congratulated everyone working in the tourism industry in the Falklands: "This award is for you and something to be very proud of. Well done. The Falkland Islands are a 'must see to believe' destination," he added.

Speed limit and parking regulations

A REGULATION has been approved to extend the Stanley boundary to include the Sapper Hill housing area so that the 25 mph speed limit will apply.

An amendment to the Ross Road Clearway was also approved at this week's Executive Council meeting making it legal for vehicles needed for maintenance work to park there. A bundle of other recommendations related to parking around the I/J School, restricted parking on Barrack Street and speed limits in car parking areas were deferred for further public consultation. Members also raised the desirability of applying 10mph speed limits in Mink Park and Sapper Hill housing areas. This will be included in the public consultation.

Storage costs mount on confiscated fish

STANDING Finance Committee (SFC) has approved a further £100,000 be allocated to the Fisheries department due to the ongoing costs of storing fish seized from fishing companies which are in the process of being prosecuted for breaching their licences.

In July, fish and squid with an estimated value of around £1.5 million was confiscated and since this date the Government has been paying South American Atlantic Services SAAS for its storage.

Director of Natural Resources John Barton told SFC on Wednesday that it was currently costing £36,000 per month for the storage of the 39 containers holding some 1,000 tonnes of fish.

It was noted that some negotiations have taken place with the fishing companies in order to seek an agreement on the early sale of the fish, but it was not thought there would be any change in the situation until at least the end of November or when the cases were resolved.

The defendants are due in court to answer the relevant charges on November 19.

The trawlers involved are Playa Pesmar Uno and Playa Pesmar Dos which are owned by Pesquerias Marinenses SA and operate under the agency of Seafish, with the third vessel Figaro is owned by Freimar SA with Sullivan Shipping as agent.

If the Crown is successful in any prosecution which may be brought, reimbursement may be sought for any costs of storage. If there is no prosecution, or the case fails for any reason, then the cost of storage will fall to FIG.

Chief Accountant Daniel Heath said in his paper to SFC that there was in fact a provisional sum in the 2015/16 estimates to contribute to the running costs of SAAS. He said there was the potential that some or all of the storage costs could be offset by a reduction in payment by FIG to the organisation.

Falkstock 2016

THE third Falkstock music festival hosted by cruise company Polar Latitudes will be held on March 14, in the Town Hall.

This has been a popular event in previous years and is a way of celebrating the end of the tourist season with passengers, crew and onshore industry workers on Sea Explorer's final visit to Stanley.

If you would like to get involved with the event please contact Sullivan Shipping's Tourism Assistant Ariane Goss on 22626 email tourism@sullivan-shipping.com

Change and improvement afoot at the Leisure Centre

JUST getting her feet under the desk as Change and Improvement Manager at the Stanley Leisure Centre is Jemma Appleby from the UK. She is not here just to "plug holes, but to get under the surface in order to make sustainable changes," she told Penguin News this week.

The post is for a six month period and while Ms Appleby's main focus is to change and improve things at the Leisure Centre, she also has a wider remit to look at the long term general activity provision across the community.

After her first full week in the post, she said first impressions were that there was a lot of work to do, but she had initially been exploring the historic work on the leisure centre and would provide a full assessment and recommendation report in a few weeks' time.

She said she did not want to, "just scratch the surface," she also recognised that everything that needed doing would not happen within six months and she would have to leave recommendations and a longer term vision for sport and leisure to be accessed and enjoyed in the Islands as a whole, not just Stanley.

"I don't know all the answers yet, but I want to find them," she said, adding that she had a background of working to a high standard with high expectations and wanted to make recommendations that would work in the long term.

Ms Appleby's previous role was National Development Manager for National Governing Body, Welsh Netball and she comes with a vast experience in sport and leisure centre development and management.

The facilities at the Leisure Centre are of a satisfactory standard, she said, but there was a "lack of identity," with the setup which needed to be addressed, and with work scheduled to start on upgrading the gym/cardio suite there was an opportunity to readdress the balance and focus of the centre as a whole.

"The centre currently has a heavy focus on the swimming pool which is great, but we must also remember there are a lot of others who would like to use the full array of facilities. Those areas must also have focus, customer care and attention."

Ms Appleby said she sympathised with the community that the pool had been shut previously for such a long time and was due to shortly close again for a couple of weeks, and that she understood people's frustration.

She said she would like to be open and honest with the public and wanted to hear views which could contribute to her review.

Swimming pool closure

It was announced on Friday that the swimming pool would be closed from October 20, for two weeks to enable essential works to be carried out on the pool-side changing rooms.

This initially caused concern among regular users and parents as it encompassed half term period and the holiday programme, however staff assured that arrangements would be made for the programmed pool events and that it would be open in time for the triathlon.

Director of Central Services Matt Bassford who had the misfortune to inherit the project said that the current fibre glass wall covering dotted with duct tape to cover the holes and cracks, would be replaced with large vinyl tiling in both the mens and ladies changing rooms.

Mr Bassford said there were still a number of problematic issues surrounding the swimming pool, but he preferred to look at them within a wider picture rather than try to find short term solutions.

On the bright side however the floor space in the gym/cardio suite is to be doubled with the construction of a mezzanine floor and there are new machines already in house to replace and add to the existing ones. The present cardio suite will close at the end of November or early December and will reopen on a date to be confirmed in January. Mr Bassford said that when it reopened there would be more focus on best use of the equipment with inductions and advice from staff.

Other changes afoot will be at management level with the current manager Abbie Heathman moving to a new post in the private sector. Mr Bassford wished her well in her next role. "Abbie has been tremendously committed to the Leisure Centre in the years she has worked there – and there are many people in the community who will have learned to swim under her expert tutelage. I will be trying to recruit a new manager very soon to continue the good work Abbie has done."

GARRY 'Boss' Thomas and Cress Josue were married at Christchurch Cathedral on Saturday surrounded by family and friends. Canon David Roper performed the ceremony while Boss was supported by best man Adrian Minnell.

After arriving in style in decorated Land Rovers Cress was escorted to the altar by Luis Josue and Nelrose Poole.

A meal of Filipino and Saint Helenian food was enjoyed by guests at the FIDF Hall followed by a reception and dance.

Thank you from 'Mr and Mrs Boss' on page 18

MLA Jan Cheek
shares a glimpse into
her working week

MY apologies to the people attending the public meetings in camp expecting to see all MLAs. As you may have heard that MLA Roger Edwards and I have been delayed several days by the cancellation of the air bridge on which we were due to fly. Unfortunately my warning to avoid flying with me if you hope to arrive on time is well founded and at least one in three flights I book seem to be delayed or diverted - I try not to take it personally!

If the amount of leaflets and other items we gave away (pins, pens, bookmarks, notebooks and cotton carrier bags) is a mark of success then we've had a most successful conference season as we had run out of many and were having to 'ration' others for the last two days in Manchester. Finally I had only a part box of leaflets to pack for return. The bags were a particularly popular item as the 5p charge for plastic bags in large shops, already in force in most of the rest of the UK, is now also applied in England so we can assume that dozens of shoppers now carry maps of the Islands as they shop. It is to be hoped that Falklands information, pens and notebooks will now be reminding people of our story. The stand was busy to the last minutes before I had to bolt to catch my train.

Memorable moments included meeting a man who came to our stand in Brighton to tell me I'd changed his mind by giving him factual information last year. It was also interesting to meet a number of on line Penguin News readers who keep themselves very well informed about the Islands. I regularly get feedback on this column from overseas. Others follow Falklands tweets and unfortunately some quoted one or two of the less measured ones that could potentially damage the valuable cross party support that we strive to maintain.

Most entertaining was again watching Ms Castro, possibly in her last weeks as Argentina's ambassador to the UK, trying to avoid us at the international reception in Brighton. An ambassador from another South American country standing nearby also appeared amused by her desperate antics.

Family Law Review - Relationships

THE third in a series of articles relating to the Family Law Review public consultation.

The government is progressing the modernisation of family law. To do this in its entirety would be a mammoth task, so the public's views about priorities are important. The work of the Family Justice Review Working Group last year focussed on early changes which could positively affect children, families and relationships. The public consultation is now underway, closing date November 5, and everyone is invited to complete a questionnaire to feed in your views.

The law concerning relationships affects many if not most people. Marriage and divorce are subjects which touch most people's lives. In the census of 2012, 46% of residents of the Falklands were married and 6 per cent were divorced. How long should people have to wait after marrying before petitioning for an early divorce? Under present Falkland Islands law, three years must pass before a party to the marriage can apply to the court for a divorce. This might be considered a long time for people who realise they have made a mistake but are unable to conclude matters, including financial matters, through divorce.

Before changes in the law in 1937 in the UK, adultery had to be proved before a divorce could be granted. This led to couples colluding and faking hotel bills to provide 'evidence' of adultery which had never happened! Other reasons for divorce, such as desertion and cruelty, were then introduced. A built-in delay of three years was introduced, to stop divorce being made 'too easy'. New law in 1973 introduced one ground for divorce: the 'irretrievable breakdown of marriage'. In order to prove that breakdown, evidence had to be produced of one of five criteria: unreasonable behaviour (the most common basis), adultery, desertion, two years' separation with consent of both parties or five years separation if one party does not agree. A delay to divorce could have been done away with altogether, because it was not required legally, however it was decided in 1984 that a period on one year would be retained before a marriage could be dissolved, enabling purposeful reflection, obtaining access to help if required and consideration as to whether the marriage can be saved.

There is no need for the Falklands to follow the law development of the UK or anywhere else. Is there a need for any delay at all? Should there be 'no fault' divorce and is there any need for accusations of e.g. unreasonable behaviour, if two people agree they want to divorce? Petty allegations are often dreamt up simply because people want to divorce, but have not lived apart for two, or five, years. Sometimes accusations do nothing but make any amicable agreement about children and finances harder to achieve. There is very little in the way of mediation on the islands to assist separating couples.

Is the law of marriage and partnerships as a whole keeping step with the needs, wishes and interests of society? Should there be civil partnerships and same sex marriage? The Constitution states that no actions by virtue of any written law or performance of any public office shall discriminate against people on the grounds of their sexual orientation. There is no Falklands law allowing for civil partnership. The Marriage Ordinance makes no mention of same sex couples.

The legal rights of unmarried partners are unequal to those of married people in some areas of the law. Should they be made equal throughout?

Civil partnerships were introduced in other countries to give same sex partners most of the rights afforded to married people. Later, same sex marriages were introduced into law in many countries and are now widely available in the UK, USA, Canada, New Zealand, Ireland and most of western Europe, but elsewhere are still the subject of keen political debate, as in Australia.

Pitcairn with a population of 48 has just legalised gay marriage even though it has no gay residents. The feeling was simply that they ought to keep up with the times - so why not?

Is it necessary to have civil partnerships at all, if there is gay marriage? If so, should it also be open to heterosexual couples who do not want to marry or even people who are not in an intimate relationship, e.g. siblings? Please give your views.

Devni's dream is winning poem

FOLLOWING an assembly on World Literacy Day, led by Zoe Gill, a writing competition with the title 'Dreams' was launched for all students at the Community School. Miss Gill said: "There was strong competition and beautiful pieces of work were produced in the form of both short stories and poems."

Students from Years 7-10 entered and the winning entry came from Year 10 student Devni Peramunugamage.

She said: "Devni's poem stood out with its extended metaphor and beautiful imagery, and will haunt me for years to come. She is an extremely talented writer."

Devni won £30 worth of FIC vouchers and you can enjoy her poem below.

Dream

A dreamer
lost in the clouds searches for a ladder down

One day
Narrow and cracked.
But it will hold,
he hopes.
But before he takes his second step it breaks and he falls.
It is a long way down, longer
than he expected, and his landing is harder, harder
than he expected

He stands.
"Oi! Get out the way!"
calls a sergeant, his moustache perfectly trimmed.
So the dreamer steps aside to watch the elephants march with pride, their trunks gleaming.

A siren goes off in B flat minor.
Mice scurry to their underground homes, just escaping from the hungry birds searching for prey
The siren changes key.
It never stops.

A dreamer looks at the clouds and searches for a ladder
up.

James leads FC Watch Group members in a ditch clean

A Sunday spring clean for Stanley

THE second Clean Up Day took place on Sunday with an equally enthusiastic group taking to the streets of Stanley as they did last year.

Environmental Officer Nick Rendell said the equivalent of seven skips of rubbish was removed from the streets and other public areas.

An estimated 70 to 80 people took part in the clean up with a prompt 9am start and groups dispersed in rapid time to central, East and West Stanley, as well as the Canache-Surf Bay road.

spoke to out and about on the day seemed unanimous in their comments that they had picked up far too many cigarette ends, but it would seem that there were some younger litter bugs around too with sweet wrappers being evident in areas near the schools.

Mr Rendell said that earlier in the week the Police had taken a team of prisoners to clean the ditches around the Lady Elizabeth area which had been very successful with a full skip-load of plastic collected.

