TEACHING THE TURKS FOOTBALL.

Keen But Excitable.

Puddefoot On His Trials.

How enthusiasm for Association Football is growing all over the world is demonstrated by the keenness of the Turks to become international champions. Below we publish with due acknowledgement an article from the Overseas Daily Mail on the efforts of Sydney Puddefoot, the former West Ham and English international centre-forward, to teach his proteges in Turkey the art of playing the game.

"The humours - and sometimes trials - of teaching the Turks to play Association football as it is understood in Britain are amusingly described by Mr Sydney Puddefoot who has been engaged to train the Galata Serai (Istanbul) Football Club.

"The Turks are tremendously keen,' he told me (The D.M. Special Correspondent). 'Every Friday, which is their rest day, and every Sunday nearly all the year round, matches follow each other in the chief stadium at Istanbul from 9.0 a.m. until 5.0 p.m. In the hottest weather they start at 5.0 p.m. and go on as long as it is light. Spectators bring their food and sit out the whole series.

Huffy Referee.

"But this keenness makes the players too excitable. There are always police and an ambulance on the ground. In the middle of a match, supposing the referee gives a penalty or there is some incident, a team will suddenly refuse to play any more, walk off the ground and go to the dressing room. One has to go and talk them over before they will come out again. One can never guarantee that a match will end. Sometimes the referee will get offended and refuse to continue.

"Some of the nick-names of the players I have had to deal with show the style of play that is liked. There is 'Lion,' and 'Bull' and even one 'Hodja' (teacher) - I don't know why the last gets his name. Play gets very rough indeed at times

"They have some queer rules of their own. Charging is not allowed, and yet there is any amount of deliberate kicking of one-another. The goalkeeper is not permitted to be touched when he has the ball. He may bounce it up and down, and no one may go for him. Nevertheless some goalkeepers are padded at the shoulders and knee-caps.

A Bouquet.

"Matches begin with the presentation of a bouquet and the club flag between the teams, handshakes and the club 'cries' like the American cries. They sometimes end with players and spectators joining in a general melee.

"Sometimes a player will say to me 'Mister, I can't play any more !' or 'Mister, they are calling me an Arab.'

"The cleverness and speed of the Turkish players, however, added to the English-style teaching I am giving them, will, I think, make them into great players. They are certainly three hundred per cent better than when I first saw them on the Continent five years ago.

"Even in the six months since I have been training the Galata Serai Club - once the champion club of Turkey, but when I came, right down, dispirited and divided - I have got it up to the point of losing by one goal only against the present champions in the first league match we have played.

"He's Clever !"

"It is extraordinary how keen they are on English football. They follow all the League matches in the papers and know all the principal players by name.

"Their chief defect is that they won't shoot. They are all out for exhibition. 'He's clever, he's beaten six men !' and that sort of thing. They are extremely fast, but they never take a chance or shoot at a distance. It is still impossible for them to kick a ball the first time. They have to stop it, and then kick.

"It is expected that a Turkish national team will enter for the 'world cup' next year, and I am being asked to coach it. Its first match will be against Egypt.

"But I shall have to teach the forwards not to shout to the opposing goalkeeper, 'You're not going to save this !' and when he doesn't save it, go and shake hands with him !

"When the Turks learn more self-control in the game and know and obey the rules better, there is no doubt that they will form first-rate teams. Association football is the one national sport they are really interested in."

WILL NOT DIE IN HIS SHOES.

During a recent tour in Yorkshire the Prince of Wales shook hands with a man whose shoes are never laced.

"It is his habit to walk about like that," whispered an official.

"What is the reason ?" asked the Prince. This is the story the man told him.

"Five years ago the doctor told me I should die in my shoes. I said 'I shall see I don't,' and I sat down and unlaced them in the surgery. I have walked about with them unlaced ever since, so that I can kick them off with my dying kick."

The man is Mr J.C. Lister of Wickersley, Rotherham, a prominent builder and social worker. He said that the Prince was very amused with his story.

"He said it was a jolly good idea. I spend most of my time motoring, and when I go through the windscreen I am determined the doctor shall not have the last word. I trust my shoes will be found in the car, for I hope to kick them off at the last moment."

MURDER EVERY THREE HOURS.

The Daily Mirror Santiago (Chile) correspondent states in a recent number that Chilians have been shocked to discover that their country holds the world's record for murders.

During 1932 there were 2,913 murders in a population of roughly 4,500,000, which works out roughly at one murder every three hours.

In Great Britain there were only 38 murders for every 1,000 of the population.