A pile of metal from Hookers Point was also removed. "All in all it was a very good effort," said Mr Rendell.

MLA Michael Poole who has responsibility for environmental issues within his portfolio and who was the driving force behind the Clean Up campaign last year said the campaign would be reviewed at the next Environment Committee meeting.

The tidying up of larger items will also continue and he reminded that the Public Works Department stand ready to assist if needed whether in Stanley or Camp.

Anyone needing assistance can call the department to be added to the list.

Argentine yacht best approach

LET us hope FIG in the form of Secretariat/AG's Chambers and administration in general keep their hands out of this event - otherwise it will just cost us taxpayers tens of thousands if they meddle. Just leave it totally to the normal system of lawyers and the salvage court and those concerned.

Disappointed at pool closure

AS the parent of two FICS students, both keen swimmers and members of Stanley Swimming Club, I am extremely disappointed that FIG has decided to close the swimming pool throughout the whole of half term. This appears to run completely contrary to FIG's aspirations to promote healthy lifestyles, encourage participation in sport, and support families.

The Islands Plan 2014-18 promotes a vision of a nation where, "everyone in the community should be encouraged to live a healthy, independent and fulfilling life," and states that Government will, "place renewed emphasis on health prevention and promote healthy and active lifestyles to reduce the requirements for costly treatments (at home and overseas) in the longer term."

Closing the swimming pool during school holidays, at a time when children young and old take to the water, can only run contrary to our elected government's stated aim.

What message is FIG sending out to our children and young people about the importance (or not) of sport, if one of our key sporting facilities is closed during school holidays? The swimming squad at the recent Islands Games were excellent ambassadors for the Falklands, despite having to struggle against the pool having been closed for almost a year for renovations.

Andy Brownlee gave an inspiring talk at the FICS Prize Giving in August about the links between sport, physical and mental well-being and academic achievement. It is unfortunate that FIG's decision makers were not present to hear his words.

Safeguarding children in general, and child care in particular, has been a hot topic for some time now.

However, it is notable that very little has ever been done by FIG to acknowledge the weaknesses in provision for older children, both at the upper end of the IJS and in FICS. This can be broken down into several problems: the closure of school premises over lunch-times, and the failure to match school lunch-times with standard working hours; the need for child-care for older IJS students before and after school; and the provision of facilities during school holidays for FICS students.

As a parent, I actively encourage my children to visit the Leisure Centre during school holidays, whether it is to play racquet sports or swim. It is warm and dry, and enables them to have fun and socialise with their peers in a safe environment, in addition to promoting a healthy lifestyle and a participation in sport. It also helps give structure to their day, as school holidays can drag for those stuck in Stanley while parents work. Since Leisure Centre staff will not be needed on pool-side, perhaps they could organise sessions aimed at FICS students in activities such as rounders, netball, basketball, hockey or cricket.

It was notable that 24 hours after FIG released a press release warning the public about the forthcoming swimming pool closure, the Leisure Centre had not yet put up any signs to notify or apologise to those visiting the premises, nor had they mentioned it in the very helpful weekly email they send out with opening hours which was circulated just minutes ahead of the press release.

What does this say about commitment to customer service?

Finally, if the Public Accounts Committee have not got the swimming pool on their agenda, I hope they add it soon.

A three month closure because of broken tiles which stretched to eleven months and involved a new pool lining system, new water treatment systems, the installation of a sauna and jacuzzi, and a complete refurbishment of the changing rooms; then a changing room ceiling which fell down less than a year after reopening; and now a two week closure 16 months after reopening because the shower areas have 'deteriorated in the past few months'.

Inhabitants are most valuable

THE most valuable for the South Atlantic Isles - of course, we are talking about their inhabitants. We can see, today, that most of the countries in our continent are beginning to say that, "the Malvinas issue" is not only Argentina's problem but also South America's. Generally speaking, we agree with this statement, but discrepancy emerges the moment we want to define categorically, "what is this issue?" The official position thinks it is territorial integrity. We promote "human integration." The former is a mean and somewhat arguable position; the latter, moreover, flies high above and has universal reach. Besides, this attitude will benefit all of us.

While their inhabitants are beginning to acknowledge, with perhaps certain humility, that they too are part of 'The Great Family of South America', the older members, who already have two centuries of organised life, have to recognise that they must open the doors to the youngest. Based on nothing more than coincidence, "We are all South Americans," they will say. The differences that exist today would become internal issues that will have to be solved by seeking consensus among the parties involved, obviously, not affecting the achieved integration.

Considering that in the future Parlasur - a sole parliament for the whole of South America which will start functioning in a few years' time - will deal with such subjects as problems between frontiers, it would be convenient to find the way so that the Islanders are represented.

We are referring to those who were born there, many of whom gave life to the south for several generations.

It is said that intelligent creativity knows no limits. With this gesture, the process of de-colonisation would be strengthened, in spite of the fact that many would rather ignore that in Malvinas/Falklands it has already started.

Support for Patrick's letter

I WOULD like to express my support for the letter you published from Patrick Watts MBE with regard to his opposition to the Election of Jeremy Corbyn as leader of the Labour Party given Mr Corbyn's express support for the Argentine position over the Falklands.

I personally thought that congratulations from MLAs to Mr Corbyn was somewhat premature and inappropriate given his support for negotiation of joint administration of the Islands with Argentina. Particularly so now we know that he snubbed the FI MLAs on the Falklands' stand at the recent party conference.

This was quite predictable given his history of support for Argentina and has left the MLA's in an embarrassing position with regard to ever meeting with him. Did he even reply to their letter?

I am a lifetime supporter and activist for the Labour Party and whilst I have long since given up my membership of the party I am a registered supporter who certainly did not vote for Jeremy Corbyn.

My strong hope is that Mr Corbyn will be ousted by party stalwarts before the next election takes place.

Multicultural event thanks

ON Saturday the Multicultural Group held its second event this year.

The event aimed to use the Museum, food, games and music to show the cultural diversity within our community.

We were staggered by the number of people who attended, not just to sample the huge range of food available, but also to visit the Museum, watch the various National dances performed and take part in a great family dance to finish off the day.

Our group would like to thank all those people who cooked food for the day or helped in any other way to make the day such a success.

We would also like to thank those businesses who made donations: FIMCO, Tasty Treats, the Waterfront, the Narrows, Nigel Bishop for the bouncy castle, the Malvina House Hotel, Shortys Diner, FIC Ltd, the fantastic Helen who did all the face painting, Mark Harrington the famous magician, the MPA Dog Section and all the bands, DJs and dancers. Also FIDF and the museum for the use of the premises.

The aim of every event we organise is not to make money but merely to cover our costs.

We decided on this approach so as to encourage as many people as possible to attend, especially those with families who might have been deterred by a £2 or £3 entry fee during the day.

The kind donations we received during the day, more than £1,100, did indeed cover our costs and left us with a small sum of money to use towards the next event.

Finally, we were repeatedly asked during the day to make this an annual event and that is something we will be discussing at our next committee meeting

Marine Spatial Planning

The cultural values of our coasts

BY Denise Herrera, Research assistant at SAERI, leading the study on 'Mapping Cultural Coastal Values' as part of the Darwin Plus-funded project 'Marine Spatial Planning for the Falkland Islands' and supervised by Dr Amélie Augé (SAERI) and Dr Kate Sherren (Dalhousie University, Canada).

It probably goes without saying, but the coastline is likely to be important to you. Or so an ongoing study part of SAERI's Marine Spatial Planning project is trying to establish.

There are many reasons why a place might be important to you; you have memories there, or it has important historical artefacts such as a shipwreck, one that is close to your heart, or it could simply be the place where you like taking your dog for a walk or enjoying the sunset over the sea. These intangible 'values' are what we call cultural values. They are what shape the community and give it an identity. What would the Falklands be without the hoards of people who, each mid-winter, take to Surf Bay for what can only be identified as an act of madness?

This study is focussed on the coasts and is part of the Marine Spatial Planning project, developing management tools for the sea, introduced in last week's edition. This study is not only important to fill a gap in knowledge but also to ensure your personal values are included alongside economic and environmental values. Cultural values are often overlooked by decision makers, but should be equal to other values when making any decision: would you want a waste storage facility next to your favourite beach?

The Falklands has not only got a unique seascape and coastline, but also a unique community - you. We can easily map fishing activities or the location of a penguin colony, but mapping cultural values is more challenging. This is where we need the input from the community. With members of the community pointing out their favourite areas and explaining why these areas matter to them, we can create a series of maps highlighting the areas that contain key cultural values, to be incorporated in Marine Spatial Planning.

The study is now underway; many people living in Camp have already been able to participate during field-trips, but we are now looking for participants from Stanley (or more people from Camp who happen to be in Stanley in the next few weeks). You will simply be asked to highlight your top 15 favourite places along the coast on a map and say why they are important to you; participation is anonymous and voluntary. Surveys are done in person and take about 30 minutes. If you are over 18, have lived here for more than five years and would like to take part please contact Denise on 61090 or e-mail dherrera@fisheries.gov.fk to arrange a time. For more information about this study or the Marine Spatial Planning project, please visit the SAERI website.

Cultures in the Falklands combine in delightful day long display

THE multicultural event at the Museum and FIDF Hall was well attended and heralded a good day out by those who enjoyed a wide range of events and culinary treats.

A traditional Falklands smoko kicked off the day at the Museum where visitors were also able to view horse gear made by John Hobman of Goose Green who is one of only a few Islanders who still practice the skill using cured bullock hide and leathers. More hand made horse gear by Wester Paul Peck was on display at the FIDF Hall later.

Local historians Sally Blake and Joan Spruce shared their wealth of information about Island life and social history and architecture with the aid of displays and photographs, and all was washed down with tea, coffee and a wide selection of the cakes and bakes regularly blamed along with Falklands hospitality for adding a stone in weight in a very short time to newcomers to the Islands.

In the afternoon it was time for the cultural diversity of the Islands to be celebrated with more food from the Saint Helena, Chilean and Filipino communities as well as some of the good old Falklands staples from the pre-supermarket days.

Smoked Falkland trout, lamb tongue pate, Upland Goose sausages and salt beef were just some of the tasty treats sampled by many for the first time.

The day continued with fun and games for all the family and eased into a musical evening with entertainment provided by local musicians and demonstrations of dances from the various cultures, culminating in a lively dance enjoyed by everyone.

This was the second event organised on the back of an initiative by MLA Barry Elsby who has responsibility for culture within his portfolio to demonstrate how diverse Falklands culture is.

Although the events on Saturday were free, more than £1,100 was collected through generous donations which covered costs and left a small amount over to be used towards future events.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800 - Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RIF may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system: Telephone: 28100, E-mail: inspector@police.gov.fk or fax: 28110

Introducing the new Rural Energy Partnership Development Scheme.

What are the objectives of the scheme?

The objective of this scheme is to work in partnership with Camp residents and businesses to install innovative energy technologies for the generation and usage of energy.

How does the partnership work?

The RDS will provide 50% of the installation cost of the innovative energy technology, which will be owned by the partner, however the output data of the energy technology will be provided to the RDS for the first 2 years. This data will be made public to help others in the Falkland Islands understand the cost-effectiveness of the technology or design.

Who are eligible for the scheme?

The RDS is looking for partners based in Camp who can demonstrate a business case and the enthusiasm to trial the cost-effectiveness of a project. A business will be given priority if it can show how the project will reduce the reliance on fossil fuels to enable the business to grow and improve quality of life.

What technologies and/or designs are eligible?

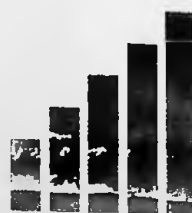

Solar pv, solar thermal or any technology or design dealing with reducing the demand for energy. This list is indicative, any other idea that meets the objective will be considered under this scheme

If I am interested what do I do next?

If you have an idea of what technology you would like to install or would like to have a talk about this scheme please contact the Rural Energy Advisor, Andrew Crighton, Tel, 27211, Email ruralenergy@fidc.co.fk

Golf

Stuart, Kevin and Tim form an alliance

STANLEY Golf Club sponsored the Three Ball Alliance which was played on Sunday in reasonably good conditions, although scores were influenced by some fairly strong wind at times.

A field of 17 players took to the course with the odd number meaning that Mike Summers' card was used by two different teams on the day.

Players were joined by two guests from the oil industry; Ian, who is a fully qualified PGA Golf Professional and Stuart, who went on to partner Kevin Clapp and Timmy Bonner in winning the competition on the day.

Our congratulations therefore to Stuart, Kevin and Timmy on their win.

The next competition is the Fortuna Limited event to be held on Sunday (October 18). Members look forward to a good turnout for what is traditionally a very popular event.

YEAR 9 Falkland Islands Community School students were put through their paces in their mini-enterprise 'Dragons Den' earlier this week. School teacher Sean Moffatt produced some very worthy dragons in the form of Noble Energy's Richard Winkelman and Lifestyles' Angela and Jimmy Moffatt

RFIP up to full strength

AFTER many years the Royal Falkland Islands Police (RFIP) finally has a full complement of permanent staff.

This follows the arrival on contract of PC Darren Doyle reported Chief of Police Superintendent Len McGill at Wednesday's Police Committee meeting.

He said that this had not only allowed for training courses to take place, but also a number of officers had been able to take leave locally and overseas. Supt McGill said this had had a good affect on his officer's morale, health and wellbeing.

PC Richard Moorhouse had his contract extended for a seventh and final year said Supt McGill and he was also happy to report that Sgt Paul McDade had achieved a merit on a Computer/Malware Forensic Investigator Course undertaken in the UK. This was particularly notable he said as Sgt McDade had joined the course armed only with his self-taught skills and was up against other officers with up to eight years experience.

PC Lee Martin had completed his Unarmed Defensive Tactics Instructors course while PC Nina Tanner had undertaken a Hostage Negotiators course. While this may seem unnecessary within the community, Supt McGill said these skills were also useful in domestic violence situations.

Also back up to full complement are the speed guns, just back from being calibrated in the UK. While the committee noted that it was not satisfactory to have both guns out of action at the same time, Supt McGill said he planned to send one away in six months time to stagger the calibration times.

He said drink driving incidents had been on the increase however a couple of cases including a notable one where a man was caught twice in as many weeks appeared to have knocked it back.

Road gangs boosted by FIC agency workers

A GROUP of road workers are expected to start arriving in the Islands in early December to boost the dwindling local force.

Director of Public Works Colin Summers said that efforts to obtain agency workers were progressing well with up to nine workers sourced to be split between the FIG Highways Section and the Quarry.

The workers are predominantly from the Philippines and are being sourced through the Falkland Islands Company Ltd (FIC) who will also provide accommodation within the agreed fee.

MLA Gavin Short who has championed the drive to bring the road gangs up to a full complement said that while the process had not gone as quickly as perhaps everyone would have liked, "I am happy that we are just about to start seeing some results."

He said he also very much liked the idea that a locally based company, "have stepped up to the plate and are supplying the workers for us."

MLA Short said the agency worker situation was a stop-gap measure to get through this season and would be reviewed early next year.

"The labour situation is far from clear as we really do not have a good picture of what might happen after the oil exploration round is over. Using agency workers whilst being expensive, gives us the flexibility to re-shape the model fairly quickly if we do find that there are a number of suitably qualified people on the market and wishing to join us."

He explained that a more permanent solution involving longer term contracts might mean that locals would not be able to access jobs and find themselves unemployed and other problems could flow from that.

Mr Summers said that the relevant Government section heads had reviewed CVs from candidates and those believed to have the correct skills to complement the existing workforce had been selected.

They are currently undergoing required checks and will begin to arrive in December.

The workers will be based on both the East and West Falkland as required staying at the road camps when necessary.

Road re-building and maintenance contracts have been set up on both East and West Falklands with local companies PJ McKay & Son and JK Construction respectively which reduces the work load for the Government road gangs. However road maintenance across the network has fallen behind in recent years due to a lack of work force.

In the last five years more than 69,000 tons of capping has been processed and laid on the MPA Road and more recently two haulage contractors have been involved in this work.

£400,000 per year has been allocated over the next five years for the recapping of the MPA road.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

ACCORDING to my brother it was a "bit of an exaggeration," to describe the wind ripping the breath out of my lungs, while gathering the Long Island hogs on Saturday, as, "straight off the Antarctic," but it certainly felt like it at the time.

However as I bimbled around the corner of Strike Off point into the freezing air gusting off Berkeley Sound, a small (and generous) part of me acknowledged that the view of logger ducks waddling across the white sandy cove into glittering green sea allowed me to, at least momentarily, forgive the elements their savagery.

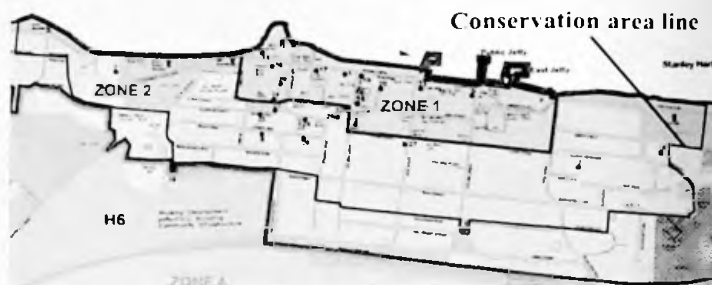

And views are important, so important in fact that people will pay hundreds of thousands for them. Because even after the most rubbish of days a beautiful vista can soothe the soul and renew appreciation of life and of course the planet itself. And I'm not just getting all whimsical here. Views are considered so important that landmarks and panoramas on the London City skyline are protected by planning controls. So even if the richest oligarch in the world were to trot up with a bottomless bag of cash wanting to build a skyscraper that interrupted a preserved view, he'd be told to scarp.

It was reassuring then to see that in the (now up for public consultation) 'Guide to New Development' within Stanley's conservation area it makes reference to visual impact and the preservation of varied picturesque views. It points out that there are no buildings over two-storeys within that area and that the resulting views should be protected. The note isn't overly Draconian though and does point out that planned developments will be considered on their merits. Presumably they're suggesting it would have to be an exceedingly beautiful structure before it received planning permission within that area.

Although thinking about it I'm not sure a building exists that would be worth interrupting my view of the harbour and glinting quartzite rock faces on the Camber.

The draft guidance note isn't a hefty piece of reading incidentally. We make reference to it this week (see right) but there will be more comprehensive coverage in the future.

Bear in mind while our weather may often be lousy we have the prettiest town with beautiful views so the subject is more than worthy of everyone's attention.

The designated Conservation Area runs from Snake Hill and the eastern boundary of the Cemetery, westwards to the road west of 9 Ross Road West (Jhelum House) and from Ross Road to Davis Street West and the south side of Callaghan Road, Ross Road East to Davis Street East and Ross Road West to Racecourse Road and south of Government House.

Consultation begins on Stanley conservation area planning guide

BUILDING styles, materials and even demolition of buildings are covered in a new draft planning guidance note relating to the older part of Stanley. The public are to be consulted on the contents of the note: 'Guide to new Development within the Conservation Area'.

The note follows on from the creation of a conservation area within Stanley that aims to ensure new development is undertaken sympathetically in areas of build heritage.

The area was introduced with the 2015 update of the town plan.

There is in fact no specific legislative basis for the conservation area, and therefore what does and does not require a specific planning application is unchanged. However, the area designation and policy provides some detail on whether or not planning applications within the area will be supported.

The Planning Guidance Note builds on these broad principles to provide more detailed guidance on what will be supported.

The note makes it clear that a conservation area designation does not mean that new development is unacceptable, but care must be taken to ensure that the new development will not harm the character or appearance of the area. It includes the comment: "Indeed, there may be buildings and sites which do not positively contribute to the character of the area, and so their redevelopment would be actively encouraged."

It is explained that such designation places greater emphasis on ensuring that developments are appropriate for the area and can play an important role in protecting features, for example barge boards, building-fronts and windows, "and in preventing the incremental erosion of character and appearance of small-scale alterations that in themselves may not be significant but collectively and over time might have a negative impact."

There are then sections that provide a guide to how developments should be designed in order to: "maintain the fabric of the Conservation Area, while ensuring that they meet relevant planning policy."

One section picks up on orientation of buildings: "orientation of new buildings within the Conservation Area is limited to either an east-west or north-south direction."

General election in Argentina

THE first round of the Argentine General election will take place on Sunday.

Daniel Scioli, who represents the Kirchnerite wing of the Peronist Party, is leading with a predicted (including an estimated share of the undecided) 38.3 per cent of the vote in the latest poll, which is very close to the 38.67 per cent than received in the primary.

In next place is Mauricio Macri, of the PRO led coalition (a fraction right of centre), who is predicted to get 29.2 per cent of the vote. Sergio Massa, of the anti-Kirchner Peronists, is next with a predicted 21 per cent.

To win in the first round on Sunday, a candidate must get 40 per cent of the vote and be 10 per cent ahead of the next candidate.

Mr Scioli is just failing to achieve both, so he is unlikely to win in this first round. That would mean that the top two candidates, Mr Scioli and Mr Macri, will go forward to a run-off election on November 22. The voters will choose again then, and those supporting Mr Massa and the handful of minor candidates will have to vote for one of these two front-runners, and will decide the outcome. As Mr Massa's voters are Peronists, they are unlikely to vote in great numbers for Mr Macri, as such Mr Scioli is likely win the second round.

Mr Macri's Foreign Policy Chief said this week if Mr Macri became president he would not appoint a Falklands Minister but would work to defrost Argentina's relations with Britain.

Calling Overseas Territories students in UK

A CONFERENCE for all Overseas Territories students currently based in UK is to be held on November 29.

This is to be held by the University College London (UCL), in conjunction with United Kingdom Overseas Territories Association (UKOTA), Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) and the University of Exeter.

An emphasis will be placed on giving students the opportunity to meet their counterparts from various other Overseas Territories, as well as to examine what lessons can be learned from their shared experiences. As well as the students attending the event, there is the opportunity for various organisations with an interest in the Overseas Territories to have stalls or material displayed at the venue to offer information about their work in relation to the Overseas Territories. Student artists are also encouraged to exhibit their work at the venue.

To register to attend the event, students should go to <http://www.eventbrite.co.uk/e/our-islands-our-future-sustainable-development-tickets-17297780126>

Organisations wishing to take this opportunity to network with OT students, as well as any OT student artists wishing to exhibit their work please contact Chris Langridge at c.langridge@ucl.ac.uk

Your questions answered

Q WHAT happened to the report on government buildings and their future uses written by a consultant who visited the Islands in order to assist with this subject.

A MLA Michael Poole kindly responded saying he believed this question referred to the 'Infrastructure Development Plan,' that was consulted on early in the Assembly's term. The goal was to look at a 20-year plan for Government Infrastructure.

"We did receive a report to Officers, but it was somewhat superseded by our 5-year Capital Plan discussions in our first budget and the Director of Central Services leaving the Islands. Matt Bassford and others have picked up the work in the meantime, and it is still a work in progress. We hope to see a draft version over the coming weeks – I envisage this being published and further consulted upon."

Mr Bassford said an internal review meeting was held this week on the emerging National Infrastructure Plan. This will be a strategic document that looks at current and future infrastructure needs across a number of big themes. As such the plan will not contain detailed recommendations about individual buildings.

Falklands Nelson's inspiration

The 210th anniversary of the Battle of Trafalgar was celebrated this week with a range of events across the UK.

In the Falklands this most decisive victory of the Napoleonic Wars (1803 - 1815) will be marked with a Trafalgar Dinner and the opening of an exhibition in the Historic Dockyard Museum tomorrow evening (Saturday).

But who knew that it was in fact the Falklands that had inspired Admiral Lord Nelson, one of Britain's greatest war heroes to join the Royal Navy?

Local historian John Smith carried out some research in 1989 during which he discovered within a short autobiographical work, that he had joined the Royal Navy in 1771 because of the Falkland Islands.

This had been brought about as during the previous year the Spanish had ousted the Royal Naval garrison from Port Egmont on Saunders Island.

The vastly superior Spanish force of five war ships backed up with 1,600 men left Captain Farmer of HMS Swift and Captain Maltby of HM storeship Endeavour with no other option other than to capitulate and return to the United Kingdom.

On being received in England the news caused an outcry in Parliament, so much so, that the possibility of war with Spain became ominously imminent.

Fortunately the affair was settled without such action, but the incident had fired the imagination and enthusiasm of the young Horatio.

In the preparations for likely hostilities with Spain, Nelson's maternal uncle, Captain Suckling RN was appointed to command HMS Raisonnable of 74 guns. Nelson, then aged 12 was taken on board by his uncle as midshipman.

Nelson later served in the Arctic on board HMS Carcass which had been in the Falklands Islands during 1776 (Carcass Island).

Yet another Falklands connection was when he was serving on HMS Seahorse. Her Commander at the time was Captain Farmer who had been involved in the 1771 Port Egmont incident.

The Battle of Trafalgar took place on October 21, 1805, and was the most decisive naval victory of the war when 27 British ships of the line were led by Admiral Lord Nelson aboard his flagship HMS Victory.

The British defeated 33 French and Spanish ships of the line under the French Admiral Pierre-Charles Villeneuve in the Atlantic off the south-west coast of Spain, just west of Cape Trafalgar. The Franco-Spanish fleet lost 22 ships in the fight while not a single British vessel was lost.

The British victory dramatically established Britain's naval supremacy and was achieved in part through Nelson not adhering to the prevailing naval tactics, which involved engaging an enemy fleet in a single line of battle parallel so the enemy hit each other with broadsides.

Nelson instead divided his smaller force into two columns which he then ordered to sail at right angles against the larger enemy fleet and so won the battle.

At the height of the battle Nelson was shot by a French musketeer and died shortly after, becoming one of Britain's greatest war heroes.

Host of certificates for Falklands' trainees

Above and right: Valerie Clifton (Level 2 Food Safety) and Liam Short (CMI Level 3 Diplomas in 1st Line Management) receive their training certificates from HE the Governor Colin Roberts

TWENTY-eight proud people were presented with training award certificates at a reception hosted by Government House last Thursday. The group had completed courses organised by the Training Centre including IVQs and awards in leadership and management, business administration, plumbing, line management, child care, health and safety, food safety and fire safety.

There was particular emphasis on child care in this group of graduates; Charlotte-Anne Middleton, and Charlotte McRae CMI Level 3 Diplomas in 1st Line Management were successfully completed by James Bates, Rachel Crowie, Ian France, Mari-ka McKay Sian Nightingale, Farrah Peck, Liam Short and Rose Toolan.

The Training Centre also confirmed yesterday that 88 people attended World Host Customer Service Training.

RFIP finances in good shape

POLICE finances were in good shape at the end of the first quarter, Chief of Police Len McGill said on Wednesday in an update to the Police Committee.

Revenue was on target for licensing and vetting and if the trend was to continue the department would again bring in additional revenue which was currently anticipated to be around £40,000. Supt McGill said he was always inclined to be a little conservative with financial forecasts and that again this year's surplus would be attributable to the influx of new vehicles and associated charges.

He said he kept expecting it to reach a saturation point and anticipated that the import of new vehicles would tail off at the end of the oil exploration round.

MLA Jan Cheek
shares a glimpse into
her working week

IT was a great relief to arrive home with no more hitches and start to catch up on all the little things that pile up during a prolonged absence. Back into routine meetings this week I've spent some time catching up on papers and minutes from meetings I missed so that I can be confident that I've not overlooked anything important. I much prefer reading from hard copies than from a computer screen and I find it much easier to scribble notes than annotate documents on screen.

I AM in the chair of our meetings until the end of the year which means a little extra work in ensuring that we have agendas and that actions are followed through. This rotating quarterly chairmanship has worked well so far and gives all members a chance to have a voice. With the 'visiting season' underway earlier than usual this year we aim to meet as many of our press and official visitors as possible to ensure that they leave with an accurate and comprehensive knowledge of our position. There are never any guarantees, especially with some of the media who will often sacrifice accuracy for a partial quote out of context to make an eye catching headline. We had contact with a fair number of journalists in Brighton and Manchester and I always treat them with great circumspection as someone I know who had dealt with many journalists told me years ago that if they get a third right you are doing well.

I NOTED the comments by departing Rector David Roper regarding religious education in schools. I recall a proposal many years ago to introduce a very broad syllabus as approved by some UK local authorities. The syllabus would have given students a passing knowledge of the many faiths practised worldwide and would have been taught by teachers. Prior to that ministers had come in to instruct members of their respective flocks. Although the proposed syllabus had broad support within the education system, it was unfortunately vetoed by one of the local churches at the time and the idea was dropped.

Same old same old

THE meeting with Members of Legislative Assembly (MLA) at Fox Bay last Friday was fairly predictable. One person said to me: "You asked the same questions last year Bill and got the same answers."

Not entirely true but the MLA's present did confirm that none of them were prepared to take the courageous step and make sufficient funds available to resurface the MPA road in a reasonable period of time. So next winter looks like being the same misery for all who depend on it.

It was better news to hear that negotiations with Sure may result in an improvement in the present completely inadequate and very expensive packages.

Time will tell, but I hope that users will have an opportunity to comment on any new proposals before it's all signed on the dotted line. The technology is changing so rapidly that we must not be committed to any particular system for too long.

The worst news concerned local radio. The service is now worse than it was thirty years ago and is a complete shambles. Putting small repeaters into some settlements may be OK for those settlements but doesn't help the rest of us and doesn't mean you can hear the radio on the move.

It is a farce that I can hear BFBS Radio and Radio Five Live courtesy of BFBS but can only get our local news on the TV.

I believe it is time to go back to the drawing board and look at a couple of decent transmitters on mountain tops to restore the type of service we had 30 years ago.

Mike Bowles, Donald Lamont, David Tatham, Saul Pitaluga and Gordon Mather at the funeral of Colin Wright

Farewell to a loyal friend

THE Falkland Islands Association said goodbye to its much respected Honorary Secretary Colin Wright on October 15, as did his many other friends and relatives.

Colin had born his final illness bravely, and his funeral at the Church he loved, St. George's, in his home town, Shrewsbury, was very well attended.

The mourners were led by his widow Pat and daughter Wendy. Many of his former colleagues in the West Mercia Police were there; the air cadets to whom he was chaplain formed an honour guard; and many others packed out the small church. The service was conducted by Vicar Murray McBride, assisted by the Revd. Lynn Davidson.

The Falklands were represented by Association Vice-Chairman and Islander, Saul Pitaluga, and by two former Falklands governors, David Tatham and Donald Lamont. SAMA (82) was represented by its current chairman, veteran Gordon Mather, and by former SAMA(82) Chair and veteran, Mike Bowles who is also a member of the FIA Committee, and by Peter Pepper.

The funeral was followed by a private committal and then a reception.

Hunt for lost German battleships DVD scheduled to be ready for Christmas

"THE hunt for Germany's lost battleships" a documentary based on Mensun Bound's search for the lost fleet from the Battle of the Falklands was shown at a premiere at the British Film Institute, London on October 16.

The work, which was described as very well received by a full house, is now being produced as a DVD which, it is hoped, will be available in the Falklands in time for Christmas. Proceeds from the sale will go to the Falklands Museum.

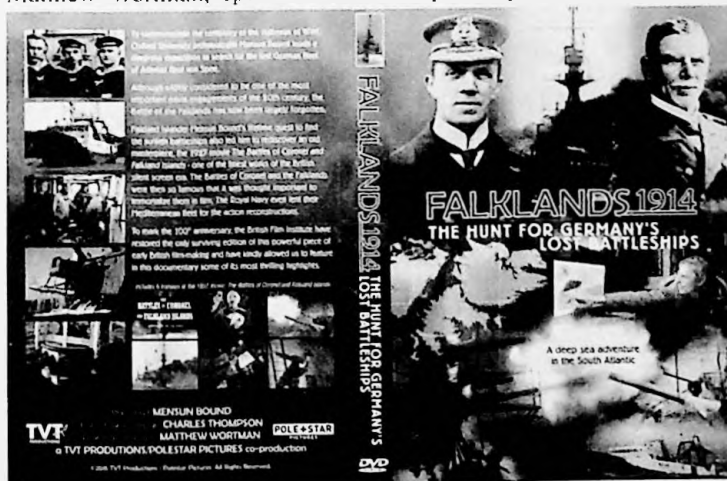

After the screening, former governor Donald Lamont, Chairman of FIMA (Friends of the Falklands Museum and Archives) Mensun Bound and the Director, Matthew Wortman, spoke about the project and the plans to resume the search with even more sophisticated technology that will not leave them so vulnerable to the weather.

The search took place in Falklands waters last summer but was hampered by inclement weather.

World Mental health Day

Secrets of Mental Health

David DeRose, MD, MPH, and Bernell Baldwin, PhD, neuroscientist

In 1944, at the age of 16, Edith Eger was taken by the Nazis from her home in Hungary and sent to the infamous Auschwitz death camp. Although spared the gas chambers used on her parents, the already-thin Edith gradually wasted away as she was transferred from one camp to another. In May 1945, approaching death, Edith fell into an unconscious stupor. The guards assumed she was dead and threw her into a mass grave in the woods behind the Gunskirchen Lager Camp. Miraculously, an American GI saw Edith's hand moving amidst the corpses. He rescued the then 60-pound girl from certain death.

If anyone had reason to be controlled by her environment, it was Edith Eger. Despite her horrific experiences, Edith didn't succumb to emotions of bitterness, hatred or despair. She not only survived, she thrived. She married a Czech Freedom Fighter, raised three children, and earned a PhD in psychology. If you ever met Dr Edith or heard her speak, you would likely rank her among the most positive, uplifting individuals you ever met. Edith's message: "Contrary to popular belief, there are no victims in this world - only willing participants. You can't always control your circumstances, but you can control how you respond to them."

Psychology's New Emphasis

Dr Edith Eger's life speaks eloquently to a growing realisation among mental health professionals: we all have the capacity to cultivate an optimistic attitude even in the midst of setbacks and difficulties. Indeed, while many of us believe our emotions are determined by our circumstances, the evidence indicates otherwise. You can control your emotions - in spite of your surroundings!

However, our emotions are affected by more than our thoughts. Most notably, our daily lifestyle choices profoundly impact our emotional state. Let's look at several factors which can help us remain in the driver's seat in this important realm of mental health.

Dietary Practices

Animal studies reveal that unhealthy dietary practices impair the brain's emotional circuitry - during development as well as in maturity. Examples include nutritional deficiencies, excessive salt intake, and high fat diets. The bottom line is to opt for a diet that emphasises low-sodium, nutrient-dense whole plant foods (fruits, whole grains, vegetables, nuts and seeds) and limits or eliminates animal products and added fat.

Avoid Addictive Drugs

Alcohol has a short-term effect in promoting anger, rage, and violence. Control cells in the top of the brain are numbed. As a result, the circuits for violence in the lower brain are unrestrained, as millions of abused family members can testify. The long-term effects of alcohol are even more serious. Those control cells are killed by even two ounces of alcohol daily while the far more resilient lower brain cells fare far better. The result: a permanent brain imbalance favouring the lower emotional centres.

Other brain drugs also can impair brain control mechanisms. Even marijuana has the capacity, under certain circumstances, to permanently unbalance the brain.

Exercise

No programme for optimising emotional health should neglect regular physical exercise. We recommend making physical activity part of your daily routine. Research links exercise to decreased stress levels and enhanced emotional health (including less depression and anxiety). Studies have also shown exercise to markedly increase levels of a powerful emotional, health enhancing hormone called oxytocin.

Choose Your Music Carefully

Music has a powerful impact on the emotional brain region known as the limbic system. Depending on the type of music either positive or negative emotions can be stimulated. Direct measurements of limbic structures reveal that music such as harmonious piano selections can evoke pleasant emotions, while dissonant music can trigger negative emotions. For these reasons we should exercise caution in musical selection. Choose only music that helps foster emotional control and balance.

Television and Emotional Instability

We can be influenced in the direction of unbalanced emotions by our choice of viewing fare (TV, internet, etc), as well as by music.

One principle of human behaviour is this: "we become like what we watch." Indeed, our minds are moulded by what we regularly view. Therefore, if we're interested in optimal emotional health, we'll exercise serious restraint in our viewing fare. If you have trouble exercising such restraint, consider a several week (or longer) holiday from TV, internet, DVDs and other visual media. As impossible as that may seem, much of the world throughout history has survived - and often thrived - on just such a program.

Quality Time with Family

Time invested with electronic media can also weaken the family bond. Excessive time is of great concern because strong family connections are powerful predictors of enhanced emotional health. We need to prioritise interactive activities with our families. Go places and do things which are fun, interesting, and fulfilling.

Trust and Emotional Health

When we have trusting relationships with one or more individuals, electrical and chemical "trust signals" from the higher brain centres, particularly the frontal lobe, can shut down and even shut off the fear system coursing through our lower brain centres. This trust aids in the control of anxiety and stress. Among those chemical messengers of trust is the hormone oxytocin. Increased oxytocin levels also improve a host of interpersonal dimensions - all of which tend to bolster our emotional state. Consequently, one strategy to boost emotional health is to develop more trusting relationships. "Horizontal trust" in others is highly beneficial; "vertical trust" in a loving God is especially powerful.

Learning to Trust in God

Humans instinctively respond well to honesty and reliability in other persons, especially when they sense a genuine interest in their welfare. This occurs by spending time together and undergoing shared experiences. Similarly, we develop trust in God by testing His promises in the Bible and experiencing His faithful leading in our lives. The psalmist captures the importance of entering into an experiential relationship with God. "Oh taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man who trust in Him". God Himself invites us: "Come to Me... learn from Me... and you will find rest for your souls".

Why not carve out a little time in your day to read from the Bible, perhaps starting with The Gospel of Mark? You might be surprised to find a God who is far more trustworthy than many humans are - even those who claim to follow Him. And along with that discovery, you may realise your emotions are coming under better control.

South American Atlantic Services

Medium term aims and how Illex can help

SOUTH American Atlantic Services (SAAS) has been in operation now more than ten years. This week Managing Director Eugene Hurley spoke to Penguin News about developments that have taken place over those years and aims for the future of the company.

PN: Tell us about the changes that have taken place over the past 10 years.

EH: There have been many changes though the aim of the company, to provide a containerised shipping service for the Falkland Islands has remained the principal goal of the business.

It has been the manner in which this has been delivered over the years which has changed most. The support from local businesses here in the Islands has been and continues to be a major positive factor in the growth of the business and is key to ongoing development.

PN: Is it realistic to try and provide a container shipping service for a population of around 3,000 people?

EH: I do not believe that we should look at the provision of the service in this manner. We have around 3,000 people here who require the same supply of goods and services as elsewhere. The geographical position of the Islands means that we have certain obstacles to overcome, and the shareholders of SAAS, in creating the company have provided a solution which works well in meeting the needs of the community in the provision of carriage of import and export cargo.

PN: There are alternatives, such as cargo by air and by the MoD service, can they not meet the requirements you outline?

EH: They are both complementary to the overall requirements. The MoD service is good, however it is not dedicated to the overall needs of the Falkland Islands and it is subject to prioritisation of other cargo, which may give rise to delays in the shipment of commercial third party cargo. Air cargo is an expensive option for limited cargo quantities.

PN: Can the SAAS service run as an independent self-financing container shipping service?

EH: This is one of the medium term goals of the business.

In assessing how we can achieve this, we examine the cargo potential for import and export volumes. We have seen substantial growth in import volumes this year, and continuation of this growth is required in order for SAAS to be self-financing, and profitable.

Equally, we seek growth in export volumes. We have seen excellent support from the meat industry over the past years. The Wool Company has given support to SAAS with their exports to the UK, Europe and India and other destinations, and we have developed strong relationships with the Toothfish, Finfish and Loligo sectors of the fishing industry. All of these factors together will allow us to generate the turnover levels required to make the company profitable. The one key market we have not had any noticeable support from is the Illex fishery.

PN: Why have the Illex companies not come over to containerisation?

EH: This is an interesting question. Certainly the volumes involved are a determining factor, however a greater obstacle may be a lack of awareness of the availability of the container service to work alongside the reefer vessel capacity to work in tandem to provide a broader level of service.

Companies involved here have been supportive and we have carried limited amounts of Illex, but not the volume we have within our capabilities.

PN: Shouldn't that be the job of SAAS to make them aware?

EH: Indeed it should, and it is why we are working with all parties to improve awareness, and to improve our service offerings.

PN: What is the view of the Members of Legislative Assembly (MLAs) on this?

EH: In speaking with MLA Phyl Rendell who also acts as Chair of SAAS, she said that with all that SAAS had done to provide containers and service to the fishing industries, "it is a shame that the Illex industry stands outside of the general support it has enjoyed from other sectors."

I believe that the views of MLA Rendell reflect the views held by many, in that while Government provides port services, support to the shipping industry as a whole and ancillary services, the fact is that the vast majority of Illex never gets beyond handling in Berkley Sound.

PN: What can Government or SAAS do to change this?

EH: SAAS is working to change this, and in conjunction with local businesses will take steps this year to gain further support in 2016 and onwards.

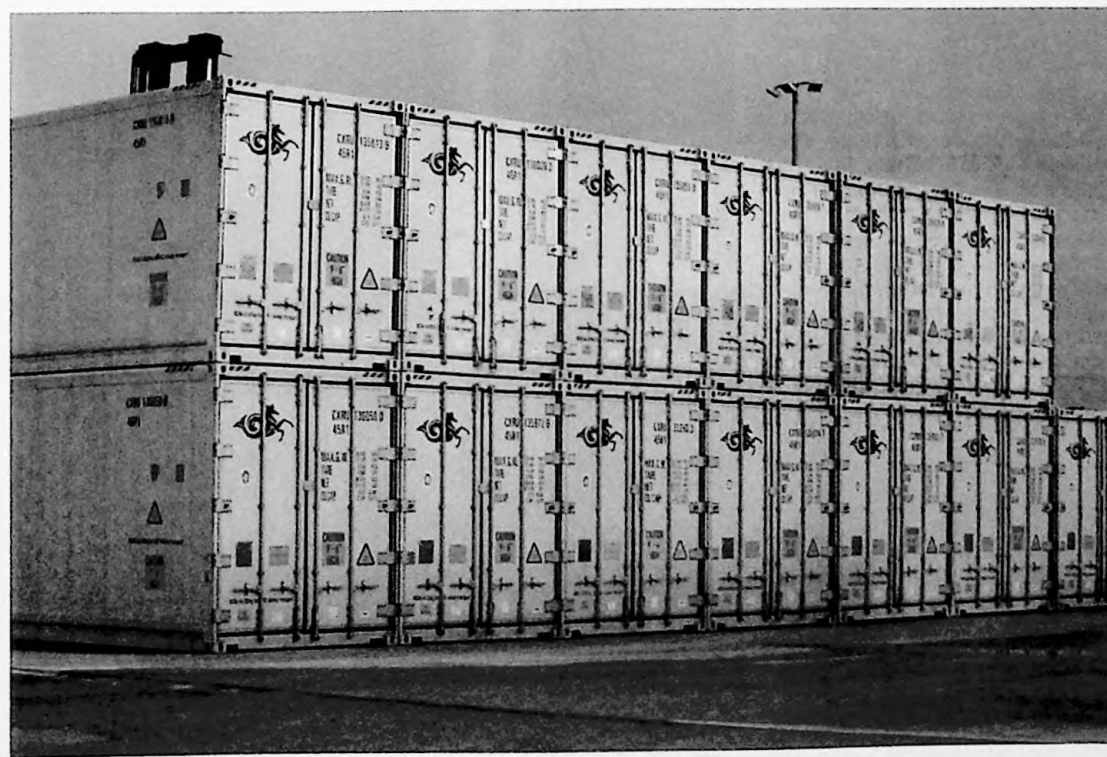

I am not entirely sure what Government can do to initiate change, however introduction of ITQ (Individual Transferable Quota) to Illex might produce some leverage towards containerisation. It is also important that Government promote awareness of the shipping service with all sectors and especially with Illex companies, of the part played by the local shipping company in support of the lives of Falkland Islanders.

PN: What would it mean to SAAS to have Illex catch as part of its export volume?

EH: Let's say in 2016, we retain the inbound support, we retain the wool and meat volumes, we have the Toothfish, Loligo and Finfish business, and add the Illex support, then we are on track to meet our medium term aim of being self-financing.

PN: Should you attain this in 2016, how will you sustain this into the future?

EH: We will have to ensure our service levels are up to standard, our pricing structure is competitive, and that we deliver what we promise. We will work towards making the market better aware of our service, in order to avoid complacency. We would ask that our customers always give us the opportunity to make an offer, that we are seen as the number one provider for imports, and the number one provider for exports. We want to be profitable so we can put the development costs of the business back into the community.

Mapping historical whale sightings

By Veronica Frans, Research Assistant at South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI) leading the study on 'Mapping historical whale sightings' as part of the Darwin Plus-funded project 'Marine Spatial Planning for the Falkland Islands' and supervised by Dr. Amélie Augé (SAERI).

When was the last time you saw whale? Have they always been around, or did they suddenly just reappear?

The story behind the whales in the Falklands is currently incomplete. Commercial whaling activities in the early 1900s nearly decimated whales throughout the world, including here. Annual captures of as many as 463 whales at New Island Station were recorded then. These were solely the large baleen whales - mainly sei and fin whales. Since then, according to anecdotes heard while talking with people, in particular with FIGAS pilots, these whales may well have been doing a comeback to the beautiful Falklands' shores, and in great numbers. So could there be a success story here, of a possible recovering whale population?

Whether it has been noticed or not, something is happening with the baleen whales here in the Falklands. The problem is, no one has actually studied them until now. It means that we have very little data to determine what is happening. They're here now, but the questions are: Are they returning? Are their numbers increasing? Is there a seasonal pattern for their presence? Are there hotspots where they can be found? All of these questions need answers.

If the whale population is increasing, they may interact with ships and potentially collide with them. This is a serious issue faced in other countries with high whale density. Therefore, understanding the pattern of recovery of the whales in the Falklands and mapping their current distribution is needed for the Marine Spatial Planning (MSP) project. This project was described in the last couple of Penguin News and aims to provide scientific tools to FIG to co-ordinately manage the marine environment. In order to identify areas of potential risks and plan for the future, we need to identify areas used by whales, and whether their numbers are increasing.

But do we really not have the data to answer these questions? Well, although there is not much actual data, you (yes, you) may be able to help fill in the data gap.

This is called citizen science where scientists recognise that local inhabitants, as a group, have a huge amount of knowledge about the environment in which they live - especially historical knowledge. This can be harvested to fill in gaps for scientific studies. As part of the MSP project, a study currently underway addresses these questions on whales and is using this concept of citizen science to accomplish it. Information is being gathered by interviewing people, and the goal is to determine where and when they could and can be found, in the past and now. MSP is addressing the gaps in knowledge that exist, and it is hoped that maps can be produced to inform FIG for management, and also the tourism industry for development purposes.

Getting historical information on whales therefore largely depends on eyewitness accounts. In September, I went on field trips to Camp (on the East and West Falklands and some of the outer islands), visiting people and interviewing them. I asked for their first-hand knowledge on whales, having them indicate on a map when and where they have seen whales over their lifetime. Whethinterviewees. Some of the earliest whale sightings were in the 1940s and 50s, but only 8 per cent of interviewees have attested to those years. The majority of people have first seen whales in the 1990s and 2000s, and are still seeing them up until now.

More information is needed to obtain robust results, which will happen through more interviews, analysis of data recorded from FIGAS pilots, Falklands Conservation and other sources, and looking into commercial whaling archives.

In terms of interviews, I will continue to contact people over the next few weeks. As a newcomer to the Islands, the study has given me the privilege of seeing many amazing places and meeting so many welcoming and friendly people. I would like to thank those who have already participated in this study and also welcomed me into their homes. If you have any questions, my email is VFrans@env.institute.ac.fk. For more information on the overall MSP project, you can check SAERI's website.

The Environmental Planning Department financially supports whale study via their Environmental Studies Budget.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800...Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RIFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Runners and riders take up the challenge over 10 miles

THE inaugural Falkland Islands Man Versus Horse cross country event will take place on Sunday November 1.

The race is due to begin at 11am, following a safety brief and the distribution of competitor numbers for all entrants.

Trophies and medals have been kindly donated by Consolidated Fisheries Ltd, with FIC and the Chandlery providing refreshments. Bristow Helicopters have also generously agreed to provide medical cover on the day, if available.

Drawing on races between humans and horses (with riders) elsewhere in the world, the Stanley Running Club and Falkland Islands Horse Owners Club have teamed up to organise a similar event. The original Welsh version began in June 1980, following several pints in the Neuadd Arms Hotel. The landlord heard two men discussing the merits of men and horses running over mountainous terrain, and the first marathon was decided. There have been some close calls over the years, but it has only been won by a runner on a handful of occasions.

The Falklands version is over a shorter distance of 10 miles or 16km (compared to 22m in Wales), beginning at Moody Brook, looping around Fairy Cove and Hearndon Water to the Murrell, returning to Moody Brook and then following the track behind the Golf Club to end at the racecourse. The start will be staggered, with horses setting off first, followed by the runners about five minutes later.

Spectators are welcome along the route, and at the finish line at the racecourse. The expected finishing time will be from 12.30 onwards. Please come along and support the event, and find out whether runners can beat horses in the Falklands. If you have any questions, or are keen to volunteer and help out as a marshal, please phone Emily (53355) or Roddy (54494).

The entry fee is £15 per horse/rider, £10 per runner, and under 16 year old runners can compete in two-person relays teams for £5 each; payment will be taken at Moody Brook on the day. Although last minute entries will be taken on the day, competitors are encouraged to pre-register to avoid long delays. To download the race rules and register online, please go to www.facebook.com/manvhorseFI or you can email manvhorsefalklands@gmail.com.

James wins Fortuna event

JAMES Tyrrell played the best golf on the day to win the Fortuna sponsored Stableford event on Sunday, by a single point ahead of Martyn Gilson-Clarke while Timmy Bonner secured third spot overall.

This win for James resulted in a further reduction in his golf handicap, and it is very encouraging to see a young player rising through the ranks of the club.

Steve Vincent, having just returned from abroad, won the prize for the best front nine, and the best back nine went to Gordon Lennie.

Ian Stewart took the prize for nearest the pin and Adam Glanville thumped a huge drive down the eighteenth to win the prize for the longest drive.

Thanks to Fortuna Limited for their ongoing support.

Usual sign in times for this Sunday's competition.

The entry sheet for the Match-Play championship is on the board, and the draw will be made on the November 1, following the medal competition.

Oil found in Humpback but not commercial amounts

OIL and gas has been discovered in Falkland Oil and Gas' (FOGL) deep-water Humpback exploration well across a number of reservoir targets, but, not enough to be commercial. The well hit the exploration targets, "close to prognosis," the company revealed this week. The well is likely to be considered significant however in that it is the first to encounter oil in the potentially larger systems in the deeper waters to the south of the islands.

FOGL chief Executive Tim Bushell said: "While the Humpback well has provided mixed results, it should be noted that this is the first well in the South Falklands Basin to encounter oil and also demonstrate a working hydrocarbon system in the Fitzroy sub-basin.

"The reservoir quality in the various targets penetrated by the well was however poorer than pre-drill expectations, and further work will now be required to fully integrate the well results and assess the implications for the overall oil and gas potential of our southern licences."

Following the Humpback well, the Eirik Raude rig will return to the North Falkland basin where it will drill an appraisal of the Elaine-Isobel fan complex, which has been estimated to hold 400 million barrels of oil resources.

The company told investors that the Humpback results would now be evaluated in detail, and it will assess what they mean for the rest of the southern licences.

It highlighted that Humpback is just one of a number of plays within the basin.

Rowlands Rise site for old peoples' facility

RESIDENTS of a planned old peoples (and vulnerable peoples) facility will have a spectacular view of the Stanley Harbour and the Narrows; it is to be situated on the Rowlands Rise site in front of Liberty Lodge.

Two designs and models of the facility will be drawn up by qualified architects over the coming months and brought to Members of Legislative Assembly (MLAs) during 2016.

A Service Manager will be recruited to develop the project further.

This week MLAs also agreed to immediately create four new Community Healthcare Assistant posts, "as an early step towards implementing this new and more robust service," said MLA Michael Poole.

Executive Council thanked the Director, his team and HMSC for their work to date and said they were, "keen to keep up the pace in this key area."

The paper from the Director of Health on the development of Older Peoples Services was examined by Executive Council this week.

MLA Poole said: "This paper was the result of work and consultation over a number of months on how to ensure we have a long term solution for supporting elderly people and also a number of people that may have special needs.

He said it was agreed, "that an integrated approach is required. This should allow people to be as independent and to live at home for as long as possible, whilst also making good provision for those that reach a point where they require a bit more support."

MLA Jan Cheek noted in the Legislative Assembly meeting yesterday that they were a, "step closer to delivering better and more comprehensive care for the elderly and for vulnerable people."

She acknowledged that care for the elderly was, "a major talking point during the run up to the election two years ago and was something that seemed to have wide support."

She said that while much had already been done to provide the best care for those who need extra help and support, she was confident that a carefully designed purpose-built facility combined with extra adaptations would, improve the quality of life, while independence could be maintained for a longer period."

FIG has no responsibility for agency workers says MLA Short

MEMBER of Legislative Assembly (MLA) Gavin Short confirmed yesterday that while it was indeed more expensive to employ Falkland Islands Company (FIC) agency workers for the Highway Department than direct labour, the Government did not have any responsibility for the workers terms and conditions, "or even what they are paid, to be brutally honest."

In Legislative Assembly yesterday he said if for whatever reason a worker who is supplied by the agency is found to be wanting, they will be replaced by the agency at no extra cost to FIG; adding that it was his opinion that those brought in should not be paid more or less than their local counterparts which could potentially cause problems with the local workforce.

"It is a well known fact Falkland Islanders do not like seeing people being treated badly as I can well remember from my Union days when FIG first brought in workers from St Helena," said MLA Short as he addressed the Assembly during the Motion for Adjournment speeches.

FIC Managing Director Roger Spink told Penguin News that the agency workers would be paid in line with current FIC construction workers, adding that while he had not carried out a complete analysis he doubted there would be much difference between FIC and FIG wages.

"Wage agreements are between employer and employee and FIC employ the workers being sourced," he said.

MLA Short said the Government had been left with several choices which had included cutting back on road work this season or increasing wages right across Government in the hope of luring some of the workers back.

"To do this would have meant raising wages in all sectors of the FIG and wasn't viewed with any great enthusiasm as if and when oil stops we may have found ourselves with a wages bill that we couldn't afford."

MLA Short said direct labour was still his preferred option, however given the short space of time and the lack of accommodation for workers, agency workers was the only viable option open if they wished to see any real progress this year.

Comment by Deputy Editor Sharon Jaffray

NEWS yesterday that the FOGL/Noble exploration in the Humpback well had not found commercial quantities of hydrocarbons (see front page) was a bit of a set back, but once again served to remind us that our economy is not guaranteed to be significantly boosted anytime in the very near future.

There is no way I would consider myself to be any sort of commentator on the industry, but just the occasional check of the crude oil price makes me realise that it is currently not looking that great for any sort of immediate excitement about finds in our waters.

Barrel price has been under $50 for some time now compared with two years ago when it hovered below $100.

My advice to those pinning their hopes on seeing the Falklands blossom or their bank account expand on the great wealth from 'black gold' is to plan on longevity and that is pretty much what the Government is doing.

And while I can see MLA Gavin Short's point that upping the wages across Government may cause long term problems if they cannot be sustained (also front page) I do feel there is a real need to consider what is being asked of people for some pretty low wages.

A good example this week was an advert offering £16,800 per annum in return for providing care, promoting independence, physical and emotional health and the well-being of our tenants in Sheltered Accommodation while working flexibly over week days and weekends.

School leavers are looking for, and in some quarters achieving far higher wages than that, and while I am a firm believer that young people can help keep us young, this is surely a job for a more mature and life experienced person.

We have heard during the consultation period for the elderly and vulnerable people's services just how vital the quality of care in the community is to pulling together a complete system. These people are key - the very foundation on which we hope to build.

I applaud the fact we are seeing action with a site selected for a facility and MLAs approving four new healthcare assistant posts at the last Executive Council is a start to providing a more robust system, but I do hope that the wage will reflect the care we hope to provide.

As the boss so often reminds me when I'm opting for the cheap option when shopping... you only get what you pay for.

Too restrictive subsidised plot rules to be relaxed

RESTRICTIVE rules relating to government subsidised housing plots are to be relaxed.

The Crown Grants undertaken by those who built houses on subsidised plots at the most recent developments at Mink Park and Sapper Hill include clauses relating to repaying some of that subsidy if they rent or sell their property within 10 years of taking ownership.

MLA Michael Poole commented that, "Lands Committee had thought, and MLAs agreed, that these rules were a bit too restrictive and perhaps limited activity that FIG may actually wish to occur, for example, someone going overseas for a period to study, or perhaps moving to Camp.

"The goal was always to avoid speculative build-and-sell, and the amendments agreed to the rules still ensure that this is managed. These relaxations in the rules will be communicated to people in due course, and the paper is available to the public," said MLA Poole.

Bill paves way to improved access to Falklands laws

A BILL passed in Legislative Assembly yesterday paves the way for the publication of an up to date statement of the laws of the Falkland Islands in order to improve accessibility of the law.

Preparation of the database is being undertaken by Ros Cheek on a two year contract as Law Commissioner.

It is scheduled that the up to date statement of the laws will be published no later than March 31 2017, after approval by the Legislative Assembly.

The primary objective is accessibility for Falkland Islands' residents, but the needs of others will also be considered. Publication will primarily be on the internet but the needs of non-internet users will also be considered.

Penguin News will publish an interview with Ms Cheek on the subject of the project in next week's edition.

FIPASS maintenance continues

AN ultrasonic thickness measurement of FIPASS shows that the north west barge and elements of the ro-ro barge in particular require some work.

A recent report identifies the areas that will require work, and a plan to implement this is due to come back to ExCo by March 2016 reported MLA Michael Poole this week.

He said: "In parallel, work continues on the dock and good progress has already been made towards re-opening the ro-ro area for use. Capital money is already allocated for the continuing maintenance of FIPASS and it will be dedicated to those areas most in need of attention."

SLC works on schedule

THE essential work being carried out on the swimming pool changing rooms is on schedule and the pool is expected to be open again next week, MLA Ian Hansen said yesterday.

Meanwhile work to increase the gym space by constructing a mezzanine floor is due to start on November 20, and is expected to take six to eight weeks, he said during Legislative Assembly.

NVQ not IVQ

PENGUIN News mistakenly referred to NVQs as IVQs in last week's article entitled 'Host of certificates for Falklands' trainees'. The Training Centre does not offer IVQs, all of their City & Guild qualifications are NVQs. The NVQ is a worldwide recognised qualification whereas an IVQ, although endorsed by City & Guilds is often only relevant in the country that it was taken in.

Paul's work unlocks climate change data

Dr Paul Mayewski

CLIMATE change expert Dr Paul Mayewski, a veteran of more than 55 expeditions in places such as Antarctica, Greenland and the Himalaya, has just returned to the Falklands from a month long scientific expedition to South Georgia.

Paul's latest trip, supported by yacht Pelagic Australis, was to the Briggs-Eskmark region of South Georgia.

Paul's interest in South Georgia began in 2012 when he visited the islands and was able to collect snow chemistry samples from a range of sites. Preliminary results of this study were presented at the pan-American science workshop hosted by SAERI in January 2015 and showed a rise in Southern Hemisphere pollutant levels as a consequence of increased industrial and mining activity.

However, these snow samples just scratched the surface and samples from deeper within the glaciers would help unlock events in the more distant past.

In the race against time to further our understanding of global environmental change, this reconnaissance trip presented the opportunity for Paul and his team to collect ice cores from up to 20m depth and use ground penetrating radar to identify an appropriate site for future deeper drilling.

Information held in the ice of South Georgia's glaciers can help researchers understand everything from regional changes in temperature, precipitation, atmospheric circulation, air chemistry and sea-ice extent to volcanic and human activity on other continents.

Although such a resource is priceless, South Georgia's glaciers are retreating and soon these records could be lost forever.

Dr Paul Mayewski will be giving a presentation at the Chamber of Commerce on Friday October 30 at 6pm. Paul is an engaging and captivating speaker and will have some fascinating stories to tell, go along to find out more about this exciting project.

MLA to meet with Red Cross on identification of Argentine remains

A MEMBER of Legislative Assembly has flown to Geneva to meet with a representative of International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) on the issue of identification of Argentine remains.

If identification is to take place of Argentine soldiers buried in the Falkland Islands, it would have to be done with the full agreement and involvement of the Falkland Islands Government, MLA Summers will tell the ICRC.

The Government of Argentina (GoA) earlier this year contacted the UK Government about the possibility of DNA identification taking place on the remains of unknown soldiers buried at Darwin. The Falklands Government (FIG) has been closely consulted by the UK Government on this, "though we have received no direct request from GoA," said a press release from FIG earlier this week.

A spokesperson said FIG had always made clear that it remained committed to its humanitarian obligations, and extended its sympathy to the families of those who lost their lives.

A press release noted: "It is understood that the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) had been assisting GoA with their proposals for some time before GoA raised the issue with the UK.

"The Geneva Convention sets down the requirements on Convention signatories to enable the identification and proper burial of all persons lost in combat, and the provisions for repatriation.

It is the position of FIG and the UK Government that if any identification is to take place of combatants buried in the Falkland Islands, it would have to be done with the full agreement and involvement of the Falkland Islands Government.

The press release stated: "If the ICRC is to have a role to play it is important that it understands and accepts the Constitutional arrangements between the UK and the Falkland Islands, and acknowledges the formal role that FIG would have to take in any identification process that might take place in our jurisdiction."

MLA Summers is to meet on Monday with the President of the ICRC, Peter Maurer in Geneva, to seek assurances from the ICRC of its understanding of the role FIG would have to play, and to invite the ICRC to explain their activities on this project to date, how they can gain the confidence of Falkland Islanders and that they would have a strictly neutral position in any supervisory role they might play.

The UK Government is considering carefully the approach made by the Government of Argentina and has consulted FIG on how to respond.

FIG's engagement with the ICRC is part of this sensitive humanitarian process. FIG will review its position after the meeting next week.

PR Diploma for Krysteen

Krysteen Ormond

STUDYING as a distance student online, the Government's PR and Media Manager Krysteen Ormond has earned a postgraduate Diploma in Public Relations with merit, which is ratified by the CIPR (Chartered Institute of Public Relations).

Miss Ormond also travelled to the UK in February to attend a work-shop on strategic public relations planning as part of the year long course which included weekly online seminars.

"I'm really pleased to have passed the Diploma, and grateful to the Policy Unit and the CDS for supporting my course of study. My job is all about making sure the right information gets to the right people, and I hope to be able to put the skills I've gained to good use helping to get the Falkland Islands' message out there. I'm also really grateful to my colleague Teslyn, who put up with the world's grumpiest boss around deadline time."

Training for curator Helen

FALKLANDS Conservation's (FC) volunteer curator of the Falkland Islands National Herbarium (FINH), Helen Marsh, attended Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew for two weeks of training earlier this year. The training was given by Islands Conservation Partnership Co-ordinator Sara Barrios.

A herbarium is a collection of preserved plant specimens (both native and introduced) stored systematically and is an important point of reference for identifying plants, studying biodiversity and helps support conservation activities. The FINH is the property of the Falklands' Government and is housed at and maintained by Falklands Conservation.

The next stage, now that Mrs Marsh has returned to the Falklands, is for an up-to-date version of Botanical Research And Herbarium Management System (BRAHMS) to be installed at Falklands Conservation for ongoing use in recording new plant data and as a reference resource. She will also spend time with FC staff sharing her learning, and the BRAHMS Training Manual.

FIC vouchers for little artists

FIC Home Living Manager Marika with IJS' budding artists

FALKLAND Islands Company (FIC) Home Living Manager Marika McKay presented ten Infant/Junior School children with vouchers for £25 last Friday, after their pictures of favourite cartoon characters were chosen as winners in an art competition organised by the FIC department. Mrs McKay said the pictures will be enlarged and displayed near the toy section in the Home Living store.

MLA Jan Cheek
shares a glimpse into
her working week

IN addition to the Assembly meeting this week we have the usual weekly round of meetings and a few additional ones. The Executive Council agenda is a fairly short one so the time spent reviewing them should not be great. The Honourable Michael Poole and I also have a monthly telephone meeting with the Representative in London in between her visits in which we update one another. It is really important that both ends of the information chain are kept informed of developments. For the same reason one member of the FIGO staff comes down each year to note changes and developments and visit relevant departments.

We had a most interesting meeting with a representative from Enterprise St Helena about planned developments there. We have much in common with other overseas territories in particular the complex logistics required to do some of the simplest things.

Returning to a past theme it appears that the backlog of airmail is being tackled again with some recent large consignments. In spite of that some items are taking weeks to arrive while North-bound often only takes days. I tested the system by posting some books to myself here while in the UK, and will see how long they take to arrive. I spoke to one of our conference neighbours on the Royal Mail stand and was assured that mail is immediately sent on by them.

Our public meeting was thinly attended again but I hope people will catch it on radio or FITV and take time to fill in the questionnaire. Given the importance of family law and of protecting victims of domestic violence I would hope that people would want their views taken into account. There are also some important questions on adoption, civil partnerships, marriage and divorce. All too often people wait until work has been completed and then complain. This is your perfect chance to have your say.

I hope someone has kept Lidda Luxton up to date on the installation of the lift in the Town Hall for which she campaigned so hard; perhaps some photographic proof would be appropriate.

Unmarried fathers - new law on parental responsibility

A NEW law will come into being on November 1, 2015. This is a delayed part of the Children Ordinance 2014 and it gives unmarried fathers a way of obtaining parental responsibility (PR) for their children by registering as father at the time the child's birth is registered. This applies to babies born on or after November 1, but not to those born at an earlier date.

What is PR?

Parental responsibility is a legal term which means, 'all the rights, duties, powers, responsibilities and authority which by law a parent of a child has in relation to the child and the child's property'. The scope of these duties and rights is not laid out in law, but relates, for example, to the duty to bring up and care for the child, to discipline the child, to be responsible for the child's property, to make decisions on matters of the child's name, education, medical treatment, religion, issue of a passport, to consent to the child's adoption, consent for a child to leave the country, consent to marriage when the child is aged 16 or 17 and to decide where the child should live and what contact the child should have with other people. It also allows a parent to name a person in their will to be the child's guardian in the event of their death during the child's minority.

Who has PR?

A mother of a child automatically has PR. The father of the child automatically has PR if he was married to the child's mother at the time of the child's birth. A father who lacks PR may obtain it by agreement of all those who have PR. The agreement must be approved by the court. A step-parent may acquire PR by a similar process. If a person with PR does not agree to grant the unmarried father or step-parent PR, then an application to the court can be made for a Parental Responsibility Order. The court can over-rule the views of the person(s) with PR.

People who adopt a child gain PR. Those who obtain a residence order for a child gain PR, if they did not already have it, for the duration of the order. It is possible for a number of people to have PR at the same time, even though not all of them may be caring for the child.

Is it possible to lose PR?

Parents who have PR retain it until the child is 18, unless the child is adopted, or 'freed' for adoption in circumstances where the child is in care. A father, but not a mother, can also lose PR for a child by behaving in such a way that it is no longer appropriate for the father to hold PR for the child. This is rare and may occur for example where a father has caused serious injury to the child and may be considered to have forfeited his PR.

Can PR be restricted?

Where a care order or an emergency protection order is in force, the Crown shares PR and may restrict the parents' use of their PR. The Crown can then dictate where the child should live, who should have contact with the child and can make decisions to protect the child from harm. Where a residence order is in force, the parent or person in whose favour the order is made will be able to prevent the other parent removing the child from his or her care without a further court order. Where there is a dispute about the exercise of PR, the Children Ordinance 2014 provides legal remedies.

Can PR be delegated?

People with PR for a child cannot surrender or transfer it. While remaining legally liable, people with PR can arrange for someone else to meet some or all of the responsibility for the child. The other person may then do whatever is reasonable in all the circumstances to safeguard the child and promote his or her welfare. This does not require a court order.

Sport facility appraisal planned

A DETAILED appraisal of an indoor facility catering for a wide range of sports should be performed alongside some smaller scale initiatives, it was noted in Executive Council this week.

This appraisal will involve some wider public consultation, said MLA Michael Poole.

MLAs agreed that investment in facilities was required, and wished to see detailed proposals prior to making a final decision. MLA Poole said: "It was emphasised that it is both hoped and intended that this will very much be a community project and that some private support may be forthcoming both in terms of sponsorship and also in-kind support."

Originally MLAs had allocated £500k for the development of a new football pitch but as, "discussions have developed over recent months," it had become apparent that a broader approach could be preferable, "but it would come at considerably more cost, for example £2.5m," said Mr Poole.

Argos big boost for sport

THREE sports clubs benefitted from the generosity of local business Argos Ltd with a donation of £25,000 via the Overseas Games Association (FIOGA).

Company Director Ian Thomson said he was pleased to make the contribution to the clubs, noting that they had in fact supported the Archery Association for several years.

"We now look forward to seeing some success from the clubs," he said at a presentation at the Argos building on Friday.

FIOGA Chairman Mike Summers thanked Mr Thomson, saying it was the kind of donation that made a huge difference to what the clubs were able to prepare for.

Dek Hockey representative Martyn Barlow referred to the success the team had enjoyed in Punta Arenas in June when they won a competition and said that with the increased interest and enthusiasm young players were now demonstrating they would like to use some of the donation to take some younger players to South America next year.

Players currently train on inline skates but would be able to make the transition to ice overseas.

Thanking Mr Thomson and

Overseas Games Association Chairman Mike Summers receives a cheque from Argos Ltd Directors Ian Thomson and Sheila Stewart

Argos on behalf of the Archery Club Justin McPhee said they had never anticipated such generous donations as they had received in the four years since they formed.

He said the Archery Club was going to focus on outdoor facilities and making them more usable in a wider range of weathers.

Andy Brownlee said the funds would assist the Cricket Association in bringing coaches down to the Islands which was the only way to really encourage and improve youngsters to take their sport to the next level.

He said there would also be an opportunity to involve the Infant/Junior School and Community School as well as improving senior players both male and female.

He said he looked forward to subsistence from private companies and the FIG to provide an outdoor facility to further the sport.

Give us two minutes...

Jade Callaway

1. What is your most prized possession? As I was presented it earlier this year, probably my Operational Service Medal for going to Afghanistan. I think it's very special that we are honoured in the same way as the military for our services on Op Herrick.

2. What is your most embarrassing moment? I can vividly recall an embarrassing moment in radio from my first week of shows live on air. I was running a competition and was answering the phones while the song was playing without realising I had left my microphone 'live' the whole time. My colleagues had to burst in to tell me, all of which could be heard over the wonderful 'Abracadabra' by Steve Miller Band.

3. There's a "Falklands" has got talent" competition, how would you audition? I can rap a word perfect rendition of Sir Mix-A-Lot's Baby Got Back without having the words on screen so it would probably have to be that.

4. What in your everyday life drives you crazy? Automatic sensors in Bathrooms. It really annoys me when technology tries to do everything for you including flushing the toilet on your behalf and washing your hands. The tap never stays on long enough to get the soap off, if you can get it to turn on at all, that is.

5. What is your nickname and why? At university my housemates nicknamed me 'Stumpy' because I have very little toes. They don't touch the ground when I'm stood normally, only when I push them down at full stretch.

6. What song makes you feel happy (or sad) when you hear it? I adore the song 'Walk in the Sun' by McFly who are my guilty pleasure and Whitney Houston's 'I Wanna Dance With Somebody' is my instant happiness song.

7. What is the one, single food that you would never give up? Hellman's mayonnaise.

Jade Callaway has taken over from Chris Keen on the BFBS Breakfast Show in the Falklands. She arrived at the beginning of October, and was based with BFBS in Cyprus for the three years before here. Blistering pace at the Boca

THE night before the Boca, Goose Green motocross held last Sunday, Mel had created a spike in Carlsberg profits with a birthday barbecue for his grandson Leo, ensuring a not so healthy dose of red eyes and sore heads for the next day's racing.

It was heartening to see many kids racing around the settlement of all ages, on bikes and quads, all with helmets on. Racing commenced around 10.30 on a track that boasted all the terrain the Falklands has to offer: uphill and downhill jumps, fast straights up undulating grass valleys, dusty clay track, off cambered turns and the inevitable bottomless swamp.

The Juniors were the first to sample this outstanding track, and birthday boy, Lachlan Crowie was a happy dude, thanks to the work carried out on his machine by Adrian Sim: he had worked tirelessly to get Lachlan racing after mechanical failures prevented him from finishing last months race.

Chico Thomas-Hayes debuting his CRF150 Honda, rode a steady and creditable third place. Travis Jaffray put in another fine race, taking second overall but the star of the show was Adam Dickson, posting two fine first place finishes. The results did not give the whole story as Kia Alazia put in a spectacular days racing, mostly out of sight of the crowd, she cart-wheeled, somersaulted and threw her little body every-which way to get her bike across the line. Reagan Newman as always, displayed superb skill on her small wheeled Honda.

Next up the Clubman Class, always popular with the old and bold, the up and coming and the truly ancient who have deeper brow lines than a well worn start straight.

Zoran Zuvic, continues to pick up the pace with a well earned third place finish, as Shaun Kendrick demonstrated his blistering pace with his well fought second place. But right up there was Ryan Perry on his 450KTM winning both races. Yet again, Adrian Sim came to the rescue with a loaned bike, Ryan had stripped his rear sprocket bare after the first race, and would not have completed the days racing without Adrian's machine.

The Experts lined the start straight next, their blazing speed, guaranteed to thrill the crowd. They did not disappoint, with Robert Ferguson and Sean Moffatt setting the pace, both riders swapping places in the opening laps of the race, but it was the consistency and skill of the Moffatt boy who secured two superb wins. James Tyrell, showing consistency pays, took a well-earned second overall, a huge result in his first season of expert racing.

The Beer Leg open to all, was attention-grabbing if only for the old man trying to take the hole-shot off his son Sean, Jimmy mistaking his age for a bingo number, thought he had a chance only to be shown a mountain of water as he followed a rear wheel through a small lake. But it was James Tyrell who took the flag as he netted his old man a well earned case of beer.

The next round is at Johnsons Harbour on November 29.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

THE weather continues to be rather cool, bordering on the very cold and unpleasant on many days; even in the tunnels and greenhouses it has hardly been necessary to remove our coats. However, it certainly feels better working inside. The breeze, or even wind, howling off the harbour has really been quite unexpectedly icy coming from that quarter.

It has been a good time to pot into their final containers the many tomato plants we have grown (again). With the soil cool even under cover, it seems best to just grow them on in eight inch plant pots. With a small plastic bottle neck or even a tiny plant pot pressed in to the soil watering and feeding is much easier too.

Beetroot seeds are a really corky cluster containing a few seeds inside each; and thinning, unless you use pelleted seed, is always required. Ours have now been thinned as have the first wave of carrots grown in the tunnel. Sadly the cock chaffer beetle has laid some of its offspring in amongst them again this year; hopefully I've got them all out. Those very ugly and ungainly beetles can show quite a turn of speed at times, at others they pretend to be dead. Either way, it's their grubs, those horrible, small fat white weevils with the brown heads, that are very destructive amongst any plant roots.

The brassicas are just starting to be hardened off. On the first few days I frequently had to dash out and put them under cover as the snow or hail stones hit. But, in another week or so I should be able to leave them out overnight. There are quite a few other plants presently under cover still but requiring the same treatment once they are hardy enough to go outside. More space will then be available to put the tomato plants into their final places.

This year we seem to have a bit of a competition going. Bill and the three granddaughters in (part-time) residence have taken over a greenhouse each, leaving me with a greenhouse and the two tunnels. I think it's wonderful that they are taking such an interest and I'm all for encouraging it. So far each one has their own tomato plants in pots and hanging baskets full of strawberries, but it is not just about food stuffs; trays full of flower seeds have now been added as well. Weather permitting we should have some colour this year.

And speaking of colour, primulas whether polyanthus, primroses or drumsticks, some of them pale, others in bright colours, all light up the garden like little jewels, even those battling their way through the weeds to show themselves.

They are really very worthwhile plants, at each year's end I fear that bugs might polish them off during their dormant season but each year (so far) they just grow bigger and stronger.

The species tulips are displaying their goods at the moment while, on the sidelines the much bigger and brighter tulips are waiting to come into their own. The daffodils are carrying the show with more bright colours until then.

Although the snowdrops gave a very good showing in the very late winter and early, early spring the eranthis (winter aconite) which would normally appear at the same time, only managed to show its leaves this year. I guess it is not so easily fooled and is still waiting for spring to happen?

The erythroniums (trout lily or dog's tooth) are flowering nicely from what has become quite a sizeable clump. And the fritillaria imperialis (crown fritillary) is about to flower again, this time the bright scarlet one will be joined by the yellow one for the first time, wonderful stuff.

I normally put fresh (this year's) parsnip seed into wallpaper paste to pre-germinate for a week or so before putting it into a plastic bag and snipping a corner off the bottom of it. This enables me to sow them into the row thinly and without danger of them flying away.

However, this year, the garden centre has brought in bottles of rooting gel again. They had it here some years ago and I found it ideal for this little job.

This time though, I have popped it into a squeeze bottle instead of a plastic bag and it will, I hope, be even easier to sow from the neck of the bottle, here's hoping anyway.

This is, finally, a good time to cut down any eucalyptus trees that have grown leggy and bare, they will grow again from the bottom and become a shrub or multi-stemmed tree making them far more stable. It's also a great time to trim the eucalyptus hedges, if only we had wet-weather gear.

The usual round of the more tender seeds such as peppers, pumpkins, courgettes and such are now sown and sitting in the porch to germinate, I don't think they would do much, elsewhere.

Hopefully the weather will allow me to plant the potatoes outside soon.

Time is really going on and there seems too much to do all at once, fortunately family and friends know that if they want my undivided attention (such as it is) it pays not to visit on a nice day, when we get one.

First Person on Scene passes for five Falklands fire fighters

FIVE members of the Falkland Islands Fire and Rescue Service passed a five day First Person on Scene Course on Monday.

Delivered by Bristow Group search and rescue paramedic instructors Carlton Real and Szymon Grzegorzek, the five fire fighters learned how to carry out basic and advance life support assistance and also acquired experience in using the Automatic External Defibrillator recently installed at Stanley Airport.

There were theoretical as well as practical exams and everyone passed confirmed fire fighter and participant Ian France. The qualification is valid for three years.

The successful five were Duane Stewart, Gabi Ceballos, Ian France, Mike Brownlee, and Josh Blakeley.

Marine spatial planning:

There's more sea traffic than you think

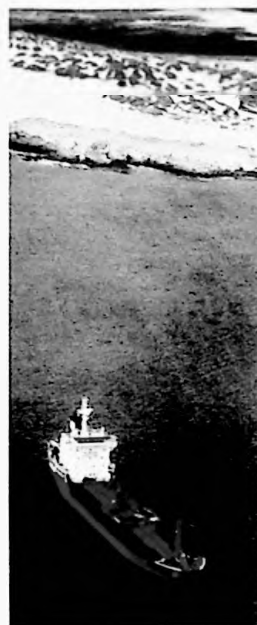

By Dr Amélie Augé, spatial ecologist at the South Atlantic Environmental Research Institute (SAERI), lead researcher and manager of the two-year Darwin Plus-funded project 'Marine Spatial Planning for the Falkland Islands'.

AROUND 90 per cent of trade worldwide is carried by ships across the oceans. Shipping is a crucial part of the economy of the modern world we live in. The Falklands are no exception and most goods are transported by ships. So you know that there are ships visiting the Islands to deliver food, materials, petrol, kero, tourists etc and to export Falklands' products to the world. But, with the remoteness of the Islands, shipping traffic passing by should be minimal, right? Obviously it is not the English Channel here. Yet, with an estimated 50,000 large ships going around the globe at any given time (with this number increasing at great rates), what do we know about what's going on around the Falklands, if ships pass by, how many, what kind and where?

Shipping data is of upmost importance for Marine Spatial Planning (MSP) because ship traffic is a major source of safety risks from collision or grounding and also of environmental risks (oil spills). In the previous Penguin News, the MSP team introduced what MSP is and the type of information we are collecting to provide scientific tools and advice to manage the marine environment in the long-term. Surprisingly, prior to the start of the MSP project, there was no long term recording of data on shipping activities. Sure has been running a system to monitor shipping traffic since 2013, but solely to display real-time ship locations online for ship-spotters; the data were deleted. This system is called AIS (or Automated Identification System). Ships are equipped with it and transmit information via radio signals picked up by land. Sure has three such stations across the Falklands. The information given includes the ship identity, the time and its GPS location. Working with Mark Street at Sure, the data has now been extracted and saved at SAERI every month. The MSP project has one year of hourly shipping locations to analyse; and what a mine of information that is.

Ship locations are used to map their paths across Falklands' waters. Over 1,100 different ships and boats entered these waters and a significant shipping route west of the Islands was uncovered. Most ships were on route to somewhere else and included oil tankers, container ships, bulk carriers, reefers and cruise ships. The largest ship that travelled through the Falklands' waters in the last year was the crude oil tanker

The oil product tanker Jason (105m long)

Apolytares 335m long (more than three times the length of a rugby field) that passed 50km east off Beauchêne Island. Another of a similar size passed within 30km of the Jason Islands. In total, 75 different oil tankers were recorded but only four actually delivered to the Falklands or refuelled the Falklands' fishing boats.

Over that year, 220 different cargo ships, including reefers working with the fishing boats at sea, were also recorded. The largest cargo ships that travelled were bulk carriers of 300m in length and travelled as close as 10km from the Jason Islands and 8km from Beauchêne. The Scout a 93m cargo ship that delivers goods to the Islands from South America was recorded several times, travelling within two km of the Jason Islands. Boats also regularly sail within one to two km of Volunteer Point.

The shipping data and analyses now provides some scientific tools to identify areas of potential need for monitoring or management. The area of the Jason Islands is particularly sensitive because there is a significant amount of traffic in the western shipping route. Ships may take short cuts through or close to the Islands.

Further analyses will be conducted and these shipping data can be combined with data on other activities or areas of value to provide FIG with an overview of potential issues, and help make strategic, informed decisions owing that activities will increase in the marine environment in the future. These are the types of benefits Marine Spatial Planning can provide.

For more information, questions or interest in being involved in MSP in the Falkland Islands, Dr Augé can be contacted at SAERI by phone 27374 or email AAuge@env.institute.ac.uk.

Trafalgar anniversary celebrated with Museum exhibition and Naval-style dinner

ALMOST a hundred guests took part in a commemoration of the 210th anniversary of Battle of Trafalgar on Saturday in an event which began in the Historic Dockyard Museum and culminated in a four course dinner at Malvina House Hotel.

Hosted by the Museum, guests were treated to the first viewing of a wide range of exhibits relating to Trafalgar and Admiral Lord Nelson who is believed to have joined the Royal Navy as a result of the 1770 dispute over Port Egmont in the Falkland Islands.

Museum Trustee Chairman Tim Blake rang the old Dockyard Bell as a fitting tribute to the exhibition and particularly thanked Mr P C Laskaridis and the Aikaterini Laskaridis Foundation for supporting the event and for their exceptional generosity in loaning Nelson and Trafalgar artefacts to the Museum.

These include a magnificent canvas depicting the battle, items from the Trafalgar era, accounts from crew on the ships including one from a 12 year old boy, and incredibly a lock of Lord Nelson's hair.

His Excellency the Governor officially opened the exhibition which will be open to the public this week and should not be missed.

After being suitably fortified with

'grog' a warming concoction made with Pusser's Navy Rum generously donated by the company as the main ingredient, the group made their way to Malvina House Hotel.

Chef Matt Clarke's team had created a feast which included 'All Hands on Deck' in the form of a seafood starter of smoked salmon, Toothfish pate and local Snow crab which set a high standard for the entire evening. 'The Whole Nine Yards' (medallions of prime beef fillet) was preceded by beef roasts and vegetables being paraded through the restaurant on a stretcher-like construction carefully carried by Matt and Carlos Fajardo under the careful direction of Maitre d'hotel Rosie George.

It was then back to the Navy theme as a Boozy Rum Parfait was served while an armada of chocolate galleons loaded to the gunnels with hand-made (yes you've guessed it) rum truffles sailed into view. Complete with sparklers these were an inventive addition to the tables, although the ability to consume more food was waning on some decks.

Following the Loyal Toast, Commander Bill Dawson gave an after-dinner speech that was amusing and locally relevant as well as offering a fascinating insight into the character of Lord Nelson.

Gail Johnson and Peter Young join in with the sea shanties

His Excellency the Governor Colin Robert, Terry and Joan Spruce, Robert Rowlands and Museum manager Leona Roberts

MLA Mike Summers stepped up to ensure this was a fast paced and at times highly entertaining part of the evening with artworks and out-ings bringing a flurry of bids from the floor £1,700 was raised at the auction with a final total from the evening to be calculated at a later date.

Picking up the pace even more John Maskell-Bott rallied a very tuneful choir of serving and former members of the Royal Navy to lead the party through some sea shanties, including Drunken Sailor which quickly inspired lively audience participation.

The evening was rounded off with a chance to burn off some of the earlier excesses on the dance

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.

Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.

Marine Band: 156.800 - Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFIP may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex +1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland.

Self-catering at Port Edgar West Falklands

Contact Tex on 42010/53010 or email mrmg@horizon.co.fk for bookings or more information

Dear Guest
We apologise that this warm, clean cottage does not have curtains that match the bedding and also no complimentary bottle of wine, forced smile or any other false gimmick; we can only offer friendly banter and genuine welcoming hospitality.

As such, at present, it has only been rated two stars but there are plenty more to be had by looking skywards after spending the daylight hours admiring one of the best views in the world across a natural harbour. One that was chosen in WWII to hide the royal family should Britain be invaded.

The cottage has 24 hour power, TV, DVD, fridge and freezer. Outside there is a play area for children with swings and slide and a 75 metre zip wire. Fishing is metres away, and to the penguins, dolphins, seals and whales just four kilometres; stunning cliffs extend for a further 19 kilometres along a rotovated and sign posted track.

Price is £20 per adult per night or £50 per night to hire the cottage, so you get to choose the tariff to suit the size of your group with discounts for longer stays.

We offer an honesty store, fuel, vegetables, meat, eggs and fresh baked bread.
We look forward to seeing you
Tex and the gang x

Sun shines on Stanley running club double header

STANLEY Running Club's monthly points race this month was a double header, with both a 5 and 10km being offered, and on a new course also.

The race started and finished at Stanley Airport. The weather was almost too good for running. Biggest issues comprised the need to cover up from the sun, and the dust thrown up by other road users.

Eleven runners took part, five in the 10km and six in the 5km.

It was nice to welcome four runners from the forces based at Mt Kent and two families, the McKee family and the Ellis family who between them supplied nine of the runners taking part.

The 10km course took in the Bypass road, the Canache, Whale Cove, Gypsy Cove and back to the airport. For the 5km course it was out to the main entrance to Mega bid and back to the airport.

The first 10km runner was Dominic Smith of the First Field Squadron in an excellent time of 40.55.

He was followed home by Matt Dawson in 45.14, and Karl Hindle in 47.55.

First lady in was Stanley's Sally Ellis in a very respectable 53.15 followed by Katherine Hartley who completed the course in 54.54.

The first 5km runner was our rising star on the junior running front Hamish McKee who led the rest of the field home in a time of 23.38.

In second was sister Flora McKee in 27.49. Then came Aunt

1st (10k) Dominic Smith; 1st (5k) Hamish McKee; 2nd (5k) Flora McKee; Below: Start of 10k race

Ros Cheek in 27.55, followed in by brother-in-law Richard McKee in 28.03 and Lisa Watson (29.38) our very own Penguin News Editor who had a break from the running machine in the gym, for a club run.

Thanks goes to our helpers on the day Roddy Cordeiro, Ros Cheek (dual role) Peter and Fran Biggs, Paul Ellis and Rex Eagle.

Currently leading the Club points after two races:

Senior Men: Richard Short 5

Senior Women: Sally Ellis 5
Junior Boy: Hamish McKee 5
Junior Girl: Flora McKee 2

The next event is the Man V Horse Race on Sunday November 1. See 'Falklands Running' page on Facebook for more details

THE Sullivan Shipping Services competition was played on Sunday at Stanley Golf Club.

Wayne Clement produced an excellent round of golf to win the competition with a score of 38 points. Wayne's round included birdies on the 2nd and 6th in a very good outward nine holes.

Ian Stewart took the second prize on 36 points, with Kevin Clapp taking third and a welcome return to competition saw Sarah Bowles take fourth spot.

The best nine hole scores went to Gordon Lennie and Gary Clement, with Sarah again in the prizes for nearest the pin on the 4th and Martyn Gilson-Clarke winning the longest drive on the 18th.

Amanda Forster was on hand to present the prizes, and our thanks go to Sullivan Shipping Services Limited for their continued support to the club.

This Sunday is the November Medal and the draw for the Club Match play will be made after presentation of the prizes on the day.
